In view of the great inducements to immigration which our unoccupied territory, our undeveloped resources, our large rewards of labor, and our free institutions must present to the crowded populations of China and Japan; and in view of the steadily increasing commerce between these empires and our port of San Francisco, and the increasing facilities for immigration thus afforded, it is apparent that the movement of these peoples toward our country is one not to be arrested. We can not exclude them without contradicting the vital principles of our own nation, nor without kicking at the laws of political economy and the manifest purpose of God. It can not be denied, however, that such an inroad of heathenism involves great peril for us. On the other hand, as little can it be denied that it affords a grand opportunity to benefit them; and the true and only escape for us from the peril is in the prompt and vigorous use of the great opportunity. It is not the first time—it may not be the last time—that God has linked our own national safety with our care for men oppressed, outcast, and darkened; and it is one of the best omens for us, as a people, that God is doing just that, setting great tasks before us, the very arduousness and burden of which may be taken as a measure of the growth and greatness he means to bestow.

The method which this Association has adopted of reaching the Chinese is, to some extent, peculiar, and seems to us both right and wise. It provides no central mission.

It organizes no distinctively Chinese Church. It seeks to bring its work into the closest possible relationship to the local churches; invites and calls out their coöperation; places the schools, and the Chinese gathered in them, as far as possible, under their watch and care; and thus prepares the way to leave the work in their hands as soon as it becomes clear that it can be, and will be, carried on by them with vigor and success. It is a method which combines the utmost economy with the widest efficiency; which makes it possible to have a Chinese mission in every place where a church can be found to foster it, or where a Christian woman can be sent to carry it on. It is a method to which God has graciously borne witness in results so large and so speedy as to rebuke by them our unbelief. Before we called He answered, and while we were yet speaking He heard.

We earnestly hope that no backward step in this work will be allowed; but that rather it may be enlarged and intensified till it answers fully to the call of God, as heard in this rush of heathen to our Christian shore. All which is respectfully submitted.

Report of the Committee on Indians was read by Rev. S. F. Porter. Addresses were made by Hon. E. P. Smith, United States Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and General C. H. Howard. Rev. George Whipple, Corresponding Secretary, exhibited some beautiful specimens of weaving by Indian women. The report was adopted.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE INDIANS.

The Committee to whom was assigned the Report on the Indians find much encouragement in the interesting facts reported of their advancement in Christian culture and the arts of civilized life. These facts indicate unmistakably the duty of this Association to go forward in its labors among them. The adverse elements are many and strong; powerful barriers are thrown in the way of their redemption, by designing men. It is still a question whether the Indian tribes can be delivered from border ruffians, whisky, and violence, and brought thoroughly under the influence of Christian agents and Christian missionaries, and thus be saved from final extinction. The rich harvests gathered by Eliot, David Brainerd, Count Zinzendorf, and others, demonstrate that the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation for the red men, as for the rest of mankind, just so far as it can be made to reach them. The Committee feel that a great responsibility rests upon the patriotic men and Christian communities of this country at this hour, with regard to the remaining aboriginal inhabitants of America.

The humane feeling of the Government and the honor of our country must be vindicated; and the power of Christ to lift up the lowest and to enlighten the darkest must be established, in the eyes of all men, by the steadfast faith and undying zeal in which this work is carried on among them.

Rev. W. B. Brown read an invitation from the Trustees of the Newark Industrial Exhibition, now open, which, on motion of Secretary Strieby, was accepted with thanks. The audience then united in singing the third stanza of the missionary hymn, "Shall we whose souls are lighted?"

The Report of the Committee on Educational Work in the South was read by Rev. D. K. Bartlett, of Rochester, N. Y., and was most eloquently and forcibly supported by Rev. H. W. Beecher. The Report was accepted and adopted.

The Committee to whom was referred the paper entitled a "Detailed Survey of the Field South," desire to submit the following. The numerous and varied facts presented, setting forth the contrast in the condition of the South at the time the American Missionary Association began to work, with what already has been achieved, are such as to warrant the greatest encouragement for the future. They can not refrain from expressing the opinion that those who have blessed the American Missionary Association by their prayers, and supported it with contributions from their purses, have reason to congratulate themselves on both the devotion of spirit and breadth of grasp which have characterized those to whom has been intrusted the task of systematizing and directing the means of elevating into intelligent and Christian citizenship the colored people of the South. We do not believe that the records of philanthropic effort will show anywhere so vast an enterprise within so brief a period, put under so efficient and economic organization. No one except such as have followed with closeness the course of the American Missionary Association can appreciate the well-nigh insurmountable difficulties which had to be encountered. But thanks to the Giver of all good, who never allows an honest effort to go unrewarded, the way is now brightening, and the long-desired progress and consummation are assured facts.

This seems to be specially evident in the decline of that once apparently hopeless bitterness, intensified in the Southern whites by the rebellion, which seemed to threaten that though the slave had been given his freedom, every thing should be done to keep him from rising above his former degradation. At the close of the war, he surely would have been deemed a rash prophet, who should have declared that within the present generation, any State south of Mason and Dixon's line would, in its official action, make appropriation for the support of institutions in which the colored race and former slaves would be instructed in knowledge. Yet such is the welcome fact, and we can not doubt that the example of Virginia and Georgia will erelong be followed by the whole South.

We are satisfied, too, that the policy which the American Missionary Association is now pursuing will prove itself the true solvent of that antagonism of race which, in its possible results of conflict, so many of us have looked forward to with alarm and consternation. This is no idle assertion, for already we see blacks and whites, sitting side by side in the same school and receiving instruction from the same teachers. Such facts, also, as that the Virginia county school superintendents have come to accept candidates as teachers, without question, on the strength of a diploma from Hampton, can not but stand connected with the most telling consequences.

It is not possible for your Committee to give even a brief summary of the many thrilling and most interesting facts which the Report contains. Much has been done, yet much, even more, remains undone. To arrest, or even slacken, our hands in the great work of creating an intelligent, loyal, and Christian population among the freedmen would be fatal. As yet, we have hardly more than inserted a few wedges under the weight of ignorance and vice lying upon our emancipated brethren, and have by no means raised it to such a height that it can be left to fall off of itself. To stop now would hardly fail to let the weight slide back to its original position.

We hold that the success of the American Missionary Association, so far, has conclusively demonstrated the black man to be capable of such mental and moral growth as will make him a most valuable member of the Republic, and that our true policy, instead of trying to expatriate him to the land from which he was so wickedly brought, is to train him in those material industries and mental acquisitions by which he can dwell amongst us in peace and prosperity.

Your Committee can not close their report without calling, in the most imperative manner, upon all who believe the founders of this republic to have laid its basis in the principles of true nationality, and especially upon such as claim a living faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, whose teaching placed helpfulness to the poor, the outcast, and degraded as a cardinal element of religion, to give to the American Missionary Association a generous sympathy and broad-hearted coöperation.

A recess was taken till two o'clock.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON—TWO O'CLOCK.—The Association assembled and united in celebrating the Communion of the Lord's Supper, Rev. E. P. Terhune, D.D., and Rev. W. T. Findley, D.D., officiating at the table.

After Communion, business was again taken up. The President in the chair, assisted by Rev. Dr. Adams.

The report of a special committee was read by its chairman, Samuel Holmes, Esq., of New-York, and was referred to the Committee on Finance.

The undersigned Committee, appointed by the Executive Committee of the A. M. A. found their appointment made under the following correspondence presented at the meeting of said Executive Committee, held December 2d, 1872.

"To the Executive Committee of the A. M. A.

"The action of the late Annual Meeting calls special attention to the financial administration of the Association. According to our Constitution, the Annual Meeting is the ultimate authority: the Executive Committee wields the administrative power, responsible to the Association and the public: the Secretaries are the agents of the Executive Committee, and responsible to it.

"We beg, therefore, to be permitted to present to you officially the report of the Finance Committee, adopted at the recent Annual Meeting, and to ask that you will appoint a committee of your number, who shall examine the papers, documents, and books in our hands, together with such oral information as we can give, and that on the basis of the knowledge thus obtained, the committee report to you a complete business exhibit of the affairs of the Association, with special reference to the points made by the Annual Meeting.

"We ask that particular attention be given to the percentage of running expenses in comparison with business firms and with other benevolent societies. We request that the report of this sub-committee be laid before you, to be used for your own satisfaction, and for record in your own proceedings, or for publication, at your own discretion. Signed, GEORGE WHIPPLE, M. E. STRIEBY, } Secretaries.

"You were named as this committee."

In consenting thus to act, the Committee beg to say that, while they would have preferred that others outside of the Executive Committee should have been appointed, as urged by them, they yielded to the seeming necessity, on account of the difficulty of finding those who are willing so to act, and have endeavored to lose sight entirely of any official connection with the Association, at the same time using what knowledge and acquaintance they may have had through such connection, to further the desired investigation.

They are happy in saying that they have been met with the most cordial frankness on the part of the officers of the Association, who have given them all desired information, and every facility in their power.

The Committee were soon overwhelmed with the extent of the work which they had undertaken, and which has necessarily called for much labor on the part of the officers in answering summarily the inquiries involved.

It was found that the method of keeping accounts was the same as pursued in the earlier history of the Association, when the work was small and with few details; but with the enlarged operations of the present time, your Committee can not too strongly recommend an entire change in method and manner commensurate with the magnitude and importance of the work of the Association and the trusts committed to it. At the same time, they wish to bear witness to the fidelity of those to whom this part of the official duty has been intrusted.

So far as we know, not a dollar has been lost to the Association, and our investigations have led us the more to appreciate the labor, as well as the wisdom and economy of the management.

The Committee, at the outset, considered the suggestions of the Committee on the Financial Report adopted last year. To this end they have used their best endeavors, to see if there was any chance for retrenchment in administration.

Remembering the traditions of the past history of the Association, the struggles and self-denying labors of its founders, we have failed to discover any essential departure from those early and consistent principles. True, the Association has large expenses, but its work is many times enlarged, and in much greater proportion relatively than its expenses, while the original sphere of labor in foreign lands has been overshadowed by the home work which God in his providence opened as it were in a day, and which it of all others was so peculiarly fitted for, and willing to enter upon.

Commencing in the Southern field with the most simple rudimentary instruction, and among a people to whom every thing educational had been systematically denied, we find them leading along this race up to extended and general public school instruction, flourishing churches, and large institutions with full college classes.

Much of the work of the officers of the Association is necessarily not specific but general, in the efforts for the race in all its various wants. Their duties are peculiar to this Association, and can not be classed with those of any other society, embracing in their own particular way the work of the Home and Foreign Missionary societies, church building, Sunday-school and public school instruction, and in short the cause of education from its earliest forms to the college and theological seminary, and all combined among a people hardly able to walk alone, and who must be carefully nursed and watched over by frequent visitations, and much kind and thoughtful attention. So that it is impossible for us to make comparisons in labor, RESULTS, or COST with those of any other one society, this embracing the duties and responsibilities of all the others to a greater or less extent.

Should a comparison be attempted, it must be borne in mind that the A. M. A. has no "Permanent Fund" with which to pay its officers, and no auxiliaries to share the expenses of their District Secretaries wherever located; but the entire cost of administration, including collecting agencies, is brought into the expense account.

While we are glad to record the percentage of expenses to receipts as a little less than last year, we are not able to see how any great reduction can be made, consistent with a wise economy and prudent management. "There is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty."

We find the present indebtedness of the Association, as per Treasurer's Report, $55,481.36, being a reduction of $4439.32 from last year.

During the last year, the Society has purchased, for its New-York office, the building known as 56 Reade street, at a cost of $42,000, on which they have paid $12,416.98, leaving an indebtedness of $30,000, which will be eventually paid for from the endowment funds. This lessens very considerably their rent, and at the same time gives increased accommodations.

There have been from time to time sundry donations of land (unimproved) amounting, on a moderate valuation, after deducting payments for taxes, to $35,000. Some of these lands can not be sold on account of certain restrictions, but the Committee would recommend the sale of all that can be, at an early day, and that the proceeds be applied toward the extinguishment of the debt.

In addition to this, the Association has property in lands and buildings, at what may be called a fair valuation, and for which it has clear and good titles, to the amount of $408,000, and on which there are encumbrances to the amount of $3100. All the buildings are kept insured and are exempt from taxation, as are also lands used for educational purposes.

The endowment funds from the Avery, Le Moyne, and other estates, and donations made specifically, amount to $123,815, as per schedule herewith, which will also show the manner of investment.

In summing up, we find that the balance against the Association on general account is $55,481.26; that it has property not required in its work and which has been given for its uses, remaining unsold, worth $35,000; that it has real estate in the South, owned and held by deed and essential to its Southern work, which at a fair valuation is worth $408,000, on which there is due to outside parties $3100, and that there has been invested in securing this large capital for future work but $43,893.40 of the endowment funds; that this is so invested that the Association receives great advantages to its work above the actual saving of more money in current expenses yearly than the interest required for the money invested. We find that the balance of the endowment fund, amounting to $79,921.60, is securely invested in bonds and mortgages, the building, 56 Reade street, and other securities, all of which is drawing interest, and which accrues to the objects named by the donors, except $13,152.56 which is in the treasury of the Association uninvested.

Besides this, it must be remembered that the Association has surrendered [and helped to increase in value] to sundry institutions under its fostering care, property worth from $150,000 to $200,000.

The Committee are glad to note a further indication of the blessing of God upon the work of the Association, in that nearly one fourth of its receipts the past year have been from the South, in tuition, collections, and public school funds, so that, while cut off from the large source of revenue from the U. S. Government, they can now report as received from the South, in the sources indicated, $62,714.99.

In view of all these facts, the Committee can but cordially commend the Association to your continued confidence and earnest support.

Never was there more need of means for its treasury than now, that it may "lengthen its cords and strengthen its stakes."

As complete success is given to it in one locality and the institutions planted there are able to stand alone, the Association would then go forth to "fresh fields and pastures new," and where the cry is continually heard, "Come over and help us."

After finding so much to approve and but little to criticise, the Committee would urge this Association to more earnest prayer and increased liberality and effort, feeling assured that He who led the children of Israel with "a pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night," is also signally leading the Association in the blessed privilege and responsibility committed to it, and that, if it is awake and alive to duty, the God of Jacob will be its Refuge.

Respectfully submitted,

SAMUEL HOLMES,
J. B. BEADLE,
J. O. BENNETT.

The report of the Committee on Foreign Missions, with a recommendation to Consolidation, was made by Rev. W. H. Ward, D.D., of New-York, which, after remarks by Dr. Ward, Rev. H. M. Parsons, and Secretary Whipple, was adopted.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN MISSIONS AND CONSOLIDATION.

The first work of the American Missionary Association was foreign. Providence as unmistakably directed its labors in 1846 to the culture of the colored race in Africa and Jamaica as it has of late years directed it to a concentration of effort in behalf of the same race in those portions of our own country from which we were excluded. Among the reasons for gratitude to God connected with the happy settlement of the slavery question, may be mentioned the removal of differences between this and other missionary organizations. If the fathers of the American Missionary Association from conscientious reasons felt compelled to assume the care of some missions abroad, that exigency has now ceased. Meanwhile, a most solemn responsibility rests upon this Association at home, a responsibility peculiarly its own, as it is by far the most influential society engaged in educating millions of men suddenly liberated from physical bondage, but not so suddenly to be liberated from the bondage of ignorance, superstition, and, we might almost say, heathenism. Your Committee deeply feel the importance of emphasizing to the utmost this great work so peculiarly committed to our Association. They therefore heartily indorse the suggestion of the Executive Committee that, as soon as the preliminary steps can be satisfactorily taken, the foreign missions of the Association be transferred to other organizations. This will give to its work that unity which ought to suffer as little as possible from needless distraction of its efforts and resources.

The Sandwich Island Mission will present no difficulty, as the Association's connection with it is little more than nominal. The Siam Mission is rich in a valuable printing establishment, and in a family of missionaries, whose labors in translating the Scriptures deserve our hearty appreciation. But another honored American Society occupies Bangkok, and it seems to us that, if this our mission could be satisfactorily transferred, it will subserve the cause of a unity abroad as well as at home. Our Jamaica Mission is doing a needed work; but the island properly appeals to English Christians, who are not remiss in the labor, and our missions there are surrounded by those of Wesleyan and Baptist societies.

The reasons for withdrawing from the foreign work would apply also to our Mendi Mission on the coast of Africa, were it not so closely connected with the best interests of those for whom we labor at home. The Mendi Mission has not been a very successful one, when compared with the progress of Christian effort in the neighboring territory of Sierra Leone. But it may become such, and it is essential to us, for if we are to educate the right Christian spirit in our schools, colleges, and churches in the South, it will be necessary to develop an enthusiastic missionary spirit within them, which will express itself all the more emphatically in home evangelization, if also directed to the continent of their forefathers. We would, therefore, recommend not merely the retention of the Mendi Mission, but the strengthening of it by sending to it, as speedily as possible, teachers and ordained preachers from among the graduates of our Southern institutions. And we would also suggest the careful study of the problem, what missionary efforts can be devised, to produce, with the assistance of that Spirit which works through human instrumentalities, a better measure of success in that field, so historically dear to this Association.

The report of Church Work at the South was presented [by Rev. R. G. Hutchins, of Columbus, Ohio. Pending its adoption, Rev. R. B. Johns, pastor of a colored Presbyterian church in Philadelphia, and Thomas Ritter, M.D., made some remarks in its support.

Rev. James Powell, who had been with the Jubilee Singers in England, gave some account of the reception of that company by the English people, relating many incidents of thrilling interest. The report was then accepted and adopted.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON CHURCH WORK.

The Committee on Church Work respectfully beg leave to report:

The special exigencies, which, in the earlier years of our work among the freed people, exhausted the pecuniary means and working force of our Association in the relief of physical suffering and the giving of rudimentary instruction, have, in great measure, been met and provided for.

The problem now presented to us is, How shall we embody and render self-perpetuating the results of present, past, and prospective labors? The true solution of this problem seems to be found in the organization, equipment, and training of Christian churches, after the pattern of those in the North, which have conceived, inspired, directed, and supported the enterprises of this Association. In this direction your Committee believe as much has been accomplished during the past year in the South as could reasonably have been expected.

In estimating our progress, we must never forget the immense distance between the civilized, intelligent church we are aiming to build, and the dense ignorance and degraded superstition of our materials. Our reports exhibit a substantial development in all our churches, and several special religious revivals. Two new churches have been organized, two church edifices erected, and three ministers from the North added to our number of laborers. But perhaps the most hopeful feature in connection with our church work is the advancing preparation of so many promising young men for the ministry, in the theological classes of Atlanta, Fisk, Straight, and Tougaloo Universities, Talladega College, and the theological department of Howard University. Many of these young men are preaching the Gospel during their educational course. These are to be the founders and pastors of the colored churches of the future. In this connection, we may remember how much less expensive it is to educate them in our own institutions than to secure ministers from the North, and how much more satisfactory and helpful to the freed people a native ministry is likely to be.

It seems to your Committee that the Association, considering its resources, has done wisely in planting a limited number of churches, giving them suitable sanctuaries and ministers—churches that shall be model organizations in their respective communities, while it has pushed forward those institutions which are preparing an intelligent ministry to multiply such churches.

If, with our revenues, we greatly multiply our churches, we must either furnish many of them with ignorant pastors, who would make them very like the churches of slavery times, or we must cripple our institutions by the diversion of funds for securing ministers from the North.

To supply the present pressing needs of the people, we recommend as economical and effective the employment of Evangelists. The catholicity of our theological institutions, to which students of all denominations are equally welcomed, can not be too highly commended. The importance of sagacity and earnestness in our endeavors to extend an intelligent Christianity among the freed people is enhanced by the fact that, in the providence of God, this work is so largely and naturally devolved upon us.

The Committee on Finance made their report, which, after remarks by Mr. James F. Claflin, was accepted and adopted:

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

Your Committee on Finance beg leave to report:

That they are relieved of much of the labor and responsibility which would otherwise rest upon them, by the fact that a special committee, which has had ample time and ready access to the books and papers of the office in New-York, has made a full and detailed statement of the financial condition of the Association to this Annual Meeting.

This Committee has done that which, in the nature of the case, it is impossible for a committee to do which is limited in time and opportunity, as is always the case where the committee is appointed and the report required at the same Annual Meeting.

Your Committee would, therefore, adopt as part of their report, and recommend for publication and careful consideration, the report of the special committee, presented by Samuel Holmes, Esq., to this meeting. The Committee would further report that they have examined the financial statement of the Treasurer, and find it correct and properly audited.

We believe, with the report of the special committee, that the closest economy in administration should be sought which is consistent with the highest usefulness and permanent success of the Association in its great work. We believe also, with the report, that the question of economy should be settled by a careful, patient, and thorough examination of all the facts, conditions, and circumstances bearing upon the organization and work of the Association, both in its collecting and disbursing fields, and not by a comparison of percentage of the cost of administration with that of other societies, without careful comparison of the basis upon which the percentage is calculated.

Your Committee would further report that the experience of the year and the needs of the field demand that every effort should be made by the friends of the Association to bring up the income of the society to the amount recommended by the last Annual Meeting, and we therefore renew the recommendation, that the churches be asked the coming year for five hundred thousand dollars, and the officers of the Association be requested to repeatedly lay this want before them.

In closing, your Committee would suggest, in view of the difficulties of a careful examination of the affairs of the Association by the committee thereon, appointed at the same meeting, that a committee of three be appointed at this meeting, who shall examine the Treasurer's Report and financial condition of the Association previous to the next Annual Meeting, and report thereon.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

The Committee on Finance was requested to nominate, at the meeting in the evening, a committee of three, as suggested in their report.*

After the doxology and benediction, the Association took a recess till half-past seven o'clock.

THURSDAY EVENING.—The meeting began at half-past seven. The President, accompanied by Rev. H. M. Parsons, in the chair.

The services of the evening were commenced by the congregation singing the hymn, "I love thy kingdom, Lord."

Prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Kirk. Mr. Claflin addressed the audience with reference to the freedmen. He was followed by Hon. E. P. Smith and Rev. H. M. Storrs, D.D.

A resolution was passed, thanking Dr. Taylor for his sermon, with the request that it be furnished for publication with the minutes of the Annual Meeting.†

Rev. C. L. Woodworth, District Secretary for New-England, offered the following, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Association are hereby presented to the First Congregational Church of Newark, for the use of their house of worship for our meetings; to their pastor, for his labor of love in providing for our coming; to the families of the First Congregational Church and the Belleville Avenue Church, for opening their homes to the friends and members of the Association; and to all the good people of Newark who have exercised a generous and genial hospitality to those who have attended on the sessions.

It was voted that the minutes of the meeting be referred to the Recording and Corresponding Secretaries for correction and publication.

After singing and the benediction by the President, Rev. Dr. Kirk, the Association adjourned.

* This nomination was not made. The Committee will be requested by correspondence to make it as soon as practicable.

† It will be published by the author in a volume of sermons.

REPORT

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

THIS TWENTY-SEVENTH ANNIVERSARY of the AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION brings with it an unusual death record. Some of the friends from whom we have been called to separate are among the earliest and most valued.

LEWIS TAPPAN died June 21st. To him, more than to any other man, does the Association owe its existence. He was deeply interested in the anti-slavery missions that preceded it, and that were united in its formation; and he was prominent in the movement which rescued the AMISTAD CAPTIVES from the grasp of slavery, and which served so largely to arouse the nation to the arrogance and potency of the slave-power. His pecuniary benefactions to the Association, though large, were the smallest of his contributions to it. For years he gave his unrequited services as treasurer; and the best efforts of his hand, head, and heart, were devoted to the furtherance of its objects.

Mr. Tappan was an Abolitionist, and his zeal in this cause has identified his name so largely with it that, to some persons, he is known in no other relations. But he was not a man of one idea. Few persons had broader sympathies and activities; he was interested in all reformatory measures, especially those against the social vice and intemperance, as well as slavery; he was the efficient friend of the Tract, Bible, and Missionary Societies; he aided in the education of young men, and in the endowment of colleges; being thoroughly evangelical in his belief and practical in his piety, he was active in revivals of religion and in personal labors for the conversion of souls. His pen was always busy, and his tracts, entitled "Be your own Executor," and "Is it Right to be Rich?" as well as those written at an earlier period against Unitarianism, have not fallen idly to the ground. Mr. Tappan was a man of positive opinions, and fearless in their advocacy, having far more reverence for truth than for men; he was undaunted by opposition—nay, seemed rather to gain fresh courage as the opposition grew stronger; he instinctively championed the weak and the unpopular; with untiring energy and great executive ability he pushed toward his object, outstripping often the caution of his friends, and seeming, occasionally, to his opponents, severe. We judge not in this; but his leading positions have been vindicated in the admissions of some who once most strenuously opposed them, and he was permitted to live to see the realization of some of the most cherished aims of his energetic and zealous life.

Two days after the death of Mr. Tappan, died Rev. D. B. BRADLEY, M.D., in his distant mission home in Bangkok, Siam. In 1849, Dr. Bradley separated from the American Board, and attached himself to the American Missionary Association. By the use of the printing-press he has made the mission almost wholly self-supporting; and, by his labors as a translator, he has added largely to the literary and religious treasures of Siam, by giving to them portions of the sacred Scriptures. He leaves a widow and a son, Rev. C. B. Bradley, to carry forward the labors in which he was engaged.

MRS. FRANCIS, the highly esteemed wife of Rev. C. W. Francis, our Missionary in Atlanta, Ga., died, after a lingering illness. Death overtook her in San Rafael, Cal., whither her husband had taken her, in the faint hope that the climate might benefit her health. During the later years of her missionary life, the shadows of death, gathering around her path, impeded her activities; but her memory will long and affectionately be cherished by the church in Storrs Chapel, in Atlanta. MISS ALMIRA BOWRON, for five years a teacher of colored schools in North-Carolina, was called to her rest, April 29th, in Ridgewood, N. J., where she had gone in impaired health, being taken from her loved work while she was meditating enlarged plans for usefulness. Rev. WILLIAM A. JACKSON died July 22d, in Savannah, Ga., whither he had recently gone as a missionary of the American Missionary Association. He was born a slave, and was held for a time as the property of Jefferson Davis. After receiving his liberty, and a competent English education at the North, he became a successful minister at Berryville, Va., under the auspices of the Free-Will Baptist Missionary Society. A wider field seemed to open to him at Savannah, under the care of the Association; but the Master soon indicated that his work on earth was done.

Thirty Life-Members are reported to have died during the year.

Passing from these mementoes of the dead to the labors of the living, we find, throughout the work of the Association, a prosperity calling for gratitude to the God of missions and of the poor. We see, however, that a concentration, foreshadowed in the past, has become more distinctly advisable—a concentration of our work among the colored people of America and Africa, and among those nearest us and most needing help—the Indians and Chinese in America.

In surveying the principal field of our labors—that among the FREEDMEN—we see two main aspects inviting attention—the evidence of success, and the call for more means.

1. Of the evidences of success, we name:

(1.) The sustained enthusiasm of teachers, preachers, and people. In the earlier years of this work, hundreds of persons were eager to enter it as ministers and teachers. That enthusiasm has in some measure subsided, from our lack of means to send out more than a fraction of those making application; but we believe that the same zeal would again be manifested, if we could give the hope of employment with even the most meagre salaries.

The work, at that time, was new and peculiar; and occasional unfitness in the worker and in the methods of work were discoverable; but careful supervision, under the guidance of an essentially correct plan, has gradually brought forward the trained talent and the successful methods, till every succeeding year shows only more and more gratifying results. No year has been more fruitful in such returns than the past. Thus four of our institutions with COLLEGE charters have now some, and one of them all, of the regular college classes, which, considering the recency of emancipation and the illiteracy of the people, must be admitted to be remarkable. In these classes are the future cultured and conscientious leaders and professional men of this race.

In the NORMAL SCHOOL work, the progress is even more gratifying, owing, in large measure, to the new interest felt in popular education in some of the Southern States. School taxes are laid, and an active coöperation is shown by the State officials and the people in furnishing common schools for the blacks as well as the whites. This gives a pressing call for colored teachers, and renders apparent the wisdom of the Association in early organizing its normal schools, and in the response they now give—though still inadequate—to meet this demand.

The colored people show their continued and steady enthusiasm in the school work, by the efforts they make to spare their children from work to attend school, and by paying the tuition charged.

In estimating the progress of our CHURCH work, we should ever bear in mind the difference between the Freedmen and the populations in the Western States—the latter containing an intelligent body of Christians; the former being an ignorant and impoverished company of ex-slaves. These can aid but little, those much. Yet two new churches have been formed, two church edifices erected, and three educated and able ministers from the North added to the number, and generally a healthy growth in all the churches marks and crowns our past year's efforts. We can not omit the mention, in this connection, of the efforts of the Rev. H. E. Brown, of Talladega College, to supply the spiritual destitutions around that place. The region is populous, but the colored people are destitute of schoolhouses, suitable places of worship, or competent religious teachers. During vacation, Mr. Brown took with him some of his theological students, and a large tent procured in New-York for the purpose. Selecting a favorable location, the tent was pitched, meetings were held, the families visited, and the people, aroused from their old superstitions, were asked to aid in the erection of a permanent building that will serve for day, Sabbath-school, and church purposes. Two such points have been reached, with the most gratifying results. The people were exhorted to a true Christian life, and day after day the men work, making shingles and hewing timber, and night after night all come to meeting in the tent. This movement is in its incipiency, but we hope much from it, in the training of the theological students, in the enlightenment of the people, and in the erection of permanent school and church buildings.

Thus along the whole line of our Southern work are there the evidences of steady activity and sustained enthusiasm among both workers and people.

(2.) Another evidence of success is in the providential helps afforded us.

In no other light than that of a providential help can we regard the raising up of the Jubilee Singers, and their wonderful career, awakening so much popular attention, and securing so much aid in erecting a Hall for Fisk University. Only less marked is the career of the Hampton Singers in the same directions.

Then, too, the grant of nearly one hundred thousand dollars in land-scrip, by the Legislature of Virginia, to the Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute is a cheering evidence that God raises up helpers. The gift of eight thousand dollars to Atlanta University by the Legislature of Georgia (probably because the agricultural scrip of that State had all been appropriated to white institutions) is to be reckoned in the same category of providential benefits.

We add to these, the marked success of Rev. T. K. Fessenden in securing special contributions for the Hampton Institute; of Rev.

C. G. Fairchild in gathering nearly $30,000 to complete the Ladies' Hall in Berea; and of Rev. Dr. Healy in collecting handsome sums of money in Great Britain for our work of Christian education, and especially for the preparation of missionaries for Africa.

One more indication of the hold this work has upon the most gifted of God's people is the array of clergymen and laymen that was attracted to the laying of the corner-stone of the new Hall at Hampton. No ordinary impulse could gather such men as Drs. Hitchcock, Taylor, Budington, Robinson, Bellows, Messrs. Holmes, Ketchum, and others, at so remote a place, and inspire them with such enthusiasm.

We feel that a hand divine is leading us on, and we pray for grace to follow!

2. These evidences of success prepare us to hear the call for more means to carry forward the work.

(1.) The inspiration of success is an impulse to greater zeal. What God doth bless and good men favor should be pushed forward to finished results.

(2.) But it may be said that little more can be needed in so favored an enterprise. To this we reply: The very success thus far is a call for greater means and efforts. The progress and increased numbers of the pupils make requisition for more teachers, schools, apparatus, and buildings; the favorable action of the States for colored schools, and the fitness of so many of our pupils for the work, call for more means to raise up more teachers, for we can supply annually but hundreds, while the growing demand will be for thousands; the growth of the few intelligent and pure churches only shows the need of more; the land-scrip to Hampton Institute will be recalled if we do not furnish the facilities to make it available; Jubilee Hall and the Ladies' Hall at Berea will be empty monuments if we do not furnish the teachers; Dr. Healy's collections will lie idle if we have no suitable schools to educate missionaries to Africa—in short, every success, every help, every additional consecrated worker, every new college hall, church organization, and church edifice is only a new and importunate plea for further aid, until all these wants are in some adequate measure supplied.

This people—a nation born in a day—have a growth that needs fitting nourishment. The spoonfuls that met its infant wants are changing daily to the demand for strong meat. The very growth creates the enlarged demand. There is hope in the demand; for their growth will insure strength and independence, and at length the reward will come in a stalwart and intelligent people, adding to the wealth and stability of the nation, and to the power and glory of the Church.

In view of these facts—the success and the need in the special work among the colored people—the Committee recommend a concentration of labor, an effort for the increase of funds and for a revival of the missionary spirit.

1. As a concentration of labor, the Committee recommend:

(1.) The transfer of the Siam and Sandwich Island missions. These, it is true, require but little money or supervision, but what they do require of either, the Committee believes, might be concentrated to better advantage on portions of our field where our main work lies. These missions have no other relations to our special labors than are to be found in any general evangelical efforts.

(2.) The transfer of the West-India Missions.

These missions are connected in their origin and in the race they reach with the great aims of the Association, but not in the unity of work.

The Committee submit to the wisdom of the Annual Meeting these recommendations of transfer. If they are sanctioned, we suggest that the Secretaries be directed to enter into correspondence with the missionaries and others interested, and that the utmost care be taken to consult their wishes and interests in the changes that may be made.

(3.) The African Missions should be greatly strengthened. They constitute one ultimate object for which the Association exists. The Avery Endowment Fund binds us to them, and the gifts in Great Britain show the vital interest felt in the combination of our Freedmen's work with these missions.

(4.) The work among the Freedmen, for the present, should be our great endeavor. This is plain from the call of Providence, as seen in our past history and in the decided convictions of our main constituency, as well as in the success of our labors. Funds and supervision should be specially given here.

(5.) The Indian work should be continued. This is confessedly an experiment, but one that every consideration of humanity and piety impels us to try most thoroughly. Good can be done among these people, as is abundantly shown in the physical and spiritual improvement made by agents and missionaries at White Earth Reservation, in Minnesota, and elsewhere.

(6.) The efforts among the Chinese in America should also be kept up. It is a small work—experimental, but the people dwell among us, and the missions are not expensive. The effort is related to the life work of the Association, because these Chinese are feeble, persecuted, and in America. If the churches in California and elsewhere will do the work, we can cease.

The Committee further suggest an inquiry into the practicability of extending our labors among the Indians in the direction of distinctively church work. All our efforts, there as elsewhere, are meant to be Christian, in the character of the workers and in the influence they exert, whether their duties be on the farm, in the shop, or in the school, but the Association has, with two exceptions, no laborers among the Indians that are doing direct missionary work by preaching and organizing churches. An extension in this direction seems almost essential to the unity and efficiency of our Indian work.

2. The efforts to increase funds for our great work should be made:

(1.) By the saving of expense in the changes above suggested. This we estimate at $5283.

(2.) But mainly by an increase of effort, and if need be, of cost, in raising money. The aim of a missionary society is neither that of a savings-bank nor of a miser: it is not to hoard or save money, but to do earnestly and faithfully the Master's work as economically as possible, consistent with efficiency; but the efficiency should be regarded as more important than the saving. Souls are worth more than money. We should increase our means even at an increase of cost. If a given church or district should contribute annually $1000 at a cost of one per cent, it would be better for that people as well as the cause of Christ if they could be induced to give $10,000 at a cost of ten per cent. Hence the Committee recommend no diminution of effort to reach the churches with appeals, believing that in Paul's zeal in collecting money we have an example and a warrant for urgency, and believing also that the benevolent and Christian people who sustain our work will be better pleased with a successful pressing forward of our great work among these needy races than with a cautious timidity that will leave them to perish, to the irretrievable detriment of the nation and to the vast hinderance of the cause of Christ.

(3.) Funds may be increased by the aid of Woman's Societies. The efficiency of these organizations, both in raising money and in the development of interest in the cause of missions, has been so abundantly tested as to leave no longer any reason for doubt. The only objection that can be raised is on the score of the multiplication of organizations; but we think this problem is being solved by the earnestness and sagacity of the "honorable women, not a few," whose hearts are in the work, for warm hearts will find wise ways. As an illustration of our meaning, we subjoin the following letter:

McGregor, Iowa, Aug. 4, 1873.

Inclosed you will find a draft for twenty-five dollars, the quarterly contributions of the Woman's Missionary Society to the American Missionary Association.

We have received the address "Woman's Work for the Lowly," and plan of constitution for auxiliaries to the A. M. A. Our hearts were greatly rejoiced at this new movement, and we sincerely hope that the plan will be speedily carried into effect. The auxiliaries to the Woman's Board ought not surely to stand in the way, for we positively know by a three years' experience that our society is more prosperous and our meetings are more interesting by combining the two objects, and I think our contribution to each is larger than it would be to either alone. We reach more, interest more, and it gives us more variety of thought to bring into our meetings. We feel our views broadened and our hearts quickened in both branches of the work of our dear Lord by combining them into one organization.

We have often spoken and wished for this plan to add to the treasury of the A. M. A.

Yours, (Signed) Mrs. R. GRANT.

3. We feel deeply the need of an increase of the missionary spirit. Our work can not be carried on by man alone. The help of arms, laws, and political power is not our want. We and the people we seek to bless must have the guiding and sustaining presence and power of the Holy Spirit; and to this end we seek the benefit of the prayers of God's people. We ask a renewal of the prayers of the old anti-slavery days; the prayers of Moses were as much needed at Mount Sinai and in the long wilderness journey as in the deliverance from Egypt. We ask for us and this people a place in the monthly concert, in the supplications of the pulpit, the family altar, and the closet. The work is worthy, the people are needy, and the God of the poor will hear.

DETAILED SURVEY OF THE FIELD.

THE SOUTH.

EASTERN DEPARTMENT.

REV. E. M. CRAVATH, Field-Secretary.

I. CHURCHES AND THEOLOGICAL CLASSES.

LESS has been done in the line of occupying new places and forming churches than our plans at the opening of the year contemplated. This is due mainly to our inability to support additional ministers from the North without crippling the permanent educational work, by which we are preparing a native and intelligent ministry, which is, under God, the hope of this people. Already a few such have been sent forth from our schools, and a large number are moving steadily forward in preparation for the ministry. Theological classes have been under instruction at Atlanta, Fisk, Straight, and Tougaloo Universities, and Talladega College; and a regular theological department is in operation at Howard University, which the Association helps to support.

Washington, D. C.

Professor Reeve, of Howard University, writes:

"We have given instruction during the year to twenty-seven (27) students. We close the year with twenty-three (23) in actual attendance. Our students differ more in the amount of their previous preparation than in native capacity. It was with some difficulty that they were classified. We have, however, what may properly be called a Middle and a Junior Class. There are some enrolled as members of each class who take the English Course.

INSTRUCTORS AND INSTRUCTION.

"To these classes, the following gentlemen have given instruction two hours weekly in the studies named: Rev. Dr. Rankin, Homiletics; Rev. D. B. Nichols, Biblical Geography, etc.; Rev. Prof. Whittlesey, Evidences, etc. Rev. Prof. Westcott gives three hours' instruction weekly, in Church History; Rev. Dr. Butler, one hour in Sacred History; Messrs. Darwin and Goldberg, each part of the year, five hours weekly in Hebrew. Mr. Goldberg has also taught Vocal Music.

"I have taught three and four hours daily, giving instruction in Greek Grammar and Testament, Biblical Theology, Theological Encyclopedia, English Rhetoric and Etymology and English Bible, etc.

"Prof. Whittlesey has heard the Middle Class in Mental and Moral Science, with his Senior College Class. He has also held weekly Rhetorical Exercises.

REMARKS.

"1st. Some of our students needed instruction in preparatory studies. It has been given them, at other than the regular hours for recitation, by myself, or by a member of the Middle Class. Men of this order have been received because they seemed to be good men, had little time by reason of age, and less money to spend in preparation for the work they were very confident the Lord had called them to do. The dilemma was, 'receive them as they are, or let them preach as they are.'

"2d. Our students have nearly all of them been actively engaged in Christian work during the year. Two of them (Methodists) have little Mission churches committed to their care. Two others (Congregationalists) have worked in connection with Lincoln Mission Sunday-school.

"3d. The distinctive feature of the department is its undenominational character. Students here learn to go behind the men whose names have been battle-cries for centuries, and rest on the sure word of God. A young Methodist brother (white) who had strong skeptical tendencies one year ago, said in our prayer-meeting, the other night, that his feet had well-nigh slipped; but the study of that book had saved him.

"Our department prayer-meetings are often pentecostal seasons where every man seems to hear all others speaking in his own language, namely, that of the Spirit. If our students do not become learned in those technicalities which too often minister strife and debate, there is a visible gain on their part in that charity which hopeth all things; endureth all things; is patient, kind, and never faileth."

Talladega, Ala.

To show the spirit that prevails among the theological students at Talladega, and their method of Christian labor, we publish the following extracts from the correspondence of Rev. H. E. Brown, pastor of the church, and Theological Instructor at that place.

"TALLADEGA, ALA., Sept. 16, 1873.

"About the first of August, taking the tent just received from New-York, and four of my first theological class, formed a year ago, I went among the mountains near us, to begin our new labors.

"We gathered the people in our tent and told them our mission. We wanted to help them build a house for day and Sabbath-school and church purposes, and have them turn from the superstitions that had led them into strange ways, to walk in the path of holiness. They said they were ready to help build the house, and would attend the meetings to hear what we had to say. So day after day the men worked, making shingles and hewing timber, and night after night all came to meeting in the tent. We visited them at their homes, and in the meetings we separated them into several bands each night before preaching, and talked familiarly with them.

"In a little hut near the spot where we first pitched our tent had been a day-school and Sabbath-school, taught by one of our faithful students, but he had not yet found a better home for his converts than the old church, where the 'boards' on the roof were not yet safe from the heads of the shouting sisters. We found, however, ere long, that good seed had been sown. Nearly every family in the neighborhood that had any good prospect of ever owning a home, there or elsewhere, seemed ready to give up superstition for the Bible. Middle-aged and old people, who had failed to 'come through' in the regular way, were among the first to ask us to pray for them.

"We are now building, and holding meetings at the second point, under similar circumstances and with similar results. No undue excitement has at any time appeared, but the people, in every meeting, have been serious and thoughtful. Again and again they have thanked us and thanked God for sending them light in their darkness. Some have labored all they could to help in the building and in the meetings. Some of them seem just as intelligent and earnest in their Christian life as the best of our Talladega church did in the beginning. They are anxious to form a church among them like ours. The minister, who is reported to be the best but one in the Conference, expects to enter our theological department and join our church 'after Christmas.' One teacher from each place expects to enter our next class, to study for the ministry.

"The warning of the brother who visited the old churches ahead of us, telling them that we would get all their best members, begins to look like a prophecy. And yet we have no desire that these old churches should go down, at least in this generation. We believe, however, that it is best that new churches be formed, here and there, among them, that can present the Gospel as it can not be presented by churches and ministers that were cast in a mould adapted to slavery times.

"I am now satisfied that there is a little good material in almost every community in Alabama, from which a Congregational church could be formed. Such churches, in the hands of these young and middle-aged men of their own color, who are now studying theology, would receive additions from the Sabbath and day-school, and, now and then, one from other churches; but would seldom or never lose a valuable member by letter, till the old churches make many important changes.

"This work was not fully ready till teachers were prepared and sent out to wake up the people. When we had no theological class, we had no efficient helpers, and so the work could not be done. And when we had no tent, we could not go and stay among them, to build a house and form a church; and hence the work had still to wait.

"Now, common-school teachers are prepared, and have been sowing seed all over the State. A good class preparing for the ministry is ready to visit all churches within fifteen miles of Talladega every Sabbath, and yet go on with their studies. Another class will be formed next month, which will be able to do Sabbath-school work at once, and go out with their teacher on a mission tour next year.

"It is now safe to form little churches. We are ready to do this kind of work, and this is the work for which we have been preparing for the past six years.

"Shall we go forward to do it? If so, we must continue to receive money to use, with the labor and money of the people, in building these houses, (always on A. M. A. land,) and I must have an efficient co-laborer. During the nine months of the last school year, I was able to leave the home school-church but twice. The outside church, and Sabbath-school work, the teaching in the theological department and the school church, are more than I can do. Can I have permanent help?"

In writing to the Sunday-school of Milford, Mass., which purchased the tent, he says,

"When we came to our present site in Kingston, several days ago, it was all pine woods, except that old deserted field over yonder. Our nearest house was about a mile away. Our first work after unloading the seats was to put up the tent. Before we had finished driving the stakes, the people began to gather for meeting, and so they helped clear away the stones and logs, and bring in the seats. It was getting dark, and some one said as we lifted a log, 'Be careful, there might be a snake under this.' I stopped to look carefully, and thought I saw something move. They brought a light, and we killed a snake all coiled for battle, right under our tent. How I wish we could conquer the 'Old Serpent' as quickly as we killed that snake!

"While we were putting up our tent, a woman, who had learned to cook for her master before the war, came from her home two miles away and boiled some corn and made some biscuit for our supper. She spread our table (which was simply one of the seats we had brought) in one end of the tent, while the people continued to gather in the other end. After supper, it was time for meeting. We sang and prayed, and I told them that we had come among them to do them good, and to teach them a different kind of religion from mere shouting and confusion. Some of them said they had got tired of their ignorant noisy meetings and wanted to find a better way. All but two or three seemed glad that we had come among them, and said they would come to our meetings, and would help us build a good school-house chapel.

"After meeting, they lit their 'fat pine' torches and went in all directions down the hill through the pine woods toward their little cabins, one, two, or three miles away. Then we prepared our beds by turning one seat around so as to face another, and spreading our blankets on the two together.

"The next day, others hunted shingle-trees and made shingles, while I went to find lumber. At night we all gathered again in our tent for meeting, and so we continued working during the day and holding meetings at night.

"Our meetings were very interesting and quiet. The first that pledged themselves for Jesus were middle-aged men, who were helping make shingles, and the woman who came to cook for us. My helpers go out one at a time during the day to talk and pray with the people at their homes. Early in the evening we have inquiry and prayer-meetings, and then preaching by myself or one of my helpers.

"A good work is begun. Several leading persons from other churches and from no church are anxious to form a new church, and try by Sabbath and day-schools and intelligent preaching to help themselves and others to a higher and nobler life.

"The school-house chapel, 26 x 38 feet, is nearly done, and already one of my helpers has gone to another field called the 'Cove,' to help get out the shingles for another building. He will have to stay around among the cabins as best he can till we go to him with our tent. We expect to be at work at the Cove before you receive this. Pray for us that God may continue to bless us."

We present no details of the church work in the South, giving only some facts respecting the newer churches, or those which have erected new buildings.

Byron Station, Ga.

Rev. E. E. Rogers, who, as pastor of the church at Macon, established this outpost, sends the following statement:

"A Congregational church with seven adult members was organized at Byron Station, Ga., on Sunday, the 30th of March. The Congregational churches of Atlanta, Macon, and Andersonville were represented in the Council. Rev. George Walker, of Atlanta University, preached the sermon.

"The new church building was crowded, at least 175 persons being present. Seldom have I looked upon a more interested and attentive audience than the one gathered on this occasion.

"A brief history of the preliminary work done upon this field may be interesting to the readers of the "Missionary."

"Byron is seventeen miles from Macon, on the railroad leading from Macon into South-western Georgia. In itself, it is but a small collection of stores and dwelling-houses. On every side are large cotton plantations, living upon which are the usual number of families and hands employed on such plantations.

"Your correspondent visited Byron nearly a year ago, and found it a place of great destitution as far as religious privileges were concerned. The people were accustomed to meet for worship on the Sabbath in a rude brush arbor in the woods near the station.

My first experience in preaching there was a very novel one: my hearers had only pine logs for their seats, my pulpit was the solid ground.

"My proposition to try to raise money for a building to be used for a school as well as for a church was hailed with delight. Even the white people encouraged the undertaking, with money subscriptions as well as with kind words.

"I can not take the time or the space to trace the progress of the work of building. There was weary waiting for the colored people, pressed by the summer labors of the plantation, to fulfill their pledges to give labor upon the building. In this connection, two names deserve honorable mention. Harrison Watkins, without expectation of reward, rived and shaved the largest part of the shingles used upon the roof. Stephen Low planed nearly all the lumber used upon the outside of the building.

"At last, the building was completed and dedicated about the 1st of November. Services have been held in the church every Sabbath during the winter.

"The work in the Byron field has been put under the pastoral charge of Rev. Floyd Snelson, of the Andersonville church. Brother Harrison Watkins, one of the members of the church, has been licensed to preach, and will supply the pulpit in the absence of Brother Snelson.

"The church building is a neat, substantial edifice, 28 by 40 feet. It will seat comfortably 175 persons. The cash outlay upon the building has been $541.44, of which sum $374.90 has already been raised. Your correspondent will always be grateful to the individuals and to the Sunday-schools who so promptly responded to his appeal for aid in erecting this building.

"The prospect for this little church is more than ordinarily bright. The church has the whole field for miles in every direction. There is a growing religious interest in the community, and some are seeking the Saviour. Will the readers of this remember prayerfully this and other infant churches like it, which greatly need the blessings that will surely come in answer to prayer?"

Athens, Ala.

Early in the year, Miss W., the Superintendent, wrote as follows:

"No words can give you any idea of the work of the Lord among us. Our meeting commenced with the week of prayer, and is still in progress. We have had no preaching except on the Sabbath, no minister except Bro. Roberts, very little exhortation or talking in public, save the quiet, simple, yet thrilling testimony of new-born souls. Among these new witnesses for Jesus are the most promising and influential of our students; in the great and solemn joy of their new life, they are uniting their earnest labors to ours, to win souls.

"Nightly our chapel is filled with those who seem almost breathless with solemn interest. At times, the whole congregation seem broken down, and silent tears and suppressed sobs tell of the intense interest. So manifest is the presence of the Holy Spirit, that even the most thoughtless and giddy have seemed awed while the still small voice has spoken peace to some troubled soul. Besides the general prayer-meeting at night, we have a noon-day prayer-meeting in the reading-room, and short seasons of prayer, as occasion seems to demand, in the different school-rooms.

"'One by one they come to Jesus,' and oh! how earnestly their prayers go up in behalf of those who are still out of Christ! To-night, more than twenty arose for prayers.

"What has seemed remarkable in all these meetings is their entire freedom from noisy demonstration. Even those who are always noisy in their own churches seem to walk softly before the Lord, and to engage in prayer with us, in a manner so subdued, yet so deeply in earnest, that they seem overshadowed by the Divine Presence.

"Pray for us, that even greater blessings may come to us."

At the close of the year she writes:

"This little church is eminently a working, praying church. Every member, when present, takes active part in our meetings for prayer and conference, and they are seasons of great refreshing.

"We have in connection with our church a Missionary Society, which meets once a month. The exercises of these meetings are deeply interesting, and always draw a full house. So that many who have not been in the habit of coming to church are learning in these meetings something of church work, and the great need of Christian effort to evangelize the world.

"Little children give their 'nickel' and their bright smiles of joy that they can thus do something for Jesus. Old men give theirs, and say they're mighty poor, but reckon they ought to give that much for the cause. Young men give theirs, accompanied with eloquent appeals to the people who have so long enjoyed the benefits of missionary labor, acknowledge their own obligation to the mission cause, and express a zeal to work for Jesus, and a spirit of consecration that is most cheering to every Christian soul."

McLeansville, N. C.

In selecting the site for the building erected this year for the use of the church and school, previously reported at Allemance, N. C., it seemed best to locate nearer the railroad, and so ten acres were purchased a few miles from McLeansville station, which accounts for the change of name. Miss E. W. Douglass, who began the work, has continued in charge of the school, and Rev. John Scott, of Dudley, has built the chapel, and supplied the church a part of the time. The new house, built at a cost of about $1500, will furnish a good home for Miss Douglass, as well as accommodations for the church and school.

To J. G. Stimson, Esq., of Norwich, Vt., who has supported Miss Douglass, and to the First Congregational Church of Springfield, Mass., who have contributed largely to the erection and furnishing of the chapel, is due a large measure of the prosperity of this mission. The following extracts from the correspondence of the year give a glimpse of the good work that is being done:

May 23.

"The meetings of yesterday were large, and the interest deep and genuine. My assembly room was novel and seemed to add to the impression. It was a 'large upper room' in the old factory where were made guns and army wagons. I stood by a window, or where one once was, though dashed out by Gen. Sherman's men. The tops of tall beech-trees without, spread their cooling boughs about the opening; the creek far below, that once turned the machinery, sent up its soft ripp[illegible]ng song to blend with our exercises, and an invisible vapor to refresh us; while the waving wheat-fields nodded the amen from all the green hill-sides.

"After Sabbath-school, came the sermon; after preaching, the practice of new hymns; after that, a prayer-meeting, when the heart of the congregation moved 'as one man.' At intervals, from among the oaks, came stealing up the sweet voice of song, while some walked back to the deeper forest to pray. Such days are enough to foreshadow the future and millennial earth when the kingdoms have become the kingdoms of our Lord, and redemption has restored the pristine glory.

"But when the night meeting came, the blessed influences of the day reached their climax. Good resolutions were planted and took deep root. Two or three persons were on their feet at a time; then respectfully standing to wait for each other; children begging prayers and making vows; Peters, stung with the sense of their denial, coming with broken hearts and tearful eyes back to their neglected Lord, and the devils of earth and the flesh sent back to their 'own place.' God knows I never enjoyed any scenes so in my life as I am enjoying these meetings.

"There is a strong flood-tide in them toward the Shining Shore."

"SWORDS INTO PLOWSHARES." June 24.

"Not exactly; but finding the best place to 'house' our seat lumber was in the old factory where they once made muskets to shoot Yankees, we took it down there, and the very man who was proprietor of the shop and had charge of the work in those terrible times, (a white man, of course,) is now making our church seats, at a low price, and gives every evidence of enjoying the labor. He has been the friend of the school from the first.

"Several thousand good black-walnut gun-stocks were on hand at the 'surrender,' and several of them have been cut up for dowels to hold the seats together."

Montgomery, Ala.

Rev. G. W. Andrews writes:

"Our beautiful chapel was dedicated October 6th, my first Sabbath in Montgomery. Its location is suburban, near the capitol, and in a portion of the city but sparsely settled before the erection of the chapel and the Swayne school-building.

"These two new attractions for the colored people, and the delightful region of their location, have drawn the better class of our citizens from all parts of the city to find permanent homes near the school and the church.

"The result is, that now we have a thriving settlement around us, partly within the city limits, and partly without, known as New-Montgomery. We have every advantage of location that could be desired, with multitudes of people at hand. It would be difficult to find a field that promises a more healthful growth in population, and that in the near future seems likely to take a deeper interest in our work.

"During the first two months of my labor here, the people manifested considerable reserve, apparently for the purpose of watching the new minister, and the new enterprise. This caution was commendable rather than otherwise; however, it gradually yielded, and December 9th we organized a church of sixteen members; several others united on profession during the year, and all were consistent, beneficent, and helpful. The endeavor was, to make haste slowly; so that whatever was done might stand, as a good foundation upon which to build a noble spiritual superstructure in the years to come. Such a foundation we now have, and the spiritual temple has begun to rise.

"We had but few extra meetings during the year, yet the attendance upon the regular services, and the interest in them, increased from first to last. The people seemed to hunger for instruction from the pulpit and in the Bible-class. About twenty members of the Legislature were in constant attendance, and we were comforted with the thought that they would bear, to all parts of the State, their new ideas of Christian life and work; the seed that flew from the hand of the Gospel sower went far and wide, and can not but fructify, according to the divine law of growth.

"There is a manifest desire on the part of the colored people of the city for an educated ministry. During the winter, there were some warm debates on this subject in the old churches, lasting for weeks in one instance, and accompanied with a high tide of feeling. The inquiry everywhere is for educated teachers in the Sunday-school. This state of things can not but result in a general awakening of the people, to inquire what is their real condition, and what are their wants, and how shall they meet them? It is not too much to expect that when the people ask for the sincere milk of the word, they will receive it, and grow thereby. Your workers in Montgomery can not but look for the best results, if they continue faithful and wise.

"During the summer vacation, my pulpit was occupied by Rev. Barnabas Root, a native African, but a graduate of Knox College and Chicago Theological Seminary. The people flocked to hear him and understand now as never before their capacity for a high type of culture and Christian manhood. God by his providence is opening their eyes, and at the same time sending them what they need, and one day they shall be fully redeemed.

Selma, Ala.

Of the building and dedication of the chapel, and progress of the church work, we have the following report from the pastor.

SELMA, ALA., Oct. 6, 1873.

"You have noticed from the report already sent that our church has increased numerically over 100 per cent. This includes five teachers in Burrell school. Of the others, ten are pupils in our Sunday-school and seven are heads of families. We rejoice in this growth in numbers, but our hearts are more rejoiced at the growth in Christian character among our members.

"Bro. Carter and his associate teachers entered very heartily into the church work from the time of my arrival here; and much of our success in the liquor and tobacco reform is the result of their wisdom and zeal. The church has adopted a strong temperance resolution, and it is pretty thoroughly understood through the city that if any one unites with the Congregational Church, he must be a temperance man.

"Our congregations have been larger toward the close of the year than they had been previously. There has been continued religious activity among the members of the church and occasional conversions among our friends, all through the year. We have had additions at every communion season but one, since I came, last November. At our last, four Sunday-school children united with us. Quite recently a man about fifty years of age, the husband of one of our most intelligent female members, has taken the Lord for his portion. He had been quite dissipated.

"The building of our chapel has been a matter of great interest to the people, and not a little care to me. We commenced the work without knowing where the funds were coming from, except what was pledged by the A. M. A.—the ground and $1000. We are very grateful to you for the $310 in addition to this amount. Several times I have been without any thing to pay my hands, but have gone forward with the work, trusting God to send the money as needed, and it has come at just the time that I must have it.

"Last Sabbath, our hearts were full of joy to overflowing as we consecrated the building to the service of God. The sermon was preached by Bro. Silsby, which seemed very appropriate, as he was the one who commenced the A. M. A. work in this place. Our praise service at night was also one of great interest.

"Our house is pronounced by all a gem of beauty, and perfect in its construction. It is completed at a cost of $3151.30. I have received from all sources $2917.61, leaving a balance of $233.69, which I have advanced. The house is two feet longer than the churches at Marion and Montgomery, is finished with a very tasteful tower, blinds, and gas.

"We adopted December 1st the weekly offering system of giving, which has worked admirably. Nearly every member of the congregation who worships regularly with us has contributed. The little children go to the Treasurer asking for envelopes for their nickels. During this time, with our small number of regular worshipers we have raised $197.50, from which we have paid our running expenses, sent ten dollars to the Mendi Mission, ten dollars to Talladega College, and furnished our church with chairs and carpet for pulpit, hymn-books and gas reflectors.

"I have never labored in any place where there was so much interest manifested by the citizens in our work. Several Southern men have aided us in erecting our church, and there is a Christian cordiality existing between them and the A. M. A. workers.

"Our Sunday-school numbers 100. Several of our colored members are teachers in it. The Lord has blessed us wonderfully. Yours truly, G. S. PORR."

II. CHARTERED INSTITUTIONS, ETC.

LOCATION OF INSTITUTIONS.

The right position of a college is sometimes, like that of an army corps, an assurance of victory. The institutions of the A. M. A. in the South are finely placed, for although the locations were sometimes decided by apparently accidental circumstances, they are now seen to have been providential.

HAMPTON INSTITUTE is in a very accessible, healthy, and pleasant spot on the eastern shore of Virginia, once the summer resort of the aristocracy of the Mother State. Proposed railroad facilities promise to add to the accessibility and commercial importance of Hampton.

BEREA COLLEGE is situated on the border-line between the blue grass and mountain regions of Kentucky; the former having a dense population of blacks, the latter of sturdy, loyal whites who never were slaveholders. No railroad as yet reaches Berea, but this isolation is counterbalanced by the healthful Christian influence it is enabled to exert over these two contiguous sections, and especially in breaking down the spirit of caste—a third of its students being white.

FISK UNIVERSITY, Nashville, Tenn., has the advantage of a central and conspicuous location which many favoring circumstances have enabled it to improve. Its new Jubilee Hall will be a perpetual inspiration to the colored people of Tennessee.

ATLANTA UNIVERSITY is on a commanding position in one of the most beautiful cities of Georgia. Converging railroads and a large surrounding population are among its advantages. The clouds are dark over the colored people of Georgia just now, but Atlanta University is a beacon light of hope and courage.

TALLADEGA COLLEGE, Alabama, is in a healthy spot, being above the malaria that hangs over the lower portions of the State. The influence of the college over the colored people is becoming more and more extensive as it has always been salutary, and it is winning its way to the respect of the white inhabitants.

TOUGALOO UNIVERSITY, Mississippi, eight miles north of Jackson, the capital of the State, is secluded enough for a monastery, but with its fine domain of 500 acres of land, and its rooms overcrowded with students, it contrives to keep quite active in work and study, as well as in prayer and praise.

STRAIGHT UNIVERSITY, New-Orleans, is located in the city that sits as queen of the great South-west. In population, facilities for travel, and the opportunity for widespread influence, it is surpassed by none of the schools founded by the Association.

A glance at the map will show how well these institutions are distributed over the seven great States of the South, on this side of the Mississippi. To plant others like them across the river is only a question of means. That extension, together with great enlargement in those on this side of the river, is importunately called for by the progress of the colored people; but we are compelled to move as we can and not as we would, and hence we think it "is good for the present distress" to "strengthen the things that remain."

The following report of the commencement exercises gives some idea of the growth and prosperity of this institution:

"The wonderful progress our country has made in civilization since the American Missionary Association sent its pioneers South to meet the contrabands at Fortress Monroe, has never been more strikingly illustrated than it was on Thursday, the 12th of June, at the Normal and Agricultural Institute, of Hampton, Va.

"The regular commencement exercises of this school, which opened in 1868 with 20 scholars, and closes this summer with 213, were made coincident with the laying of the corner-stone of the new hall, which its increasing needs demand, and for which the 'Hampton Students' band is still singing at the North. The interest of the occasion brought to Hampton a party of guests, many of whose names are known through many lands. Among them were—

"Rev. Dr. R. D. Hitchcock, President of the Union Theological Seminary, New-York; Rev. Dr. Taylor, of the Broadway Tabernacle; Rev. Dr. Budington, Brooklyn; Rev. Dr. Bellows, New-York; Rev. Dr. C. S. Robinson, New-York; Rev. T. K. Fessenden, Connecticut; Hon. Alexander Hyde, Massachusetts; Hon. H. N. Daggett, Massachusetts; Dr. Coan, of the Independent; Prof. B. J. Northrop, Secretary of the Board of Education of Connecticut; Rev. George Whipple, New-York; Rev. E. M. Cravath, Brooklyn; Edgar Ketchum, Esq., New-York; Mr. Samuel Holmes, New-Jersey; Mr. Robert C.

Ogden, New-York; Mr. Roswell Smith, New-York; Mr. Anthony Kimber, Philadelphia; Gen. Eaton, head of the Educational Bureau at Washington; Rev. Dr. Ruffner, President of the Virginia Board of Education, Richmond; Rev. George F. Adams, of Hampton; Mr. C. Perkins, Virginia; Mr. and Mrs. George Dixon, lately from England; Miss Mary Carpenter, the distinguished English lady whose philanthropic work and writing in the cause of prison discipline has made her name honorable, and her visit to America welcome; Mrs. Prof. Youmans, of New-York, and many other ladies and gentlemen, the friends and patrons of the school.

"THE COMMUNION SERVICE.

"Most of the party fortunately arrived in time to enjoy the unexpected pleasure of attending the sacramental service at the institute chapel, on Wednesday evening, when sixteen of the students made public confession of their faith in Christ. The services were simple and touching. The little band, among whom was one of the graduating class, almost all of whom were already communicants, were received into the fellowship of the church by its pastor, Rev. Richard Tolman, whose untiring and loving work among the students has been rewarded by many such fruits as this during his three years' pastorate. The institute church now numbers 58. Several more are waiting for admission to it next fall.

"Rev. Drs. Budington and Robinson were invited to officiate in the services, and made short addresses, full of the emotion which swelled their hearts. The little chapel stands in the national cemetery which the school farm incloses, and is surrounded by six thousand Union soldiers' graves. The tender interest of the place and the scene was felt by many present to be the most fitting preparation possible for the next day's exercises.

"THE EXAMINATION.

"Thursday morning was occupied with the examination of classes. The ably conducted and wide-awake recitations compared favorably with those of Northern schools for white pupils; but a better testimony than a brief examination can give to the standard of scholarship in this school is the fact, that the Virginia county school superintendents have learned to accept candidates as teachers, without question, on the strength of a diploma from Hampton; and that a Hampton graduate of last year, who has been teaching since his graduation, has just passed a competitive examination in his district, and has been creditably admitted to West Point.

"The industrial departments of the school engaged the very special attention of the visitors; the farm worked by the students, with its thrifty fields and orchards loaded with the coming harvest for northern markets; the girls' industrial room, where over one thousand three hundred garments have been made during the year; the printing office with its fine cylinder press, the gift of Hoe & Co., in full operation, and its compositors at work upon the Southern Workman, an illustrated paper for the industrial classes of the South, published monthly at the school—these and the various workshops were inspected with interest, as well as the little camp in which the boys had braved the winter in tents for the sake of an education.

"At noon a lunch was served, and the school choir entertained the guests with some of their characteristic melodies.

"THE CLOSING EXERCISES OF THE SCHOOL

occupied most of the afternoon, in the assembly room of the Academic Hall. An address of welcome was gracefully spoken by one of the girls of the graduating class. It was like all the students' addresses, entirely original.

"Orations, essays, and recitations followed, and a valedictory by one of the boys. Songs were interspersed, of course, by voices that proved a strong reserve of musical talent in the Hampton students. Some of the recitations showed remarkable ability, and the general tone of the speeches was excellent. Dr. Hitchcock expressed the general impression of the audience when he said, 'I never heard more sense and less nonsense in so short a time.'

"Diplomas were presented by General Armstrong, the principal of the institute, to eighteen graduates. Rev. George Whipple, President of its Board of Trustees, made a short address to the class:

"'Your friends will watch you and follow you with their prayers. It was said of our Lord, "He shall see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied," and I deem it no sacrilege to say that the friends who have labored to elevate you will be satisfied with the success of their labors, if you are found faithfully endeavoring to impart to others the advantages you have here enjoyed.' Then followed,

"ADDRESSES BY VISITORS.

"Rev. Dr. TAYLOR, of the Broadway Tabernacle, New-York, said: He was glad to see the lofty idea the students had of their duty to their country, and wished them to know that what they can do must depend upon what they are, upon their character. There are many circumstances in our lives we can not select—our birth-place, or our color—but we can choose to be good. The backbone of character is conscience.

"Col. TABB, of Hampton: 'To say that I am pleased with what I have seen to-day would faintly express my feelings. There is no question of more importance to the South than the elevation of the colored race. Virginia is ready to give every help in her power to this work.'

"Rev. Dr. BELLOWS said: 'The color of a man's skin has very little power over his heart. I sometimes think the most beautiful sight we shall ever see in the universe will be that great rainbow of races around the throne of God. I would rather be a crude black man beginning to grow than an effete white man, who has outgrown all growth.'

"'This is my first visit here, and the things my eyes have witnessed and my ears have taken in, have filled my heart with thanksgiving.'

"Dr. RUFFNER: 'I am proud to say that this is a school I thoroughly approve. It has been honest and true to its aims, and I can testify that no act of the Virginia legislature is more universally approved than that which gave this school a third of the Agricultural College Fund. Our State has entered honestly upon the work of educating all her children, but we need help, it is beyond our abilities. I believe that this school only needs the support it deserves to make it the leader of all schools on this continent in the great work of elevating the colored race.'

"Dr. BUDINGTON: 'I never rose to speak more thoroughly impressed with the solemnity of the occasion. I am profoundly affected by the proposal of these sons of Virginia to join hands with us in lifting up this race and making it worthy of God and man. We will not be behind them in cordiality, and agree to coöperate in sending forth streams of benevolence to make glad this young city of our God.'

"Rev. G. F. ADAMS: 'You are solving a problem that philosophers for ages have stumbled at—the question of the qualification of the negro race for intellectual development. Till the last four years this question has never been fairly tried. As one of your graduates has well put it in his speech to-day—the black race can not be expected to do the work in two or three years that has taken the white race two or three hundred to accomplish.'

"'I remember the reply made by a poor black man who was rudely asked, "Do you think you negroes can ever gain any thing like social equality with white people"? He simply replied, "I think that water will find its level."'

"Gen. EATON: 'I am very often asked, 'Can education be made universal at the South?' I answer yes, here's Hampton. And not only Hampton—almost every State has institutions for the higher education in which people of your own color are keeping step with you.'

"Miss CARPENTER: 'I can hardly trust myself to utter any words to-day, because I feel so overwhelmed by my emotions of gratitude to God for all that he has done for you. You do not know how deep a sympathy has been felt for you in our little island for ages—a sympathy which compelled our government to pay £25,000,000 for the emancipation of all its slaves. Since then we have felt still more strongly for you.'

"After all present had joined in the soul-stirring strains of 'America,' which brought from Miss Carpenter the pleased whisper, 'Why, that is "God save the Queen!"' the graduates led the way to the foundations on which will stand a year from now, we hope,

"VIRGINIA HALL.

"It will be a handsome brick building, of 104 feet front toward the water, accommodating 120 girls, and containing the chapel and common dining-room.

"General Armstrong in a few words announced the design of the new hall, and the state of its prospects, saying that the security for its completion is our faith in earnest effort, in the country, and in God.

"An oration was delivered by a member of the next senior class—a fine, manly speech, full of spirit, and well spoken.

"After prayer by the Rev. George Whipple, the corner-stone, containing school reports, a file of the Southern Workman, national currency, and other objects of interest, was laid by Rev. Dr. Hitchcock, with an eloquent address, of which we give but a few sentences.

"ADDRESS OF REV. R. D. HITCHCOCK, D.D.

"In all my life I have never been so deeply and so variously moved as I have been to-day. The sub-soil plow has gone too deep through my feelings for me to express them easily. The interest of this occasion is not merely in the historic associations which surround us, though that were enough, but in the signs of the future for the interesting race whose history is so nearly all in the future—and to me it seems that there are many omens of a good future. . . .

"Gen. Armstrong tells us that this building will require $75,000, and that only about $9000 are as yet contributed. The balance is surer than the General can believe, even with his ardent courage and faith. Providence knows how to move the hearts of good people. While I do not make promises, I am sure that if he will come to New-York next autumn, when our people return from the country, we will give him such a meeting as will put him far on toward the great end of his desires, and send this building up as fast as trowels can work.

"The beautiful hymn, 'Angel of Peace,' was then sung by the school choir; prayer was offered by Dr. C. S. Robinson; and the invocation of the divine blessing by Rev. George F. Adams closed the exercises of this deeply interesting day—a day to renew our faith in humanity and our gratitude to God."

In the four higher departments, the numbers of white and colored students are nearly equal, (41 and 43;) of the total number, nearly two thirds are colored.

Thirty-eight cities and towns of Kentucky, besides Berea, are represented by 93 students; eleven other States, by 30 students—namely, Ohio, 11; Indiana, 6; Illinois, 1; Michigan, 2; Minnesota, 1; Iowa, 1; Kansas, 1; Tennessee, 3; Mississippi, 1; Louisiana, 2; Connecticut, 1.

The leading cities of the State are represented as follows:

Louisville, 25; Lexington, 7; Paris, 5; Danville, 4; Barboursville, 3; Richmond, 4.

The great gain of the year has been in the completion of the Ladies' Hall, an admirable brick building, costing over $50,000. This nearly doubles the usefulness of the institution. To the large-hearted liberality of R. R. Graves, Esq., of Morristown, N. J., this early completion of the building is largely due. Another building for chapel and school-rooms is pressingly needed.

The following extracts are from different reports of the commencement exercises in Berea.

"Fifteen years ago, Berea was a wilderness, and now, though but a small village, it is the seat of an educational institution or college, which is exerting a deep and widespread influence.

"The scene presented there on commencement day, July 2d, was as impressive as it was novel. The exercises were in an arbor constructed in the oak grove; for the institution has no room large enough to receive the visitors. In the forenoon, eighteen essays and orations and one poem were given by the pupils, and all were creditable. The graduating class consisted of four—a young lady who had gone through the ladies' department, and by whom the sweet and pure poem was written, and three young men who had passed through the regular college course. Their addresses were able and vigorous, and delivered with directness and power.

"Of the nineteen who took part in these exercises, five were colored; thirteen were male and six female. The audience, seated to the number of twelve or fifteen hundred, was about two thirds white and one third colored. Here were congregated together the white men of the mountains, some of whom had ridden on horseback eighty miles to attend the exercises; the colored people of the blue grass region, and the wealth and aristocracy of Richmond and Lexington. The number of people in and about the college grounds and buildings was variously estimated at from three to five thousand. The company was chiefly noticeable for the large preponderance of the white element, and for the general improvement in dress and regard for personal appearance shown by the mass. Four years ago, a spectator would have observed scarcely a bonnet or shawl among all the ladies of the congregation, or a cloth coat, or polished boots or shoes, among the men.

"If one could have observed these audiences alone for the last four or five years, he would become satisfied that there was some marked and powerful civilizing influence at work among these people, and he could not long be at a loss to know what that influence was.

"In the afternoon, the audience again assembled to listen to eloquent and feeling addresses—The Value of Christian Education, by Professor J. M. Ellis, of Oberlin College, Ohio; and the Recognition of Humanity, by the Rev. J. H. Heywood, of Louisville, Ky. Some brief remarks were made by C. W. Burnam, of Richmond, expressing his sympathy with the college, and his earnest desire for its success. President E. H. Fairchild then gave some facts concerning the condition and progress of the school, which were exceedingly interesting.

"In the lower departments, there are, altogether, one hundred and sixty-five students, of whom only fifty-one are white, and one hundred and fourteen colored. The preponderance of the colored element in these lower departments is accounted for by the fact that at the District Schools colored children are not admitted, and absolutely no provision is made by the State for the education of the blacks, so that they are compelled to come to the College for the very foundations of learning.

"On Monday evening of commencement week, Hon. William Brown, a member of the Kentucky Legislature from Jessamine County, addressed a large audience by invitation of the college societies.

"It will be remembered that Mr. Brown became prominent in the last Legislature by his opposition to the African School Law. The object of the bill, which was favored by the majority, and which Mr. Brown succeeded in defeating, was to provide for the education of the blacks by a special tax levied on the property of the blacks alone. Never was there a more unjust or oppressive measure in the history of class legislation, to say nothing of its unconstitutionality. The property of the blacks is already made to bear its full share of the burdens of taxation for State purposes, including the common school education of the whites, and now, when the blacks desire an education, they are coolly told, 'Oh! certainly—if you pay for it yourselves! We will tax your property to educate white children, but we shall not tax white property to educate yours. We will permit you to tax yourselves a little further for that end.' As Mr. Brown well says, even if the bill were permitted to become a law, with all its injustice and wrong, it would be wholly inadequate, and schools could not be maintained more than six weeks in the year in any part of the State, and in some a school could not be supported two days in the year.

"Mr. Brown gave the people a most eloquent and stirring address on the subject of education in general—the needs of Kentucky in this respect; her shameful neglect of the education of the masses; the necessity to the well-being of the State that all, both black and white, should be educated; and the duty of the State to provide such education, regardless of race or color."

The Illustrated Christian Weekly, of New-York, recently furnished its readers with both a pen and picture sketch of Berea College, which we are permitted to use, and which represents most distinctly the advancing footsteps of progress: the "Old Glade Meeting-house," the first "College Building," the first "Ladies' Hall," the present "Chapel," culminating in the "New Hall."

"BEREA COLLEGE, KENTUCKY.

"In the year 1854, a young man, disinherited by his parents, and disowned by his friends, took up his abode upon a small tract of uncultivated land given him by Cassius than six years ago, half the whites left the school because black men were admitted to its privileges. But the white students came back in time, and some of those who participated in mobs are not ashamed now to be recognized as friends.

"The location of the college is not only very healthful, catching as it does the fresh breezes from the mountains, but now that the underbrush of Mr. Fee's first days is cleared away, it is seen to be very beautiful. It is on a level ridge or plateau, overlooked by the mountains on the south, whence come the white students, and overlooking on the north the glade and blue grass region, whence come the blacks.

"Dr. Heywood, of Louisville, who visited the place this summer, writes, 'The situation of the village is picturesque and beautiful. The college grounds, we venture to say, are surpassed in natural beauty by none in the country, and the noble spirit manifested by the men and women who are devoting time, talent, energy, and fine scholarship to the institution is in accord with the grand surrounding scenery.'

"As the college has no room large enough to accommodate the audience on commencement occasions, these exercises are held under a bower in the beautiful oak grove which forms a part of the college grounds. Here are gathered from twelve to fifteen hundred people 'from the mountains and from the blue grass country, literate and illiterate, rich and poor, white and colored, farmers, mechanics, and professional men; a very mingled crowd, but a very attentive and orderly audience. It is an interesting sight—that large number under the green roof, listening eagerly through the morning and evening.'

"But the fact that Southern-born whites and blacks in nearly equal proportion and in large numbers have, for the past six years, recited together and in perfect harmony, makes this institution typical of what may be accomplished throughout the nation, and makes it of more than local importance. It requires no argument to show how much the colored people will be benefited by such an education. There is nothing like just such a school as this to teach mutual respect and forbearance, to dignify labor, to enforce a regard for the person and property of all classes, and to take away some of the arrogant superciliousness of caste and race. The Old Glade Meeting-house, in which Mr. Fee formerly preached, is in ruins. But the ideas nurtured there will soon plant a hundred better throughout Eastern Kentucky. He and those with him have lived to see the cloud of persecution roll away. We can ask no brighter future for them than that they may see the clouds of illiteracy lifted which now rest so heavily upon the people with whom their lot is cast, and who merit a nation's gratitude for a constant loyalty during the war."

Clark, Miss Mary L. Santley.

Summary of Students.—Theological, 3; Sophomore Class, 4; Freshman Class, 4; College Preparatory, 40; Normal, 75; Intermediate, 143; Primary, 146; Total, 415.

We quote from the report of the commencement exercises published in the Nashville Bulletin.

"On Sunday, May 25th, the Annual Sermon was preached by Rev. H. S. BENNETT, at the Howard Chapel. Monday, the 26th, the examination of classes in model schools took place, which was very satisfactory and interesting. Tuesday, the 27th, the classes in the normal course were examined. This course is especially adapted to the preparation of teachers of common schools.

"There were seventeen graduates in this class, all of whom acquitted themselves handsomely, and showed a commendable preparation for their noble calling. In the evening, the normal exhibition took place, and the exercises were exceedingly practical and confined strictly to subjects connected with teaching. The essays and orations were all good, and some of them excellent.

"On Wednesday, examinations were continued in studies pursued by the college preparatory classes as follows: Primary Preparatory, through Harkness' Introductory Book. This was composed of exercises on the Latin verb, and the forming of Latin sentences; the result of one year's study. Middle Preparatory in Latin, Cæsar, translations. Greek, Boise's Lessons, consisting of exercises on declension, conjugation, pronouncing, and writing Greek sentences. Algebra to radical quantities, involving the interpretation of negative quantities, the general theory of equations, interest, complex fractions, mixed numbers, and problems containing as many as seven unknown quantities. The members of this class have pursued Latin two years, and Algebra and Greek one. They will spend one year more in the preparatory, before admission to college. This is a splendid class.

"On Wednesday evening, the fourth anniversary of the Union Literary Society was held. The whole exercises were so good that we deem it invidious to discriminate. We hazard nothing in saying that it equaled, in every respect, any exhibition of the whites, of equal age and opportunities, held in this city or elsewhere, and excelled in some particulars.

"On Thursday, the freshman class in college was examined in Virgil's Æneid, Geometry, and Botany, the latter with the sophomores. The sophomore class was examined in the De Amicitia and De Senectute of Cicero, and Livy, in Latin; in Homer's Iliad, in Greek, and Botany, in all of which the members of this class acquitted themselves with marked ability, showing conclusively that the people of the colored race are capable of acquiring and mastering the most difficult studies, and attaining the highest culture given by our best colleges. The promptness and beauty of their translations, together with their accuracy, showing a knowledge of the structure of the language as well as the thought of the classics they translated, was most gratifying to the friends of education, as well as to their instructors. So, too, in botany, pursued but a single term, the examination was most satisfactory in the knowledge of the terminology of the science, the principles of classification, and the ability to analyze plants, explain their structure, determine their order and species in the vegetable world.

"The success of this University is secured, and its future usefulness assured. It has an excellent corps of teachers, who are devoted to their work, and have unbounded faith in the capabilities of the colored race for the highest mental and moral cultivation. Fisk University is bound to be a power in the land."

Prof. Spence writes:

"The examination of a class of seventeen, who graduated from the common school normal course, was an interesting feature of the exercises. A very important part of our work is, and will be, for a long time to come, the preparation of teachers for the common schools. These will be wanted in great numbers in our own State as soon as the new school law is in operation, as they are now in other States. Tens of thousands of pupils will be ill or well taught, according to the instruction given here.

"Although the members of this class are as yet at the threshold of a liberal education, still their addresses and essays at graduation were good; and it was an interesting sight as they received their certificates, recommending them as qualified to teach common schools; for indeed they were the result of many years of trial, from the alphabet up, and of many struggles and sacrifices on the part of themselves and their friends.

"No class was admitted to college this year because the preparatory course has been increased in length. The class that would otherwise have been admitted is the most promising one we have ever had, in numbers and scholarship. The anniversary exercises of the literary society are pronounced the best ever held.

"The most encouraging of all our exercises, in some respects, was the examination of the Sophomore class in De Amicitia, De Senectute, Homer, and Botany. No one who attended it can doubt the ability of the class, at least, to go through college. We begin to feel we are doing a little true college work, and that the name we bear as a University will ere long signify, not that which shall be, but that which is.

"The vocal music during these exercises was in part by the whole school, and in part by the university choir. Among the pieces rendered by the latter were the 'Gloria in Excelsis' from Mozart's Twelfth Mass, 'Seek ye the Lord,' from Baumbach, and selections from the Opera Chorus Book.

"On the night of our social reunion, we were favored with music also from the Post Jubilee Singing Troupe and the Young Men's Excelsior Brass Band, both colored, and making rapid proficiency.

"We all feel that a good year's progress has been made by this institution. This view of the subject is also held in the community here. The superintendent of city schools recommends ours as the best colored school in the State and equal to the white schools. The superintendent of county schools assures me that our students are doing good work as teachers in the schools under his charge, and advises the county superintendents of the State to send here for teachers. The State Superintendent is entirely cordial and the Governor also. The tone of the press also shows that the current of public opinion is setting in the same direction. Let us thank God and take courage.

"One difficulty is felt more and more—the poverty of our pupils, which throws them out of regular courses of study. After repeatedly dropping into the class below, the pupil becomes discouraged and gives up. But even this dark cloud has a silver lining. Scarcely had the last exercises closed when the most of our advanced pupils were whirling away as fast as the cars could take them to their schools, and by the next Monday morning the most of these were teaching. They are held as the fortunate ones, and those who failed to get schools as the ones to be pitied; and yet I can but feel sorry for them, these hot months, in a southern climate, sweltering in school-rooms after the fatigue of a year of study. But they will do much good when they teach, and grow strong themselves by overcoming difficulties. There will be aid needed for them next year after all they can do, but who will grudge it when they put forth such efforts for themselves? Many are as yet incapable of teaching, and several of those capable will fail to get schools, or will get them for only a part of the vacation. Some are teaching subscription schools, and will get only what pay they can out of the poor and irresponsible parents of the children they teach. Others, and the greater portion, have gone to Mississippi and Alabama and other distant places, and their traveling expenses will be heavy; and they must be back early in the autumn or lose their standing in their classes. So aid will be needed after all their heroic struggles, and this aid, we are sure, the Christian public of the North will give as liberally as they have done heretofore."

THE JUBILEE SINGERS.

The net earnings of the year up to the 12th of April, when the Singers sailed for England, was a little over $20,000 above the amount required to pay passage and start the company abroad. This gave a net result of $40,000 for the whole period of their labor in this country.

The success of the Singers in their mission abroad is abundantly assured, as the following extracts show.

Their first introduction was through that noble friend of humanity, the Earl of Shaftesbury, who, as President of the Freedmen's Missions Aid Society, issued invitations to the most distinguished persons in London to meet them. Among those reported as present we note the names of the Duke and Duchess of Argyll, Arthur Kinnaird, M.P., and others of like position. Of this first meeting, the Standard of May 7th says,

"Let those who wish to hear what some of the 'Jubilee Singers' can do to put the negroes of their clime before us, go and hear them sing their plaintive, wild plantation hymns and melodies, and when they come away, with the recollection that some of the very singers who have so delighted them have been bought and sold like sheep to various masters over and over again, they will, we think, hold strong convictions that slavery was not stamped out an hour too soon. . . . .

"The concert given yesterday was entirely private, admission only being gained by complimentary tickets. Yet the novel nature of the concert, as well as the reputation as singers the band have gained, drew an audience that before three o'clock filled densely every part of the large room of Willis's Rooms. . . . The programme was chiefly made up of those peculiar musical hymns that so faithfully reflect the enthusiastic and even ecstatic nature of the negroes of the Southern States, and which, having been wrought into their very being during slavery, still hold permanent sway over their feelings. . . . The entertainment commenced with a hymn, 'Steal away to Jesus,' which was given with great pathos. The Lord's prayer, which was sung to a Gregorian chant, was equally well given; but one might as well call those solemn strains a negro melody as the 'Kyrie Eleison' of Mozart's Twelfth Mass. One of the best was 'Turn back, Pharoah's army,' which was perfectly characteristic and redolent of the negroes of the South: so also was 'Didn't my Lord deliver Daniel?' and 'Keep me from sinking down.' . . . In short, the concert was a most marked success."

The Rock of May 9th gave a very interesting report of the concert, in the course of which it said,

"We never saw an audience more riveted, nor a more thorough heart-entertainment. Men of hoar hairs as well as the younger in the assembly were moved even to tears as they listened with rapt attention to some of the identical slave-songs which these emancipated ones rendered with a power and a pathos perfectly indescribable. If, in brief, we might give a faint idea of what it is utterly impossible to depict, we would adopt three words—soft, sweet, simple. The audience was furnished with a beautiful example of what the human voice is capable, and that, too, after having been long subjected to the most painful of privations, even such as are identified with all the untold horrors of slavery; nay, it is evident that the former condition of these rescued ones contributes in no small degree to that which now gives heart and tone and intense reality to their present most telling and attractive performances."

The Record of May 9th, after quoting from Rev. Henry Ward Beecher's letter to Dr. Allon, said,

"The concert of yesterday realized this description of the character and effect of the music and singing. The burden was the casting on the Lord of the cares and sorrows of a state of bondage, with the keen realization of the freedom which is of grace. Song and sermon were, indeed, combined in the strange weird pieces, which it is difficult to describe to those who were not there. . . . The general effect may be summed up in the words of a letter from George Macdonald—'There is something inexpressibly touching in their wonderfully sweet, round, bell voices, in the way in which they sing, so artless in its art, yet so consummate in expression, and in the mingling of the pathetic with the unconscious comic in the rude hymns shot here and there with a genuine golden thread of poetry.'

"On the conclusion of the concert, the Earl of Shaftesbury said he felt assured that he was entitled to express to the 'Jubilee Singers' the thanks of that assembly for the delightful entertainment which they had given. (Cheers.) And in the name of the meeting he would also convey to those excellent young people a cordial wish that they might succeed in the noble enterprise which had brought them to this country. (Renewed cheers.)"

The English Independent gives a glowing account of the advent of the singers; and thus reports their singing before the Queen.

"Quite unexpectedly, the colored band had the opportunity afforded them of singing before the Queen on Wednesday afternoon. By invitation of the Duke of Argyll, they went to Argyll Lodge, and during their stay her Majesty called on a visit to the Duchess. At the Queen's request, the singers appeared before her and sang, and she expressed herself much gratified with their performance. Among other distinguished persons present were the Duke and Duchess of Northumberland and Dean Stanley. We observe that the Queen lunched with the Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne on Wednesday, where she would probably hear of what was going on at Argyll Lodge, and, it may be, timed her visit accordingly. It is remarkable that this company of negro singers should have vaulted at once to the highest circles in the land."

The London Tonic Sol-Fa Reporter, a musical journal of high critical character, publishes, in its own peculiar method, the music of six songs of the Jubilee Singers, and gives editorially an elaborate and highly appreciative report of one of their concerts. We copy a few paragraphs:

"Willis's Rooms is a favorable place for sound. A large anti-slavery audience is assembled to greet the singers. The Duke and Duchess of Argyll and the Earl of Shaftesbury are among the number. The singers walk quietly on to the platform and fill the row of chairs at the back, one gentleman bowing as he takes his seat in response to the applause of the assembly. They are not so black as we expected, and they are not dressed in the gay colors which are falsely supposed to distinguish the negro taste. They are simply eleven young Christian ladies and gentlemen.

"Their first song 'Steal away to Jesus,' was sung slowly. The first chords came floating on our senses like gentle fairy music, and they were followed by the unison phrase, 'Steal away——to Jesus,' delivered with exquisite precision of time and accent; then came the soft chords and bold unison again, followed by the touching, throbbing cadence, 'I hain't got long to stay here.' Next follows the loud, lofty trumpet call in unison, 'My Lord calls me; the trumpet sounds it in my soul, I hain't got long to stay here.' But it seems as though the angels also were speaking to the sufferer, for we hear again those beautiful chords, delivered with double pianissimo, whispering to the soul, 'Steal away to Jesus.' Let our readers remember that all thoughts of the grotesqueness of the language used were banished from our minds by the simple and intense sincerity of the singers. . . .

"The next song, 'Turn back, Pharaoh's army,' relates to that ancient history of the deliverance of the children of Israel from bondage, which was a constant source of consolation to the slaves. No wonder that they were never tired of it. The chorus was delivered with such spirit, with such grand crescendos, with such bright sforzandos, and the last syllable 'Hallelu' so sweetly dwelt upon; they sang with such a will the 'turning back of Pharoah's army,' that we thought they would have no force to spare for the last verse. But when they came to the 'drowning of old Pharaoh's army,' oh! what a double fortissimo they gave! And such a fortissimo it was, not an overstrained, dissonant clattering shout, such as we have heard from choirs of no ill repute in England, Scotland, and Wales, but a fortissimo as pure and true as it was strong. We have heard nothing like it since the Cologne choir sang, with seven times the volume because with seven times the number, 'Lutzow's wild hunt.' Oh! the joy of those slaves when Pharaoh's army was drowned!

"Next followed the wildest song of all, 'Didn't my Lord deliver Daniel?' It is in the Doric or Ray Mode, but don't let our Welsh and Scotch friends suppose that they will therefore be equal to the singing of it. They must first get the easy quick tongue of the Negro race. It would be impossible to describe the spirit and passion and fire with which this piece was delivered. The emphasis with which the voices clung to the very name of Daniel—the man who wrestled in prayer, who was faithful in trial, was miraculously delivered—showed what a hold that story had taken on the imagination of the slaves.

"Lord Shaftesbury said at the beginning that we must not expect artistic singing. But if the most delicate expression, the most perfect unity of attack, and a very beautiful quality of voice are not artistic, what is? It was only in the two or three solo songs of modern type (introduced for variety with piano accompaniment) that we noticed any thing short of high artistic excellence.

"Now blessings on these brave young students of the Fisk University, and may we and they together, some day, when we are far away from sorrow and sin, 'ring those charming bells.'"

Thus far their introduction to the nobility and royalty of the country; now for a brief description, from a private pen, of their introduction to one of the ecclesiastical bodies, the venerable members of which seemed to have rivaled or surpassed the most enthusiastic of enthusiastic Americans:

"The Singers had the pleasure of singing before the Congregational Union of England and Wales, and the way in which they were received can be called by no other name than an ovation. When they sang 'John Brown's body lies mouldering in the grave,' the scene of enthusiasm was only paralleled by the scene in the Coliseum in Boston, when the English Band played the Star-spangled Banner. The venerable body of divines forgot their dignity, swung their hats, waved their handkerchiefs, and in some cases caught up the plates from the table (for it was just after the dinner) and shook hem with screaming accompaniments, in the air. A vote of thanks was tendered by the body to the singers, but that was altogether too cold a way to express their feelings. 'Take up a contribution, take up a contribution—pass around the hat,' were shouts that came from all parts of the house. Such a scene of confusion is seldom witnessed. Every body became chairman of the meeting, and it was only after a vigorous pounding of the table, and repeated assurances from the authorized chairman that a collection would be taken, that order was restored. Between £30 and £40 were contributed.

"This scene was almost exactly repeated when they sang, a few nights later, before the National Temperance Alliance."

We copy from an article in the Congregationalist:

"Spurgeon preached. His text was, 'It is done as Thou hast commanded, and yet there is room.' As he closed, he said, 'Now, I do not know whether you will approve or not of what I am going to do; but it seems to me it is the right thing, and so I will take the risk. The Jubilee Singers, from America, are present. After the morning service, I heard them sing a piece, "O brothers! don't stay away, for my Lord says there's room enough in the heavens for you," and I found my tears coming, and looking at my deacons, I found their eyes very moist, too. That song suggested my text and my sermon to-night. Now, as a part of the sermon, I am going to ask them to sing it; for they preach in their singing, and may the Spirit of God set home this word to some to-night—some who may remember their singing if they forget my preaching.' The singing followed. It was done so becomingly, so modestly, with such clearness and power, yet such softness and sweetness of voice, that every one of the six or seven thousand present heard every word, and some of them were moved to tears. Some, forgetting themselves, broke out into spontaneous applause, with clapping of hands at the close.

"Mr. Spurgeon, at the beginning of his sermon, had given notice of their concert in his church on Wednesday evening. He had the good sense to make no further allusion to it, and only added—'O brothers! don't stay away; the Spirit and Bride say, Come; for all things are ready.' The benediction was pronounced, and the congregation separated. The remarks made as the audience reached the door indicated the impression which had been made. One common sort of a woman, three days afterward, pretty well represented it, when we overheard her saying to another, 'I've been here near four years, and I have never before heard any thing the like o' that!'

"But Wednesday night came, and that was the great hour of their triumph. The bills announced, 'Doors open at seven o'clock.' But long before that, the crowd around the gates was such that they were compelled to open them to avoid a street blockade. We arrived at the church at ten minutes past seven, and with difficulty pressed our way, and already more than 4000 persons were in their seats. At half-past seven, every available spot for sitting or standing seemed to be occupied. If we ever saw 7000 persons there, (which we somewhat doubt,) they were there last evening. Mr. Spurgeon presided.

It was evident, before the singers began, that they were to have an enthusiastic reception and a high time. The result fully vindicated the confidence of our expectations. Their second piece was 'Go down, Moses.' The encore brought out, 'Did not old Pharaoh get lost?' The applause was long continued, and barely fell short of insisting upon a repetition. Mr. Spurgeon's humor flashed out all the way through. When 'Roll, Jordan, roll,' came in its turn, finding on the programme the words,

> "'O brother! you ought to have been there;
> Yes, my Lord,
> A sitting in the kingdom
> To hear Jordan roll,'

he said, 'Either there is a deep mystic meaning in these words, which I am not able to fathom; or, as I incline to think, here is a suggestion for you, Congregational brethren, that you ought, as you are "a sitting in the kingdom," to hear the Jordan roll a little more distinctly. My impression is, that we Baptists know more about that than the rest of you.' Of course, these happy hits were well received by all. The good-nature which overflowed so bountifully was so sincere and manifest that nobody could take exception.

"The whole concert was a succession of triumphs. Five or six times they were called out by encores, and always did better the second time than they did the first. Even after they had sung the last piece on their programme, they were called back, the whole congregation refusing to leave, although they had been sitting two or three full hours."

Rev. Newman Hall, writing to the Independent, thus describes their reception at Mr. Gladstone's:

"Our Jubilee friends will not soon forget the interesting breakfast-party given yesterday by Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone, at their private residence on Carlton House Terrace, nor will those forget it who had the pleasure of meeting them there. They had already sung at the premier's, in the presence of the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Czarowitz and the Czarevna of Russia, the Rt. Hon. John Bright, and a distinguished party of nobility. But, on that occasion, they came to entertain the guests. Yesterday, they were themselves the guests. I had feared that the party must have been put off, for I had just read in the Daily News that Mr. Gladstone was lying ill at Chiselhurst. But as I was at the door, a carriage drove up, and Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone alighted. They had come up from Chiselhurst on purpose to meet their negro friends. Mr. Gladstone looked pale and worn. He had, by his physican's order, excused himself from attending the great banquet to be given that evening by the lord mayor to the ministry, at the Mansion House; and he might with great propriety have rested at Chiselhurst and put off his guests. But he rose early, traveled some twenty-five miles by rail, and then drove to his home, which he reached just before the Rev. Mr. Pike and the Jubilee Singers, and so in time to greet them.

"In addition to the Jubilee party of fifteen, there were present Lord and Lady Cavendish, Lord Lyttleton, the Right Hon. W. E. Forster, M.P., Cabinet Minister, the Hon. Arthur Kinnaird, M.P., the dean of the Queen's Chapel Royal, together with Mrs. Gladstone, two Miss Gladstones, Mr. W. H. Gladstone, M.P., and others.

"After breakfast, Mr. Gladstone showed to his guests some of the principal objects of interest in his collection of art treasures, explaining them in his own fascinating style. Then, all the party being gathered in the drawing-room, the Jubilee Singers entertained us with their wonderful music. First we had 'John Brown.' I never heard them sing it as they did yesterday. It was not the music alone, but the features of the singers also which made it so impressive. They sang as beings inspired. Their whole forms seemed to dilate. Their eyes flashed; their countenances told of reverence and joy and gratitude to God. Never shall I forget Mr. Gladstone's rapt, enthusiastic attention. His form was bent forward, his eyes were riveted, all the intellect and soul of his great nature seemed expressed in his countenance; and when they finished, he kept saying, 'Isn't it wonderful? I never heard any thing like it!' After this, they gave us that queer medley, 'Oh! them great trials,' with the comical assertion of Baptist, Independent, Presbyterian preferences, and the grand lesson of Christianity versus sectarianism. The tender, thrilling words and music of 'Oh! how I love Jesus!' brought tears to the eyes of the listeners; and when they closed with the Lord's prayer, all the company, led by Mr. Gladstone, reverently stood with bowed heads in worship."

The Hull News of August 2d says,

"It is somewhat singular, but very appropriate, that these emancipated slaves should make their first public appearance out of London in the home of Wilberforce, whose name will live so long as the recollection or the history of slavery endures. Surely the earnestness with which the entire band went through the well-selected programme was the result of their nearness to the home of Wilberforce, the great liberator of the negro slave. The Jubilee Singers were introduced to the audience by the Rev. W. C. Preston, the pastor of Hope-street Church, who briefly stated their object. The programme consisted of negro compositions, opening with 'Steal away to Jesus,' in which the Lord's Prayer was introduced. The words were exceedingly simple, but the music contained some of the most exquisite harmonies, and the several voices blended together sweetly. The large audience, whilst this introductory verse was being sung, were breathlessly silent but scarcely had the concluding strains of the melody died away than there arose a simultaneous applause, which testified unmistakably of the delight with which these simple yet pathetically touching strains had been listened to. The first part of the programme was varied by the introduction of a soul-stirring composition, which the secretary (Mr. Pike) stated had done more for negro emancipation than any thing else, 'John Brown's body lies mouldering in the grave.' The singing of these words produced quite an excitement, and had it been given in a building devoted to secular purposes, it would have called forth loud cheering. A sympathetic chord seemed to vibrate alike through audience and singers, and it was not therefore surprising that in a somewhat quiet but unmistakable way the singers were recalled. Although there was much of sadness in the refrain of many of the selections, yet the programme was not wanting in quaint compositions which called forth alike smiles and tears."

The money earned by the Jubilee Singers has already paid for a permanent site for Fisk University, and furnishes the means thus far for the building of Jubilee Hall. The following statement respecting the site purchased, and the picture of the building being erected, we are sure, will be full of interest.

"JUBILEE HALL, FISK UNIVERSITY, NASHVILLE, TENN.

"We do not know much about Gen. Gillam, but we have just made a visit to the fort named in his honor. It is on the site that has been purchased for the location of Jubilee Hall, Fisk University. We believe there never was any fighting done there, and these ramparts can be fitly leveled to receive a building won by the pathetic songs of ex-slaves, and designed for the enlightenment and elevation of their race, whose bondage once darkened our fair land. No memory of blood or of battle will cling to the spot. It will henceforth be consecrated to education and religion, and the fort will be forgotten in the University.

"The interest taken by many thousands of persons in the Jubilee Singers, and in their heroic attempt to purchase these grounds and to erect this building, will justify a somewhat full description.

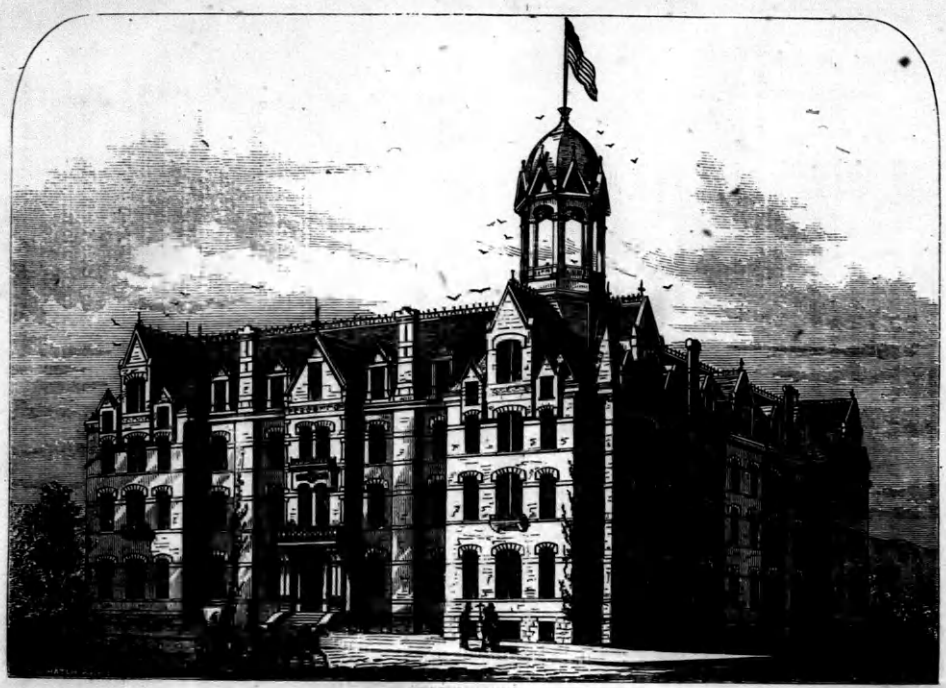
"The fort is situated a mile and a quarter from the beautiful state-house in Nashville. It was a cold winter morning when we drove out there—the ground was covered with snow, and clouds and mists obscured the sky—unpromising auspices for our visit; but before we left the grounds, the sun came out brightly, and we had a view of the city, of rolling lands, of distant forests and mountains, such as it has seldom been our pleasure to look upon. When the summer sun warms this landscape and adorns these vales with a carpet of grass, these forests with foliage, and robes these mountains in azure, the scene will be one of rare beauty. The main angle of the building points almost directly to the capitol, while the city of Nashville sloping on all sides from that central edifice is in more or less distinct view from both of the principal fronts of Jubilee Hall. The city view from the Hall is fine, but the distant as well as near scenery on the other sides is even more pleasant. Indeed, there will be no window in Jubilee Hall that will not command an exceedingly beautiful outlook.

"The whole tract of land purchased for Fisk University embraces twenty-five acres, occupying a ridge or plateau, having such slopes as to secure unobstructed views on both sides, and to give perfect drainage. Jubilee Hall will occupy the short arm of an L, and the future buildings will extend along the ridge and make the other arm; the inside of the angle looking toward the city, the outside commanding the distant landscape we have attempted to describe. 'Beautiful for situation' can hereafter be the refrain of all singers in Fisk University.

"As to Jubilee Hall, the artist has saved us the trouble of description. We need only give dimensions. The principal or south front is 128, and the east front is 145 feet long. The greater length of the latter gives the parlor a proper location, and suitable dimensions to the dining-room. The building is to be three stories above the basement; is to be erected of brick with stone trimmings. Its architectural perfections are due to the taste of Mr. S. D. Hatch, No. 111 Broadway, New-York. The ground-plans show a fine arrangement of public and private rooms—a dining-room that will accommodate two hundred boarders, and dormitories for one hundred and seventy persons.

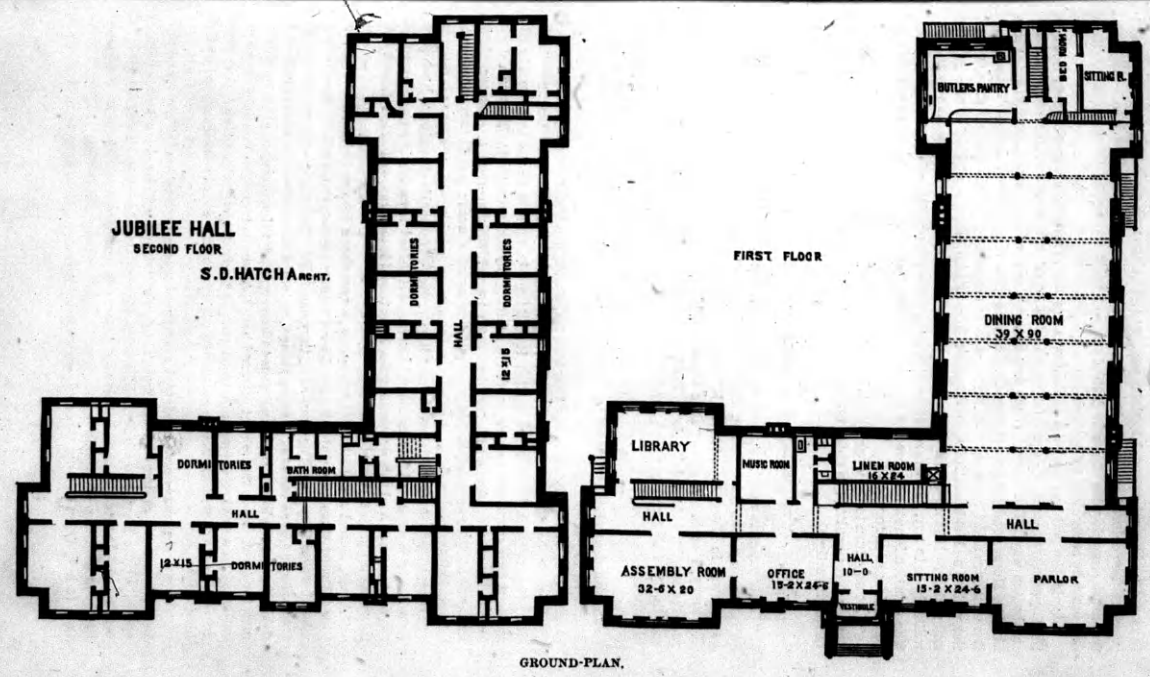
"The honor of purchasing and paying for these lands at a cost of $20,000, and of erecting this building, when completed and paid for, will be due, under God, to the Jubilee Singers.

"NASHVILLE, Jan. 28, 1873.



"THE EDUCATIONAL WORK IN FISK UNIVERSITY.

"Fisk University began with the alphabet in 1867. It teaches it still. What has it accomplished for education in six years? This the donors to the institution have a right to know.



"In the first place, it has five courses of study definitely arranged, subject to such modifications as experience and progress may suggest. The courses are: college, college-preparatory, higher normal, common school normal, and theological, with students in each. This does not include primary and intermediate schools, nor music or book-keeping; neither the Home, which must be classed with the educational forces of the institution, for it educates in the most important of all things—every-day life, with its manners, morals, and habits.

"Theology, as it is ordinarily studied, lies yet in the future, for it is the culmination of all courses of study; but already instruction has been given to many in the ministry, or preparing for it. For the present, the Bible, the spelling-book, and sermonizing must all be studied together. A ministry that can only read the Bible is a great improvement upon one that can not read at all. This course is, therefore, so arranged as to permit the pursuits of common English or higher studies while preparing for the ministry.

"Turning now to the college work, what has been done? In the first place, a seed has been planted among the people. Its growth may be slow, but it will be sure, and its fruit good. It must contend against poverty and ignorance and prejudice, but it will prevail. The colored man must have as complete an education as the white man. The two must struggle with the same difficulties, and grow strong by the same toil. This fact must be recognized by both classes.

"Again, the pathway has been broken by a few feet, from the alphabet nearly through the Sophomore year in college. Others will follow, till the narrow path becomes a broad and beaten way. The colored youth may now aspire to a height attainable by any. From his lips, Homer and Virgil will sound no less sweetly than from those of others, and Demosthenes and Cicero will lose none of their eloquence. The problems of mathematics will be no less beautiful when demonstrated by him, nor the laws of science in mind and matter. History will open its pages to him, and literature unlock its treasures, as willingly as to any. In the republic of letters there is no distinction of race or caste The question is now answered to the unprejudiced; all avenues of knowledge must open to black men as to white.

"Let us return to the work Fisk University is doing to prepare teachers for the colored masses just permitted to enter the field of knowledge. The following statistics will aid in this investigation.

"TEACHERS AMONG THE FISK UNIVERSITY STUDENTS.

"Of its students who have been here during the past year, 50 have taught schools more or less during that time; and of these, 32, who are now in the institution, have taught as follows: in Tennessee, 16; in Mississippi, 10; in Arkansas, 4; and in Alabama and Kentucky, 1 each. Taught public schools, 25; private schools, 7. Whole number of months taught, 114; total salary, $4377.60; average per teacher, $136.80; average per month, $38.40. Superintended Sunday-schools, 24; taught in Sunday-schools, 3; pupils in Sunday-schools, 1189.

"Reckoning that the eighteen still absent from the institution have taught five months each, with the same average as in other things above, the total is as follows: Pupils taught in day-school, 2607; in Sunday-school, 1775; total salary, $7833.60; months taught, 204; or twenty years and four months, calling a school year ten months.

"It would be difficult to estimate even approximately the amount of teaching done in all by the students of Fisk University; it could not be more than the truth to take fifty, at about four months a year, as an average during the six years past. This would give, in round numbers: whole number of schools taught, 300; average attendance, 15,000; time taught, 1220 months, or 122 years, of ten months each; pupils taught in Sunday-school, 10,000.

"We see from these statistics the vast importance of normal instruction. Each person thus taught is supposed to teach fifty others. Fifty-fold is certainly a good harvest for the seed sown. And this new seed again is scattered into many, and often distant fields, to spring up in its turn and produce a harvest.

"Again, almost every teacher of day-schools becomes a laborer in Sabbath-school, and four-fifths of them superintendents. These young people, too, are leaders of community wherever they go. They can read, they can write, they can compute numbers, they are looked up to as teachers in many things, as temperance, chastity, observance of the Sabbath, and the like. If education is to be sought, for the power it gives to influence men for good, is not that object attained here? A common or even limited English education gives a teacher among the freed people a greater superiority, and, therefore, a greater power over them than a completed college course does in an educated community.

"We see also the benefit conferred upon the students themselves. They are admitted to the honorable calling of teaching. They gain strength of character by assuming responsibility. They gain money. The value of this latter is by no means to be lightly estimated. It gives them and their race respect in community. Thus far this money has been used to a great extent to carry their education still farther. What is better than to help a man to help himself? Friends to help them, they have few. Slavery left the youth in orphanage to a degree sad to contemplate, for it had destroyed the family. A vast multitude were motherless, and still many more fatherless. They never knew parental care, restraint, or love. No father, no mother, no sister, no brother, what should they do, and how struggle up to intelligence and competence? The way seemed long and difficult till they could teach. Now it is easier, although not entirely smoothed. A four or five months' school in the hot summer of this warm climate, occupying all the vacation, and one or two months into the first term of the next year, is not a great rest to the student, weary with his studies and needing relaxation, nor an excellent preparation for another year of study; but he undergoes these toils cheerfully, for his own education and the good of others. Who would not lend a helping hand if he could, to such a youth in time of need? O the heroic struggles of these young people!

"A. K. SPENCE."

"At the Annual Meeting of the Trustees, a beginning was made in the organization of the University Faculty. The following appointments were made:

"Edmund A. Ware, A.M., President, Professor of History; Thomas N. Chase, A.M. Professor of Greek; Rev. George W. Walker, A.M., Professor of Mathematics; William A. Bristoll, A.M., Professor of Latin; Rev. C. W. Francis, Professor of Theology.

"Authority was also given to the Executive Committee to secure a professor for the normal department. The annual examinations were held June 20th, 23d, and 24th, and were highly satisfactory. On Wednesday, the 25th, the first class, consisting of four young ladies, was graduated from the Normal Department. The public exercises of the occasion were held in the Friendship Baptist Church, which was filled with an eager and attentive audience. The essays of the graduating class would have done credit to any class of graduates from a normal school. There were also several orations delivered by young men from the advanced classes, which showed thought and scholarship, and were spoken with unusual force and earnestness.

"Secretary E. M. Cravath delivered the address to the graduating class. Secretary Whipple, who was visiting Atlanta for the first time, gave an impressive and instructive address to the students on the early anti-slavery movement, and the events which led to the formation of the American Missionary Association. This was especially interesting to the audience as showing the providence of God, which was laying the foundations of Atlanta University years before the slaves were made free.

"Rev. Barnabas Root, who has been visiting the schools of the Association in the South, preparatory to returning to Africa, was also present, and gave a very pleasant and interesting address.

"The Legislature of Georgia, at its last session, made an appropriation of $8000 to the University, which shows the regard that is had for the institution in the State. There is great need of $25,000 to complete the Ladies' Hall, and give more room for boarders and for school purposes. The portion of the building already erected cost $25,000, and is without a name. Who will complete the hall and give it a name? $25,000 thus invested will return most liberal yearly dividends."

The communication below is a review in general of the progress and wants of the Atlanta University, but brings to view the qualifications of the pupils as teachers, and the great demand for them.

"The examinations and anniversary of this institution occurred June 20th to 25th. A class of four was graduated from the normal department, and eight passed to their Sophomore year in college. After four years of successful effort, the laborers begin to see the first-fruits appear in this first graduating class. How successful the school is, may be judged from the fact that the buildings, erected at a cost of $60,000, were crowded to their utmost capacity with pupils—even the attic being called into use during a part of the winter.

"The attendance has been nearly fifty per cent greater than during any former year, and applications for admission next year have already been made by many new students from distant points. Indeed, it seems to be certain that many must be turned away next year for want of room to receive them.

"The examination showed the proficiency of both scholars and teachers. It seems to be acknowledged that there is no better school in the South. Its pupils go before the various boards appointed to examine teachers, and frequently win the schools in a contest with white competitors. Teachers are sent for from all parts of Georgia. So great is the demand that at the close of the school nearly a hundred of the students were already engaged as teachers. This demand for teachers is steadily increasing, and is likely to increase for years to come. To meet this demand, it is proposed to make the Normal Department more of a specialty than ever before.

"But, besides this work of furnishing teachers, the University must meet another demand. As schools have multiplied and prospered, their advanced students are demanding a higher education to fit them for the professions. To meet this demand, the trustees organized a permanent college faculty at their annual meeting, and adopted a regular course of study, both collegiate and preparatory.

"But while the results of past work are so encouraging, and the outlook for the future seems hopeful, there is another side to the picture. The grounds about the buildings are not fenced in, and are covered with remains of earthworks erected during the war. This gives the place a desolate appearance. Add to this the fact that the buildings are on the summit of a hill, and are without any heating apparatus, except stoves for the school-rooms, and things look somewhat bleak. Last winter was a cold one, and Atlanta is more than a thousand feet above the sea; what wonder, then, that the students suffered in rooms without fires? It is proposed to heat the buildings throughout by steam, but that will cost several thousand dollars. Besides this, there is no apparatus, either philosophical or chemical; the buildings are not large enough to meet present necessities, and the college has no endowment, except for its library. Here is work for some one besides teachers. Able teachers enough are readily found; what is now wanted is givers. Students, teachers, and faith are supplied; it only remains to supply the means. No man can estimate the value of the interests at stake in these efforts to educate our new citizens of the South. Their value is simply incalculable. And this Christian college, with its 250 students, gathered from eight States, is of no small importance in the work. May it find many friends and helpers, and grow in the future as it has in the past."

Talladega College has two large substantial brick buildings—one, Foster Hall, for the girls' dormitories and the boarding department; and Swayne Hall, for school-rooms.

A most urgent need, now, is a third hall, costing $25,000, giving dormitory rooms for boys.

Sec. Whipple, who attended the recent examination at Talladega, furnishes the following sketch of the exercises:

"'Beautiful for situation' is Talladega College; and if there is any thing in pleasant scenery and tasteful surroundings favorable to mental and moral culture, the good progress of the students here will be more easily accounted for.

"The last public examination of this institution commenced Tuesday, June 17th, and closed on the afternoon of the 20th. The first day was taken up with the primary and intermediate departments. During the remaining three days, there were thirty-one different class examinations, including three of one hour each in the theological department under the care of Rev. Mr. Brown.

"We were very favorably impressed with the thoroughness of the examination, and the general accuracy of the students. There were no leading questions given to them, suggesting the proper answers, but they were furnished with a topic, a problem, a rule, an exercise, which they were required to solve, explain, or elucidate in their own way, and in their own language, and the manner they did it showed a mental furnishment, and a facility of comparison and combination, that bore ample testimony to their own ability, and the thoroughness of their training.

"Those who know any thing of the educational work among the colored people need not be told that they are seldom at fault in studies exercising mainly the memory; but many, if not most, have doubted their ability in studies requiring the exercise of the reasoning faculty. There was here, however, no failure. On the contrary, that which made the most marked impression on those who were familiar with schools in the North, twenty and twenty-five years ago, was the well-sustained examinations, in English Grammar, and Algebra, showing a power of analysis, under the circumstances, really surprising. In this respect, the examinations in English Grammar, or rather in the study of the English language, its structure, its composition, its analysis, and its rules, far surpassed any thing which the writer of this enjoyed at their stage of advancement. The impression was strong that, if such discipline and thoroughness in the study of the best English writers could be continued a few years, it would go far toward giving the English student the advantages generally supposed to be obtained only by the study of the dead languages.

"The junior preparatory classes in Latin and Greek also sustained themselves well, the exceptions being in some of the more advanced, suggesting the lack of thoroughness in earlier training, and the possibility that they had been pressed forward too rapidly.

"THEOLOGICAL DEPARTMENT.

"The pressing need of better ministers in the South has led to the early opening of this department, for those already in the ministry, or who must be educated for it, if at all, without a college course. There have been six young or middle-aged men under instruction during the last year. They came from three different denominations. They are evidently deriving great advantages from the theological course, which it is endeavored to adapt to their situation.

"The grand feature of a working church in connection with this institution is a very gratifying one. As heretofore, every effort is made to have its members actively engaged in real missionary work."

Instructors.—Mr. M. A. Warren, Principal, Charleston, S. C. Assistants: Mrs. M. A. Warren, Charleston, S. C.; Mrs. Jennie S. Spencer, Blodget Mills, N. Y.; Miss A. C. Turner, Townsend Harbor, Mass.; Miss Agnes Duncan, Wayland, Mass.; Mrs. C. V. Cuttino, Charleston, S. C.; Miss H. F. Miller, Charleston, S. C.; Miss Alice B. Moore, Huntington, Ind.; Miss Martha Scott, Charleston, S. C. Matron of Mission Home: Miss S. M. Proctor, Townsend Harbor, Mass.

Value of school property, $20,000; number of pupils, 407; number in Sabbath-school, 341.

We quote from the report of the principal:

"The anniversary of the school occurred in March. The exercises were held in the chapel of the Institute, which, it is scarcely necessary to say, was crowded with the friends of the graduates and of the school. The graduating class, this year, numbered thirteen—four gentlemen, nine ladies; their ages ranging from sixteen to twenty-two or more. Of these thirteen graduates, five or six are to achieve, if possible, a collegiate education; the remainder, with possibly one exception, look forward to teaching as their duty and destiny. By next fall, these will be at work diligently multiplying the good bestowed by our Association. It is an inspiring thought, as well as a solemn one, to the teacher of such a school as this, that miniature schools must inevitably spring up round about. 'How do you open your school, boys?' to two who were teaching down on the Savannah, and were at home on a brief visit. 'Oh! we do just as you do here; we sing, and read, and pray, you know.' Another testifies his allegiance by naming his school after me. He is made superintendent of the Sunday-school, and when political preference is offered him, turns from it with the air of a man who can not afford to spend his time in making money. He goes to Atlanta University, next year, and I predict for him a useful future.

"Three others who have been teaching—two in the country and one in this school—have returned this year to graduate, and in so doing have incurred debts amounting, in the aggregate, to $135, which amount, by kindness of friends in the North, I have been able to loan them. They go to work this fall, determined to cancel this indebtedness as soon as possible.

"Of the graduates of last year all have been teaching, (where ill-health has not prevented,) with the exception of those who have gone to higher schools to pursue collegiate or technical courses of study. Two have taught in this school this year, to my entire acceptance, while another attempted to do so, and, owing partly or wholly to ill-health, failed. Two others have returned from their country schools, and their faces look as if they had come from successes. From the employers of a few of our students, unsolicited testimonials of the most flattering character have been received. Some of these were from 'old-time' Carolinians, who would not be apt to praise a colored teacher unless the encomium were fairly won."

3. Brewer Normal School, Greenwood, S. C.

Teacher.—Mr. J. D. Backenstose, Geneva, N. Y.

Value of school property, $4000; number of pupils, 85; number in Sabbath-school, 50.

"BREWER ORPHAN ASYLUM, NOW BREWER NORMAL SCHOOL.

"By the liberality of Mrs. Sally Perry, of Boston, the Brewer Orphan Asylum was established near Wilmington, N. C., in 1866.

"In this charitable institution a large number of destitute, homeless, and orphaned children found a temporary home during those sad and trying years that immediately followed the war; most of them found homes in the North. The good thus accomplished can not be estimated.

"With the changes of society which came with the restoration of order and the renewal of prosperity in the South, it became evident, however, that such an asylum should not be permanently maintained by Northern benevolence. Accordingly, with the approval of Mrs. Perry, the generous patron of the institution, the property was sold, and the memorial name and the interest were transferred to the pleasant village of Greenwood, lying in Western South-Carolina, on the railroad from Columbus to Greenville. Here the Brewer Normal School was founded in 1872.

"The school property consists of eight acres of fine land, and a brick school-house of four rooms and a broad hall, which stands in a fine oak grove and commands a beautiful prospect.

"Since securing this property, the building has been repaired, and furnished as far as necessary with new school furniture.

"A hopeful beginning has been made in the school work; but as little good teaching has been done in that portion of the State, of necessity the start had to be made from the foundation.

"First of all, the people have to be taught the importance and value of a normal school, and this will require a little time and much earnest work. Our aim is to give them a model, and teach them, by a practical illustration, what a good school and what good teaching is.

"Western South-Carolina is healthy, and the best agricultural region of the State, and a very important and needy field. We hope to make the Brewer School an educational centre for the great common school work in that region. All that is required is the money, and the patient, earnest work.

"Eighty-five different pupils have enjoyed the advantages of this school the past year."

4. Normal School, Andersonville, Ga.

Instructors.—Miss Laura A. Parmelee, Toledo, O.; and Miss Harriet V. Bills, Tecumseh, Mich.

Number of pupils, 117; number in Sabbath-school, 100.

The Association still occupies on this memorable spot, the buildings, now owned by the United States, which were built by the Confederate government and used in connection with the prison for Federal soldiers. We have been hoping the way would open to erect a more suitable building and give enlarged facilities to this school, which is truly a light shining in a dark place. One of the teachers who has been at his out-post for five years writes as follows:

"ANDERSONVILLE, GA., May 12, 1873.

"The examination Friday evening was attended by a crowd of people who came from villages and country far and near, 'to see what the children have been doing.' By the accompanying report you will see the 'children' are well grown, more than thirty-nine per cent of them being over sixteen years of age.

"Classes were examined in Phonics, Grammar, U. S. History, and the use of the capital letters. A few moments were spent upon Physiology for the pleasure of the doctor who was present.

"The teachers were not at all ashamed of their scholars, which you may translate 'proud' in any degree of comparison you choose.

"Every year the school gains a deeper hold upon the community, and widens in its influence, as is well shown by the increasing number who come from a distance to attend.

"This morning, two scholars commence teaching in neighboring counties. Next month, others will also be at work as teachers.

"Judged by number of conversions, the religious growth of the year has been small; but a careful observer can not fail of noticing higher standards of morality, more intelligent ideas of truth, increased interest in Bible study, sounder Christian character. But oh! the mire of corruption and superstition in which must be laid the foundation of better things!

"Though we rejoice at the steady up-building, there have been times even this year, when our hearts have quailed before the awful power of old faiths. Every Southern plantation is a stronghold of belief in fetich—the same forms that Mr. Claflin found in Africa.

"While studying the circulatory organs, I thought it a good time to expose the absurdity of conjuring by animals. The scholars all admitted the physiological impossibility of frogs, lizards, and snakes running around in the body; yet when asked if they believe people can be 'witched' with lizards, some of them look wise and say, 'I do' know,' as only the freedmen can. You recognize the tone, manner, and meaning at once, if only you have heard the characteristic expression. L. A. P."

5. Storrs School, Atlanta, Ga.

Instructors.—Miss Amy Williams, Principal, Livonia Station, N. Y. Assistants: Miss Lucia A. Kingman, N. Bridgewater, Mass.; Miss Lizzie Stevenson, Bellefontaine, O.; Mrs. Laura C. Scudder, Atlanta, Ga.; Miss Nellie J. Howe, West-Fairlee, Vt., and Miss Susie Cooley, Bavaria, Kan. Matron of Mission Home: Miss L. F. Dunham, Collamer, O.

Value of school property, $10,000; number of pupils, 424; number in Sabbath-school, 280.

The School Board of Atlanta has continued its support to this school, and the coöperation has been hearty and advantageous to all concerned. The arrangement continues for the coming year, by which the Association furnishes the building and nominates the teachers, and the School Board of Atlanta makes the school a part of its free-school system, and pays the teachers the usual salaries in the city schools.

6. Lewis High-School, Macon, Ga.

Instructors.—Miss M. E. Sands, Principal, Saco, Me. Assistants: Miss H. C. Foote, Watertown, Ct.; Miss L. A. Jones, Jamestown, N. Y.; Miss S. W. Paige, Lowell, Mass.; and Miss Carrie E. Waugh, Scriba, N. Y. Matron of Mission Home: Miss M. E. Sands, Saco, Me.

Value of school property, $12,000; number of pupils, 769; number in Sabbath-school, 364.

By arrangement with the School Board of Macon, the Lewis High-School became, at the beginning of the year, the high-school of the city, and salaries were paid the teachers from the public funds. Half of the teachers were from the North and half from the South, but the relations were pleasant, and the school was entirely harmonious. The same plan has been adopted for the coming year.

7. Beach Institute, Savannah, Ga.

Instructors.—Mr. A. N. Niles, Principal, E. Hampton, Ct. Assistants: Miss L. P. Auld, E. Boston, Mass.; Miss C. C. Chappell, Brockport, N. Y.; Miss J. S. Hardy, Shelburne, Mass.; Miss C. R. Bent, Newburyport, Mass.; Miss A. D. Ludlow, Oswego, N. Y.; Miss A. B. Clark, Thomasville, Ga. Teacher of Music: Miss E. H. Twichell, Saratoga Springs, N. Y. Matron of Mission Home: Mrs. A. N. Niles, E. Hampton, Ct.

Value of school property, $12,000; number of pupils, 677; number in Sabbath-school, 275.

The close of the second term of the Beach Institute must have been an interesting occasion. We abridge from the Savannah papers of March 26th, 1873, the following account:

"The closing exercises of the second term of the Beach Institute took place yesterday morning, and passed off in a most satisfactory manner.

"The pupils were assembled in the western room of the main building, which was appropriately decorated. Above the platform at the head of the hall was hung the Federal flag in graceful folds. Quite a number of visitors were present, including several white persons. Feeling an interest in the education of the colored race, we visited the Institute for the purpose of seeing for ourself what progress had been made by the pupils of this school. During our stay, which was from necessity brief, we were pleased to notice the apparent proficiency of many of the pupils in the different branches. The exercises consisted of reading, declamations, dialogues, recitations, vocal and instrumental music, constituting a programme quite lengthy, but which was also very interesting to those in attendance. The manner in which the majority of the pieces were rendered showed conclusively that Mr. Niles, the principal, and his corps of assistants have been faithful in the discharge of their onerous duties, and they had the satisfaction of seeing that their efforts were rewarded by the very creditable manner in which the pupils acquitted themselves. The ballad 'Maggie Darling' was very well rendered indeed; 'Maxims,' by ten of the smaller female pupils, was quite an interesting feature. The declamation 'Handsome is that Handsome Does,' was given in a quiet, forcible, and excellent manner. In fact, there were a number of the pieces which deserve particular mention, but as these were all good, we make our remarks general, and compliment both teachers and pupils upon having given a very creditable and interesting examination, which evinced no little progress in the knowledge gained by the pupils in the past year."

8. Trinity School, Athens, Ala.

Instructors.—Miss M. F. Wells, Principal, Ann Arbor, Mich. Assistants: Miss Jennie Stevenson, Bellefontaine, O.; Miss Kate A. Lord, Olivet, Mich.

Value of school property, $3000; number of pupils, 109; number in Sabbath-school, 130.

"TRINITY SCHOOL, ATHENS, August 7, 1873.

"Another year of earnest work and substantial progress is chronicled. We greatly need a boarding department. Our pupils here, as everywhere in the South, have to contend with grim poverty. They are poor, their parents are poor, their homes are in most cases mere hovels. The degradation, ignorance, and superstition of the great mass of the people are appalling. Yet amid all these adverse influences, God is raising up many earnest men and women, who are struggling valiantly for an education.

"Those coming from the country can not get board, with the meager accommodations afforded by an ignorant family living in a cabin of only one or two rooms, for less than ten dollars per month. Could these worthy young persons have the influence of a well-ordered Christian home, it would greatly facilitate the work of preparing them for usefulness among their people.

"A BOARDING DEPARTMENT is our great and growing want—we must have it—may God show us the way.

"The work of this year has been signally blessed. All of our more advanced students have been brought into the Church, and are now earnest workers in the Master's vineyard.

"The general progress in study and in the development and elevation of character has been most encouraging, and our institution seems increasing in favor with God and man.

"Our concerts and exhibition at the close of the year, I trust, did no discredit to the colored people of the South, nor to their large-hearted, open-handed patrons, the American Missionary Association.

"While we thank God and take courage, we still plead earnestly for more help. We need money to build a home for the homeless, and a Church for our increasing congregation. Who will help us?"

9. Lincoln School, Marion, Ala.

Teachers.—Miss Helen M. Leonard, New-Bedford, Mass.; Mrs. N. E. Willis, Brighton, Mass.

Value of school property, $2000; number of pupils, 84; number in Sabbath-school, 85.

Owing to the lack of public funds to help in the support of teachers at this place, a smaller force was sent than has formerly been employed. The school has consequently been smaller in numbers, but otherwise the results have been entirely satisfactory.

10. Emerson Institute, Mobile, Ala.

Instructors.—Mr. E. P. Lord, Principal, Olivet, Mich. Assistant: Miss Loretta E. Hart, Rockford, Ill.

Value of school property, $20,000; number of pupils, 113; number in Sabbath-school, 425.

Emerson Institute has been freed from all the complications which for several years have embarrassed it and crippled its usefulness, and we believe has now entered upon a new era. Considerable sums have been expended on the buildings, fences, and grounds, and arrangements made for opening a boarding department for girls, so as to accommodate the country about Mobile.

11. Swayne School, Montgomery, Ala.

Instructors.—Mr. J. M. McPherron, Principal, Tabor, Iowa. Assistants: Miss M. V. Adams, Rochester, N. Y.; Miss R. J. Lyon, Berea, Ky.; Miss Ada Clapp, Oberlin, O.; Miss C. A. Benton, New-Haven, Ct.; Miss S. B. Paddock, Baraboo, Wis. Matron of Mission Home: Miss E. C. Ayer, Lockport, N. Y.

Value of school property, $15,000; number of pupils, 483; number in Sabbath-school, 130.

The Swayne School has had a prosperous and successful year. The Association and the school authorities coöperated in its support the same as formerly.

12. Burrell School, Selma, Ala.

Instructors.—Mr. Homer W. Carter, Principal, Tallmadge, O. Assistants: Miss Lucia A. Darling, Akron, O.; Miss Anna Haylor, Oberlin, O.; Miss S. L. Emerson, Hallowell, Me.; Miss Helen E. Carter, Tallmadge, O.; Miss Orra Reeder, Oberlin, O.; and Miss Dell Safford, Evanston, Ill. Matron of Mission Home: Miss Hannah W. Carter, Tallmadge, O.

Value of school property, $7000; number of pupils, 469; number in Sabbath-school, 290.

"The work in Selma for the past year has been more than usually satisfactory and encouraging, for several reasons; chief of which is the fact that there have been two very much needed additions to the force, namely, a church and a minister.

"We have kept up the morning and evening devotional exercises in the school, and also the weekly prayer-meeting, and these, together with the constant and direct personal efforts of teachers, have been attended with interest on the part of many pupils, and the hopeful conversion of a few; but there has been no general religious awakening among the pupils. Our Mission Sabbath-school has been larger and in better condition than last year. During the last half of the year, the average attendance has been over 200, and through the entire year, improvement in punctuality and regularity has been manifest.

"In the recitation room, gratifying results have been achieved. Although the number of pupils this year has been smaller than last, caused mainly by extremely hard times and disagreeable weather, the regularity has been a source of gratification, as well as the fact that the advanced grade of pupils has been retained. As a result, the classes have been advanced, the standard of the grades raised, and real progress made.

"At the commencement of the year, by request of the City Superintendent of Public Schools—Capt. W. C. Ward, a leading lawyer and a Southerner, who always manifests a deep and substantial interest in our schools—$150 of the school incidental fund were expended for philosophical and chemical apparatus. A good air-pump, a cylinder electrical machine, a Grove's battery, and a prism are some of the articles purchased, and these, with other apparatus bought and manufactured, have been used weekly, in easy lessons to all grades, to awaken an interest in a new class of subjects.

"Brother Pope and myself organized a temperance society known as the 'Burrell School Reform Society.' Full members of the Reform Society pledged themselves never to use intoxicating liquors of any kind, or tobacco in any form; part members, ineligible to office, signed the pledge against liquor, but not tobacco. The society was open to any one. Of the 209 members, only 5 were part members, and 65 were over eighteen years of age. At the close of the year, over 150 were believed to have been faithful to their pledge, and only eleven were known to have broken it.

"The cordial, Christian feeling in Selma toward the A. M. A. work is quite marked and steadily growing. The leading business and professional men of the city are in sympathy with it, and manifest their good-will in numerous ways, and there is a growing interest in the spiritual welfare of the blacks, and of actual and extended work among this class by white Southerners. Respectfully, H. W. CARTER."

13. Howard School, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Instructors.—Mr. Henry B. Wolcott, Principal, Oberlin, O. Assistants: Miss Carrie M. Blood, Lyme, N. H.; Miss Mary S. Pond, Irvington, N. J.; Mrs. E. O. Tade, Chattanooga, Tenn., and Miss Mollie Tade, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Value of school property, $8000; number of pupils, 415; number in Sabbath-school, 53.

From the report of Henry B. Wolcott, Superintendent of the Howard School:

"In the support of this school, for a part of the year we have enjoyed the coöperation of the city authorities, and are much gratified with the interest manifested by the City Superintendent of Schools.

"Our year's work in Chattanooga has shown in many respects very encouraging results, and if we can not report wonderful things, we can at least report progress.

"In January, the City Board of Education opened the schools for white children. A general superintendent was appointed, and we found in him a friend to all classes—a man active and earnest in his efforts to advance the interest of all the schools, colored as well as white. A good musician, he attended personally to the teaching of music in all the departments of the city schools.

"A new series of text-books was adopted by the board in January. From this date, the improvement in scholarship was very decided. The regularity in attendance and punctuality was also specially marked.

"A special aim this year has been to reduce school work to some system, hence much attention has been given to grading.

"The school was divided into four general departments, and there being eight grades, each teacher had charge of two distinct classes or years of advancement. The first class in school has nearly completed two years of the average course laid out for grammar-schools.

"But the most encouraging part of our work was in the fact that the interest in study seemed to deepen from week to week, and that many of those who had at times been troublesome and careless, were at last among our best pupils.

"During the year, there were four or five conversions; and at the time the school was closed, a deep religious interest prevailed, the results of which Bro. Tade can more fully report.

"We could wish that more had been accomplished; but when we remember that the free-school system in Tennessee is but in its infancy, and that for three months of the year we labored under peculiar disadvantages, there is every reason to take courage.

"The people of every class seem to be waking up to the necessity for good schools, and there is certainly for Chattanooga, in educational as well as material prospects, the dawn of a brighter day."

14. Le Moyne Normal and Commercial School, Memphis, Tenn.

Instructors.—Mr. J. H. Barnum, Principal, Memphis, Tenn. Assistants: Mrs. J. H. Barnum, Memphis, Tenn.; Miss E. M. Barnes, Bakersfield, Vt.; Miss S. A. G. Stevens, St. Johnsbury, Vt.; and Miss S. O. Ostrander, Murray, N. Y. Teacher of Music: Miss Mary E. Kelly, Atkinson Depot, N. H.

Value of school property, $15,000; number of pupils, 280; number in Sabbath-school, 65.

"LE MOYNE NORMAL SCHOOL—VISIT TO IT OF SEVERAL PROMINENT CITIZENS WITH MR. H. E. ANDREWS—CREDITABLE DISPLAY OF ATTAINMENT BY THE PUPILS—CONGRATULATIONS TO MR. BARNUM.

"By invitation we yesterday visited the Le Moyne Normal (colored) School, of which we have previously had occasion to speak. We were accompanied there by Messrs. John Overton, Major J. J. Busby, Major J. J. Murphy, Colonel O. B. Carr, and H. E. Andrews. On reaching the school building, which is one of the best in our city, supporting a costly clock and bell, we were first taken by the principal, Professor J. H. Barnum, to the room of the lowest grade of scholars in the building, but all able to read, write, and cipher. The children, numbering fifty, were in good order, neatly dressed, with bright faces and beaming eyes, manifesting intelligence and at the same time showing the happy effects and influence of good school training. The teacher of this room is Miss S. O. Ostrander. In the next room, we found sixty pupils. The concert reading in this room was so unusually distinct and pleasant to the ear, the whole party involuntarily closed the books to listen, and gave a hearty cheer at the close. The spelling was remarkably accurate, but the writing was much better. The order in this room was a noticeable feature, not a single pupil was out of his place. For the appearance of that room we must give great credit to the very pleasant and accomplished teacher, Miss S. A. Stevens. We were next shown to the writing-room of the normal and commercial department, in charge of Miss E. M. Barnes, a very accomplished teacher. Here we found fine specimens of the work in this department during the past year, which were, indeed, very creditable to the teacher. We were then called to the examination of Professor Barnum's most advanced class. They were put rapidly through Stoddard's Intellectual Arithmetic from the examples of double and twisted compound fractions to algebraic problems. Then they were rushed over common and decimal fractions, ratio and proportion, interest, bank discount, square and cube roots, with a rapidity of questioning and answering that was too much for Major Murphy to follow. Then all the schools were taken to the neatly-kept hall, and we listened to the singing of several pieces by the entire school. The 'Soldier's Farewell' was well sung by three bright little fellows. Several little girls then played upon the piano, when we felt compelled to bid good-morning to Professor Barnum, congratulating him upon the appearance of his school; and we all of us said 'Yes' to the remark of Major Busby, that no school in the city could present a finer appearance."—Memphis Daily Appeal.

From the Public Ledger, Memphis, Tenn., under date of May 27th, we clip the following:

"LE MOYNE SCHOOL.

"The commencement exercises of this institution began with a grand concert and other exercises at the Memphis Theatre last night, and will be continued this evening, beginning at eight o'clock. The house was crowded from 'pit to dome,' and a number of white persons were present to witness the very satisfactory progress and musical proficiency of the colored pupils; and we can safely say that all were gratified, if not surprised, at the evidences of careful training, and development of talent manifested. The exercises were opened with a hymn, sung by the school, when the Lord's prayer was said in concert by the school, and with excellent distinctness and effect. Many of the songs, recitations, dialogues, etc., that followed for two hours or more were really meritorious for any school, and won the applause of the entire house. 'The Motion Song,' (sowing and reaping,) by a class; 'Recitation and Song,' (flowers,) by Katy Black and twenty-five girls, and the 'Floral Scene,' with songs and marches, by Lucinda Motley as 'Flora,' Carrie Brown as 'May Queen,' Georgie Boyce as 'Spring,' Gussie Bostic as 'Summer,' Flora Barker as 'Autumn,' and Mary Anderson as 'Winter,' may specially be mentioned for good execution and a proper regard for the proprieties of the respective parts taken. The conclusion was a tableau and song by the Goddess of Liberty and thirty-seven States. The programme for to-night is well selected and arranged, and will doubtless be highly entertaining to the large audience sure to attend at the theatre. The institution is doing much good to elevate and moralize the rising generation of the colored race, and deserves the sanction and encouragement of all classes."

15. Normal School, Lexington, Ky.

Instructors.—Mr. J. G. Hamilton, Principal, Lexington, Ky. Assistants: Miss Mary E. White, Dayton, O.; Miss Lucy Carpenter, Portsmouth, O.; Miss M. Anna Baker, Oberlin, O.; Miss Laura King, Lexington, Ky.

Value of school property, $7000; number of pupils, 222; number in Sabbath-school, 207.

Soon after the opening of this school, the small-pox broke out with great violence in Lexington, and for two months the school was entirely suspended. As a necessary consequence, the results of the year were not equal to our expectations.

16. Ely Normal School, Louisville, Ky.

Value of school property, $20,000.

The Ely Normal Building has been rented for the year to the city of Louisville for a public school. We are also glad to record, to the credit of the city, that during the year she has erected a fine school building for the education of colored children, and proposes to erect another the coming year.

WESTERN DEPARTMENT.

OFFICE, 107 FIFTH AVENUE, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

District Secretary.

CHARLES H. HOWARD.

Advisory Board.

REV. W. W. PATTON, D.D.,	RALPH EMERSON, Esq.,
COL. C. G. HAMMOND,	REV. D. M. GRAHAM, D.D.,
HON. S. B. GOOKINS,	HON. J. V. FARWELL,
REV. E. F. WILLIAMS,	PROF. J. T. HYDE, D.D.,
O. A. BOGUE, Esq.,	REV. MOSES SMITH,
REV. C. D. HELMER,	C. H. WHITTLESEY, Esq.,

REV. E. P. GOODWIN, D.D.

This Department embraces, as its field among the freedmen, the States of Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Missouri, and Kansas, and the Indian Territory; among the Chinese, the States of California, Nevada, and Oregon, and the Territories of Washington and Idaho.

For a collecting field, from which, also, its teachers and missionaries have been principally drawn, the Western office has had charge of the States of Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas and Missouri.

The work among the Freedmen has not materially changed in its character since the last report. The common school work has ceased, except where there is some coöperation with public school officers, by which the salaries of the teachers are paid. In this cooperation we have been able to retain some of our excellent missionary teachers with all their evangelical work and influence, whose self-denying services would otherwise have been lost. Many more such teachers could be put into Texas, Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana and Missouri, if there were funds merely to pay their traveling expenses. But it has been found impossible to do more with our present income than to maintain our higher institutions and give necessary assistance to the churches; and in view of the fruitful and increasing supply of teachers from our normal schools, it is evidently the part of wise economy to expend our funds mainly upon them.

There are in the Western Department two Universities, three graded schools with normal classes, twenty-two common schools with Sabbath-schools connected, and eighteen churches.

There is no diminishing of enthusiasm for learning on the part of the freedmen. There has been an overcrowding at Tougaloo of young men eager to get an education. More room! more room! is the burden of every letter from there.

It must be remembered that all the densely populated counties of Arkansas, most of those of Louisiana and Mississippi, and almost all in the vast State of Texas are without well-qualified Christian teachers for the freedmen.

Texas abolished her comparatively liberal system of public schools before it had been fairly put into operation. Only four months of school are now allowed, and whether any community shall have that or not depends upon local elective boards, which are often hostile to schools for the colored people. The public sentiment is illustrated in other parts of the report under the heads of the separate States.

Our ministers' classes, both in the organized theological departments and in connection with other schools, are doing an important work. The ignorance and even immorality of a great many of the colored ministers who have had no other education than slavery gave them, becomes more and more painfully apparent. And in the want of a proper supply of pure and educated colored ministers, until they can be trained in our schools, I recommend that more funds be expended in sending suitable white ministers to preach the Gospel in destitute places, where the want is met by no religious denomination and no missionary body. They should be sent as Evangelists, and not wait till a church is formed. Some profitable work of this nature has already been done. God blesses it. The call to it seems imperative.

Below, a more detailed report is given under the classification of Churches, Chartered Institutions, and Common Schools with Sabbath-schools connected. A table of church statistics is given elsewhere.

CHURCHES.

LOUISIANA.

A very hopeful church enterprise has been started at Carrollton, a suburb of New-Orleans. It is under the charge of Rev. Evans Green. There is good promise of growth and prosperity. A lot has been purchased, and a house is being built.

The Central Church of New-Orleans steadily gains in influence under the pastoral charge of Rev. C. H. Thompson, D.D. Its Sunday-school is prosperous, and enjoys the advantage of having the assistance of the teachers of Straight University.

The Howard Church, (Spain street,) New-Orleans, has been unfortunate in the destruction of its house of worship in the great fire of February 27th, 1873. This body of Christians had all been slaves, and are still hard worked and poor. They retained their old preacher of slavery times until this year, and were reluctant to part with him; but, under the advice of Supt. Ashley, having consented to call a younger pastor of some education and decided moral worth, their spiritual prosperity is better assured than ever before. The house was the property of this Association, and cost, with the land, some $3000. Insurance recovered, $1000. They worship now in a rented building. Rev. N. B. James, their pastor, though he has preached several years, is pursuing a theological course at the University.

The Morris Brown Church, New-Orleans, is upon a better basis of real growth than ever before. It had been unfortunate in having an immoral pastor. After he was dismissed, Rev. M. T. Weir, who had been at Chicago Seminary one year, preached for them for a season, but the people were not united in giving him a call. Rev. S. S. Ashley, our Superintendent, is now supplying their pulpit. They have a comfortable building, and many of the congregation own their own homes.

The Mount Zion Church, New-Orleans, having been forced to relinquish its house, owing to some old dispute of the title, has been disbanded.

Greeneville Church.

This is another suburban church of New-Orleans. During the year, Mr. T. E. Hillson, also of the University theological class, has ministered to them. He had no early educational advantages, but is diligent and earnest, and sustains a character of purity and conscientiousness.

Gretna Church,

pastor, W. P. Ward, has belonged to our Louisiana Conference from the first, and has attended the University classes. It is understood to be Baptist in the majority of its members, and the question of its transfer to the Free-Will Baptist Society has been discussed, but the church has decided to retain its connection with the Louisiana Conference. The American Missionary Association does not own the house, though instrumental in securing aid for the church in its erection.

Algiers Church.

This church became divided under the charge of Rev. S. W. Otts, and the majority adhered to their former pastor, Rev. Mr. Reid, (colored,) who is a Baptist. It was thought best, therefore, to sell them the property (house and lot) to which the American Missionary Association held the title. It will not consequently be reported in future among the churches under our charge.

The New-Iberia Church has had a wonderful season of revival since Rev. Hardy Mobley became its pastor, in January last. Seventy or more converts have united with the church. He preached formerly at Lebanon, Missouri, and Topeka, Kansas.

The other three churches in the interior of Louisiana have had no aid during the past year, and little is known of their condition.

Terrebonne Church

is rich in possessing in Rev. Daniel Clay a genuinely Christian pastor, though brought up a slave. His moral sense is not blunted like many of the old slave preachers. He is illiterate, but has good mental powers, and is therefore a recognized leader of his people. He claims to be a son of the celebrated Henry Clay, and does not hesitate to call in question his father's (then master's) philanthropy in allowing him "to grow up as ignorant of letters as the horse by whose side he walked in cultivating the soil."

TEXAS CHURCHES.

The Texas Conference had its meeting at Corpus Christi. Rev. Mitchell Thompson (colored) was at that time accredited as a minister, and has since become the pastor of the Goliad Church.

Rev. B. C. Church, who was instrumental in forming the Goliad Church, has lately labored as an evangelist at several destitute places. Rev. David Peebles engaged in a similar work during the intermission from his school-teaching at Victoria. Rev. A. Rowe, also, preached at some out-stations near Corpus Christi. There is good promise that churches may be organized during the coming year at several of these places, whose moral and religious destitution is great and unreached by other instrumentalities. I therefore recommend the employment of Revs. Rowe, Church, and Peebles as evangelists to meet this want and reap in this ripening field. The following from Mr. Rowe will illustrate his success in the Gospel:

"CORPUS CHRISTI, TEX., May 29, 1873.

"Our prayer-meeting last night was deeply interesting. Earnest prayer was offered for sinners. When meeting closed, an unconverted man, whose wife is a member of the church, walked with me; and when we came to the street that led to his home, he kept on, and then passed another, and still another, and then I felt that God was leading him along that I might say something to him about his salvation.

"I opened my mouth and it was filled, first, with warnings to him, of the danger of grieving the Holy Spirit, thus neglecting his salvation and losing his soul; secondly, with entreaties to him to come to Christ, and come at once. As we parted, I told him I should pray to God for him before I closed my eyes in sleep, that he might no longer resist the love of God.

"The Lord gave me a spirit of prayer for this man's salvation.

"This morning he came to my room in great distress of mind, saying, he was afraid he had grieved the Holy Spirit until He had left him.

"He walked my room, trembling and saying, 'O Mr. Rowe, I am lost! The Spirit has left me. Oh! do pray for me!' I replied, 'I will; but I want to tell you first that the Spirit of God has not left you, but it is upon you now, telling you to submit your heart to Jesus.'

"We bowed in prayer. I recommended him to the mercy of God in Christ. He prayed, confessing his sins, asking forgiveness, and said, 'Please, Holy Spirit, don't leave me!'

"We arose from prayer. He was quite calm. I took the Testament and turned to the 11th chapter of Matthew and asked him to sit down by me. He did so. I then put my finger on the 28th verse, and asked him to read. He read, 'Come unto me, all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.'

"He paused and said, 'Mr. Rowe, I don't exactly feel that I am pardoned.' 'Well, read on,' I said. He read, 'Take my yoke upon you,' and here his heart melted, his tears fell like drops of rain. After a while, I asked him to read on. He did so, with deep emotions; 'and learn of me: for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls.' 'Are you willing to take Christ's yoke upon you?' I asked. Answer, 'I am.' 'What do men put the yoke on oxen for?' Ans. 'That they may work.' 'Are you willing to work for Jesus?' Ans. 'I am.' 'Will you go home and tell your wife that you will worship with her around the family altar?' 'I will.' 'Have you found rest unto your soul?' 'I have.'

"Oh! the joy of seeing a sin-hardened soul come to Christ.

"To the God of all grace be the praise and glory, while the joy is ours.

"Monday, June 2.

"Last night, another man who has long been under deep conviction, found peace through faith, and told it so earnestly that sinners wept.

"These two men can read God's word, and have both asked to become members of the church.

"The brethren and sisters are greatly rejoiced. Our Mexican friends are so faithful and loving, we all love them much."

At Corpus Christi.

Rev. William B. Lacy, who had been a Baptist minister, and who came there as a teacher, united with our church, and was installed as pastor to succeed Rev. A. Rowe. This is one of the rare instances where a white minister of Southern birth and education has shown a cordial sympathy with our work, and entered into coöperative relations with us. The following is from his letter of Oct. 5th, 1873:

"Our church is at peace with all, and the religious service as well attended as it has been for years. Our Sabbath-school is well attended and our Temperance Council is still quite flourishing. I suppose more could be said for the colored people in this place than for any other place in the South. I have been in this city in the interest of the colored people for more than twelve months, and have never seen but one colored man any wise under the influence of liquor, and it is very rare that any of them drink at all."

The Brownsville Church (colored) maintains no separate service and may be considered as merged in the white Congregational church. The latter receives no assistance from this Association.

The African Congregational Church, at Paris, Texas, has for its pastor Rev. Albert Gray, (colored.) He has had few advantages of education. William J. Evans, who has taught the school, held a commission from the A. M. A., and labored in the Sunday-school. Rev. David Peebles went to that county (Lamar) during the latter part of the year, with the hope of teaching and at the same time preaching the Gospel, as he had opportunity. The following letter gives the results of his efforts, and proves the need of help from outside of the State, and superior to the local hostility and prejudice.

School-House burnt.

"PARIS, TEXAS, May 22, 1873.

"Soon after I wrote you, I began my county school, seven miles from Paris, at a place where they had never had a teacher. The house (14 x 16 feet) was of small logs, so low I could touch the ridge-pole; seats of split logs; no windows, and none needed. Old and young flocked into school, all eager to learn. Mothers brought their babes (I have had four present at once, and one mother 'toted' hers five miles) and one grandmother attends. I have fifty scholars enrolled, and I have never found any so diligent and who made so little trouble. All but two are in the First Reader, and learning very rapidly.

Some roughs went to the school-house one Saturday and shot holes through the door, blackboard, etc., but no great damage was done. Yesterday I learned that a good deacon of the Congregational church in the adjoining neighborhood, at whose house I have meetings, had been told that if he allowed me to come there and stay over night, he must not be surprised if his house was burned down. I board with a colored family, as I could get no other place to live, and the man I live with has had intimations of the same nature. It came to me, also, that they had threatened to 'take me out,' which being interpreted means Ku-Klux.

"This morning, I found a group of sorrowful children about the ashes of our school-house. One of the parents was there and asked what could be done. I sent two boys for an axe, and we cleared away the brush under a spreading oak, cut some holes for benches, and had school. There were some moist eyes as we repeated the 23d Psalm in concert, and had our usual devotional exercises.

"I promised the scholars that we would have school right along, that I would teach the term out if I lived, and I mean to. There was no loss of books. I found where the horses were hitched while the house was fired, and tracked them for some distance. The house had been built mostly by two colored men. I do not know what will be done now, but suppose an arbor will be put up, in which I can teach for the coming five weeks. This county has abounded in Ku-Klux. I do not think any violence will be done to me, but can not tell. I walk nearly two miles to my school and have very poor fare. Corn-dodger and butter, with now and then a rabbit, is the diet. But I really enjoy my work, for there is so much missionary work to be done.

"I would like to visit my friends and dear children in the North. I have been four years in the South now, and do long to see 'white folks' that I can feel are friends."

Mr. Peebles has since come North for a vacation which he richly deserved. But so true and devoted a missionary should be sustained as long as he is willing to remain in that inhospitable section, and keep a gospel light burning and shining amid the darkness.

MISSISSIPPI CHURCHES.

The Tougaloo Church

has had a less number of marked seasons of revival than before; but there has been a good degree of religious interest. Some of the students are looking forward to becoming ministers and missionaries to their race in this country and in Africa. Rev. J. K. Deering became the successor of Rev. E. Tucker as pastor in January, 1873, and being also a teacher in the University, was present to preach every Sabbath. Rev. E. Tucker had been living at Raymond, and could be present usually but once a month. We were disappointed in the expectation that a church would be developed in connection with the school and Sabbath-school at Raymond.

New Ruhamah Church,

(formerly Hamilton,) in Monroe County, still enjoys the ministry of Rev. Joseph Galloway. He preaches a part of the time to a congregation in Lowndes County, and proposes to organize a church. The conference is formed in connection with an old church composed mostly, if not wholly, of whites, of which Rev. Samuel C. Feemster is the present pastor. His father, Rev. D. Feemster, emigrated from Western South-Carolina some half a century ago, together with a colony who agreed with him in refusing to hold slaves or sanction in any way the institution. The church was called an Independent Presbyterian church, and seems to have enjoyed great spiritual prosperity under the pastoral care of this genuine reformer. In church government it has always been Congregational, and is now associated with our other churches in Mississippi, though receiving no aid from the A. M. A.

MISSOURI CHURCHES.

Lebanon and Westport.

Since Rev. Hardy Mobley left Lebanon, no services have been maintained. Some of the members have moved away, and the church may be considered extinct. The church at Westport has become virtually merged in the African Methodist church. I recommend that the field be relinquished.

KANSAS CHURCHES.

Leavenworth.

Rev. J. E. Weir is still the pastor of this church. He reports a fair attendance on the means of grace. He has been studying under the voluntary instruction of Rev. George A. Jackson, late pastor of the Second Congregational church.

Lawrence.

Rev. M. T. Weir remained till September, 1872, when he left to attend the special course at Chicago Theological Seminary. The church has had no settled pastor since.

Topeka.

No pastor has been settled since Rev. Hardy Mobley left, in November, 1872.

INFERENCES RELATING TO CHURCH WORK.

I can not do better than call attention again to the want of educated colored ministers. Rev. J. W. Healy, D.D., has had gratifying success in Great Britain in soliciting aid toward defraying the expenses of candidates for the ministry. Some adults now preaching, can by this means take a brief course of study at our theological seminaries. Our most promising candidates, however, are from the younger pupils in the schools who can enjoy a more extended and thorough course of education.

This statement indicates the second great desideratum in our church work, namely, volunteer white ministers who will enter this field at once, hold the ground gained, and develop churches from our schools; and, what is even more imperative, preach the simple Gospel to the perishing hundreds who as yet enjoy no advantages either of school or intelligent preaching.

Granted that the more natural and mutually satisfactory ministers for colored congregations may be educated men of their own color, still we can not consent that thousands shall go down to the grave in ignorance of the truth and subject to blind superstition during these years of preparation of colored youth for the gospel work.

Thus far there have been laborers ready whenever there were means to send them. I would urge that the churches make this branch of the work a matter of special attention and of prayer, and that special contributions be made for it.

CHARTERED INSTITUTIONS.

Straight University, New-Orleans, Louisiana.

Instructors.—Rev. J. W. Healy, D.D.; * Rev. S. S. Ashley; Rev. C. H. Thompson, D.D.; Prof. J. F. Fuller; Mrs. S. A. Fuller; Prof. J. A. Martling; Prof. P. M. Williams; Mr. B. W. Root; Miss M. A. Ashley; Miss A. M. Perkins; Mrs. L. E. Piper; Mr. Louis A. Martinet; Miss Cora L. Smith; J. T. Newman, M.D.

Number of pupils, 235.

Dr. Healy has remained in Great Britain during the year, engaged in presenting the wants of the freedmen and soliciting funds both for Straight University and the general work of our Association. He has resigned his position as President.

Rev. S. S. Ashley, Acting President, has had large experience in educational work. The standard of scholarship has been raised under his management, made practicable by the establishment of common schools in the city. The preparatory department is well classified, and the college department is in operation. There is a good basis of a theological department in a large preachers' class under Rev. Dr. Thompson.

A great want of the institution has been a boarding-house to accommodate students from places remote from the city. Parents have been reluctant to send their daughters from the country without some provision for their board where they could have supervision from a teacher, when not in the school-room. Young men could not find suitable boarding-places at rates they could afford to pay. The efficiency of the school and particularly its moral and religious influence have been impaired by the dissipating or distracting associations out of school-hours.

* Resigned.

One object before Dr. Healy in going to England was to obtain funds to purchase an eligible house for dormitory and boarding purposes. Finding, however, that the friends of freedmen's missions preferred to give for scholarships, and particularly to fit young men for the ministry and as missionaries to Africa, his receipts have gone mainly to this object.

But the necessity of a boarding-house becoming more and more urgent, and a neighboring house well adapted to the purpose being available, it was finally determined to rent it. The plan is to make the boarding-house as nearly self-supporting as possible; but in order to make the institution accessible to some of the most worthy, the Association will need to contribute at least the cost of the rent. This alone will increase our current expenses about $1100.

The instructors are fully competent, and fully appreciate the missionary design of the Institution.

Prof. Ashley has suffered from a severe climatical sickness during some two months past, but hopes to be able to resume his duties in a few weeks. He superintends our church work in addition to his duties as acting President of Straight.

Prof. Martling gives, in the following letter, a just estimate of the immense importance of the work in the South-west, and of the spirit and methods adapted to it.

HALF-HEATHEN PREACHERS—ROMAN CATHOLIC POPULATION, ETC.

"The value of the work and its measureless magnitude are still unchanged, and awe me more and more. To train the half-heathen preachers of this State into a useful Christian ministry; to give its colored legislators so much knowledge of history and law as to make their votes intelligent, and to awaken as much self-respect as shall lift them above temptation to take a bribe; to furnish teachers to our crudely organized public schools; to gather into the fold of the Church this vast Roman Catholic population, to win them to us by showing them that Straight University is in its instructors, buildings, libraries, apparatus, discipline, Christian courtesies, scholarship, and general management, wholly superior to, and broader than their parochial and conventual schools; to make it safe for the republic that the newly-created citizens of Louisiana should retain their franchise, and to prevent Louisiana from being Mexicanized by frequent revolutions; in brief, to infuse a wholesome Christian life into the mingled mass of negro and Latin blood, is a work which must be done, for its own sake, for the sake of the nation and for Christ's sake. It can not be done without much, self-sacrifice on the part of your teachers, nor without a liberal expenditure of the means with which the Master Builder has intrusted the churches."

Tougaloo University, Tougaloo, Miss.

Board of Trustees.—Hon. R. C. Powers, Governor; Hon. H. R. Pease; Hon. A. Warner; Hon. George C. McKee; Hon. T. W. Stringer; Hon. John R. Lynch; Hon. M. T.

Newsome; Green Lemons; Rev. E. M. Cravath; Hon. H. W. Warren; Rev. E. Tucker; Rev. M. E. Strieby; Gen. C. H. Howard; R. Emerson, Esq.

Instructors.—Rev. J. K. Nutting, President; Prof. A. J. Steele, Principal Normal Department; Rev. J. K. Deering, Principal Intermediate Department and Pastor of church; S. C. Osborn, Business Manager and Superintendent of Agricultural and Mechanical Department.

Assistants.—Miss Mary E. Smith; Miss C. A. Bailey; Miss Laura Tucker; Miss H. C. Bullard; Mrs. A. J. Steele; Mrs. L. A. Randall; Miss Maria Ashley.

Number of pupils, 280.

The religious character of the institution has been marked from the first. Our former Field-Secretary, Rev. E. P. Smith, was present early in its history to assist in forming a church which embraced in its membership, not only freedmen and the instructors and the employees on the mission farm, but some Southern whites, and even one who had belonged to the Confederate army.

Rev. J. K. Nutting has reinforced the excellent corps of instructors, as President of the University. He takes to the work a great enthusiasm for humanity, seeing the precious soul as clearly looking from dark faces as from light, and he has facility both in interesting the students in their studies and in devising ways in which they can earn something to pay their expenses. The farm affords, to a considerable number, an opportunity for this, but some simple machinery and a little ingenious direction has given other profitable employment. Mr. Nutting is greatly interested in his large class of preachers. They use the Greek Testament, principally, as their text-book.

The normal school continues remarkably successful under Prof. A. J. Steele. Large numbers go out from that to teach in the common schools of the State. The Legislature voted assistance to this department in apparatus and furniture and toward the salary of the teachers.

A large new dormitory is the great need. It is wanted for a chapel and for recitations, and more than all to accommodate the hundreds of students who would gladly avail themselves of the privileges of the University, but can not do so because there are no rooms for them. Besides the cheap structure finished a year ago, known as the "Beals Building," which was immediately crowded, we have resorted to the expedient of raising the roof of a store-house, and in that way provided some nice rooms.

One lady has offered $1000 toward a large and substantial building. Others have given smaller amounts. The bequest of Jonathan Dike, of Crown Point, New-York, amounting to about $1100, has also been devoted to this object. We wait now for some of the larger sums which the Lord's stewards must have in store for this unquestionably deserving object. It will be an investment in great moral forces which will begin to yield rich interest at once and will not cease during untold generations. It is possible the required amount may be made up by many comparatively small contributions; even one dollar, to put a single stone into the structure, will be thankfully devoted to the object.

It should be remembered that this is the only chartered institution we have for the States of Mississippi and Arkansas, which are teeming with tens of thousands of freedmen. Visit the Legislatures of these States if you fail to appreciate the necessity of such an institution of learning. A large portion of members are from those who have been slaves. Will this colored representation be likely to diminish? If not, how does it devolve upon every one who loves his country to help make suitable provision for the mental and moral training of those who are certain to become the successors of the present legislators! It is certain the number of colored lawyers, physicians, and teachers will increase in all communities populous with blacks. Shall they become educated Christians with all their immeasurable influence, or shall they be suffered to drift into infidelity and immorality, and draw multitudes after them? Planting the institution at Tougaloo is our answer. And we now call upon those who see the true missionary economy of this course to come to its support.

GRADED SCHOOLS WITH NORMAL DEPARTMENTS.

Columbus Union Academy, Columbus, (Eastern) Mississippi.

Superintendent.—J. N. Bishop.

Instructors.—J. F. Bascom, Principal; Miss M. A. Muzzy; Miss S. A. Allan; Miss C. A. Stanton; Miss M. L. Rockfellow; Mrs. A. M. Marsh; Rev. D. R. Macnab.*

Number of pupils, 545.

Mr. Bishop has not engaged directly in teaching except in the Sabbath-school, but maintains a close supervision of all our interests, acting as our superintendent and financial agent; conducting the "teachers' home," and obtaining such pecuniary assistance from the school fund as could consistently be granted.

The school maintains its high character for good order and the best of instruction. If the Legislature shall decide to have a normal school in that part of this State, the Academy would form a nucleus for it. Already many of the students have gone out to teach during vacations; some have gone to Tougaloo to pursue a more extended course of study.

Barnes Institute, Galveston, Texas.

Principal.—J. O. Lyman.

Assistants.—Miss Lizzie F. Hart; Miss Eliza Cowan; Miss A. A. Rockfellow.

* Resigned.

Number of pupils, 86.

There has been here no coöperation with the public school authorities. Most of the pupils pay a moderate tuition to help defray the expenses of the school. The entire expense for the seven months was $1606.18, of which $1259.28 came from the Treasury of the Association. As this is the only school of the higher grade we have in Texas, it is important that it be well sustained. The building is fair in its accommodations, and is the property of the Association. Many of the colored ministers in that State are wholly unfit for their duties, either from illiteracy or immorality. Many of the teachers in the public schools are mere adventurers, reckless of the real improvement of their pupils. It is the more important that we hold fast such a centre of Christian influence as this school, in the principal commercial city.

Rio Grande Seminary, Brownsville, Texas, no longer sustains any relation to this Association. Rev. Jeremiah Porter and wife have moved to Fort Sill, Indian Territory, where they are engaged in educational and missionary work for the colored soldiers and their families, and for the Indians.

Pine Bluff Normal, Arkansas.

Prof. M. W. Martin has continued his successful school in the building formerly owned by the A. M. A., at Pine Bluff. He and his daughter, Mrs. L. E. Allason, sustain an excellent Sabbath-school and are true missionaries to the colored people of that city. Their "Band of Hope" temperance society has done much to counteract the prevailing tendency to strong drink in that place. Drunkenness has had a hold there upon all classes. Ministers of the Gospel, both white and colored, are addicted to whisky. One young freedman gave as a reason why he would not join a certain church upon a promise that he should be assisted to a clerical education, that he would not belong to a church where the clergy drank intoxicating liquor; for when a certain clergyman, now living, visited his old master, he had often carried whisky-toddies to his room. Mr. Martin mentions cases which have been known to him, of colored ministers preaching with bottles of whisky in their pockets, and, what is worse, with the same fluid coursing between stomach and brain.

The Arkansas Legislature passed a bill to establish a branch normal school at Pine Bluff. The State Committee propose to coöperate with the American Missionary Association in maintaining such a school. They propose that Prof. Martin shall be the Principal. With proper guarantees that Christian teachers should be employed and that our Association should have a voice in the management, I would favor investing in such an institution the proceeds of our Arkansas school property; namely, that at Pine Bluff, Fort Smith, Fayetteville, Lake Village, and Rocky Comfort.

We ought to leave as a legacy to the freedmen of Arkansas at least one well-established Christian normal school. The city of Little Rock donated to the Association ten acres, on condition of the establishment of such an institution there. Should the funds to erect a suitable building be provided, this valuable tract at the State capital would be saved to our cause.

Lincoln Institute, Jefferson City, Missouri.

Principal.—Rev. M. H. Smith.
Assistants.—Mrs. S. L. Smith, Miss Matilda Blackmar, Miss Lottie E. Hanson.

Number of pupils, 165.

This institution is unique in the fact that it was founded by the gifts of colored soldiers under the management of Capt. R. B. Foster, who was a volunteer officer. Our Association has usually coöperated in the support of some of the teachers. Mr. Smith and his wife have long been connected with our work in Missouri. In view of the fact that our property at Warrensburg, Fulton, and Troy is inalienable from the freedmen's educational work, and is of too little value to be effective in each place, I would suggest that it be sold and the proceeds devoted to the permanent endowment of a professorship at Lincoln Institute.

The following extract from a letter of Miss Lottie E. Hanson will indicate the nature of her duties in connection with the institute:

"I have become greatly interested in the school, the scholars are so anxious to learn, and I find so much that I can do for them. At one time, it is helping them in their lessons; at another, giving information outside of the lessons; cutting a dress for one, and lending a book to another and helping him to understand it. I get bewildered sometimes, there is so much to do and think of at once.

"Sunday is about the hardest day of the week. What with Sunday-school down town at nine o'clock, then church, a Sabbath-school in this building in the afternoon, a prayer-meeting in the evening, then a moral lecture by the Principal, I feel as if I wanted to rest several days after each Sunday.

"The colored Methodist minister is in several of my classes, Grammar, History, and Geography. He is very anxious to learn. It fairly makes me feel weak to see him come into class, he seems to take so greedily what I say, fearing he shall lose one word. Such pupils ought to have long recitations and a great deal condensed into each one. Every day seems to count with them. They remember what is told them better than any white children I ever saw. They are very attentive, so that it is a positive pleasure to teach them."

COMMON SCHOOLS WITH SUNDAY-SCHOOLS ATTACHED.

The following is a list of our missionary teachers in common schools. Many of these teachers were under commission from the

A. M. A. in its earlier work among the freedmen, when there were no schools of higher grade. Their work now is no less important than before, and scarcely less missionary in its character. In some sections, their deprivations and hardships are less than they were formerly; but in most places they are excluded from the ordinary social privileges and from all sympathy with those of their own color residing there. There have been a few instances the past year of threatened violence. One school-house was burned. It is believed to have been done by Ku Klux.

The support of these teachers is derived, mainly, from the local public funds. In some cases, traveling expenses to or from the field have been paid by A. M. A. In others, when the State pay was long delayed, an advance has been made to them as a loan. In a few instances, a small allowance has been paid on account of direct missionary work, outside of the school. By such coöperation with county and State authorities, some of the best Christian teachers have been put into those parts which have been longest neglected, and where otherwise, from want of means at our command, no laborers could have been sent.

The experiment of opening the Gospel to the Chinese residing on the Pacific Coast, through schools where the English language is taught them, and by English-speaking teachers, has proved more successful than was at first anticipated. Converts in San Francisco, Oakland, and Sacramento, were reported last year. We can now add one or two cases beyond a doubt, at Stockton. All the lady teachers become greatly interested in their work, and all find it easy to combine religious exercises with their teaching.

Chinese Converts at Stockton.

Miss Burnett wrote in August, 1873:

"Tai Chung is, I think, a Christian, though he has never united with the church. He is willing to do this. His words are: 'I want to do all Jesus requires, just as the Book says.' He was away in the country nearly a year; is now employed in a family. Mrs. Rhodes would be glad of his assistance in the night-school. . . . .

"STOCKTON, Sept. 1, 1873.

"Tai Chung is propounded for admission to the church, (Congregational,) to join next Sabbath on profession of his faith in Christ. Mr. Post (the pastor) and others are fully satisfied with the evidence he gives. A vote will be taken Thursday evening.

I believe Ah Hing became a Christian last week; he is about fourteen years of age. I have not written of him before. Others are giving some evidence of the influence of the Holy Spirit upon their hearts. To God be all the praise.

"A Chinese school was opened in Stockton last month. All the small children are taken out of this school to study their own language. This reduces the day-school. They may return before long.

"Tai Chung is doing all he can for the school."

There is still a good deal of prejudice against the Chinese; so that we rejoice when a pastor is called from the East to reinforce the faithful already there. Rev. Martin Post is unequivocal in preaching the gospel principle that "God is no respecter of persons," and firmly insists that there shall be no exclusions from the Church on account of difference of race.

Miss Burrows at Santa Cruz often mentions with expressions of gratitude the kindness of Rev. S. H. Willey, the Congregational pastor. A late letter shows that she has need of outspoken sympathy, if not of more active support. She writes,

"I am sorry to tell you that the boys in going home from school last week were stoned and cut and abused generally. They came rushing into the school-yard after clubs to defend themselves with. They were mad enough to kill any body, so I went home with them and also talked to the men (where was the manhood ?) who were abusing them. They treated me politely and said there should be no more of it; but it will take some time to bring the school up again."

A boy of twelve years.

The following indicates the spirit and some of the methods of one of our devoted missionaries:

"Dia Tia, a bright boy of twelve, who has been two years in school, left this month to attend a Chinese school in San Francisco. It is hard to give him up and know that he will be under heathen instructors; but I believe the truth he has learned will never be quite forgotten, and though it grieves me to think he may no longer be under Christian influences, I know that he can not be useful among his own people unless he is educated in their language. He carries with him his Bible, which he has learned to read and seems to prize.

"We sing the Doxology and some of our hymns in the Chinese language by marking down the sound as the pupils read it from the 'lesson book' and singing it to the same tunes as the English. The songs are as sweet and far more intelligent to their minds."

Another, who has been compelled to withdraw from the school at Los Angeles, by reason of failing health, writes,

"When evening comes, I can not keep back my tears at the thought of the necessity of my giving up those scholars whom I had learned to love so much.

"They seemed to love me and promised me to obey God's commands and pray to him."

Native Helpers.

Jee Gam has continued to coöperate efficiently with our teachers at Oakland and San Francisco. He is a member of the First Congregational church, Oakland. He sends each month an intelligent and interesting report of the progress of the missionary work and the condition of the schools. His services are invaluable.

Another native helper has been assisting at Los Angeles, of whom Miss Woodbridge writes,

"Ah Sit Moon is rapidly growing in favor with the school and goes with them to church, sings hymns in Chinese to them, and distributes tracts among them. I offered him money, but he declined it from me. I think if needed in Southern California, he will be glad to have you employ him."

Miss Woodbridge went out from Marietta, Ohio, last summer, and devoted her time and strength to her missionary labors at Los Angeles with great assiduity until her health failed. Miss McCormick, from Minnesota, her no less devoted predecessor, was also compelled to succumb to the enervating climate and arduous duties of the school.* Below we give items from Miss Woodbridge's interesting report of September 15th, 1873:

Chinese School at Los Angeles.

"From July 1st to September 1st, 1873, whole number of scholars, 80; average daily attendance on week-day school, 24; average daily attendance on Sunday-school, 21; highest number in attendance, (for two days only,) 35; school held on five week-days each week. Morning school, 1½ hours; evening school, 2½ hours; Sunday-school held 1½ hours in evening. Week-day morning and evening school taught by M. M. Woodbridge, and such assistants as she could get from week to week. Sunday-school taught by M. M. Woodbridge and two regular assistants. During August and September, had from four to ten visitors each Sunday who helped us teach, but not being regular in their attendance, were of but little real assistance. At this time, (September 15th,) the whole school, with the exception of the alphabet class, are engaged in reading the Chinese Reader, written by Mr. Gibson, and published by the American Tract Society, a book in every way adapted to the teaching of the Chinese adults.

"The scholars have learned to sing many beautiful hymns. The Advanced Class are reading such passages as this, 'The human body is wonderfully made,' etc., and seem to understand what they read.

"In August, 1873, the Chinese first commenced attending church in Los Angeles. Now on each Sunday evening about half the school go with the teacher to the Congregational church, where they are welcomed by the minister.

"School has been addressed on Sundays by six different ministers, and frequently by Mr. L. E. Sleigh, and others. Chinese tracts have been distributed by Ah Sit Moon, a native colporteur."

Miss Stewart and Mrs. Burnham now have the school at Los Angeles. It is proposed that Miss Woodbridge start a mission at Santa Barbara if her health shall permit her return to the work.

OREGON.

Anti-Chinese Feeling in Portland.

Our school at Portland, Oregon, was closed in July. After the great fire there, the prejudice and hatred toward the Chinese seemed to increase. Many believed that the fire was set by the anti-Chinese party who felt great indignation that these people were so universally employed in white families. It was feared that the church would be fired if the school was continued, and it was suspended. But this state of public sentiment surely does not call for an abandonment of the field on the part of a missionary association organized to combat caste prejudice, and whose history proves it hitherto true to this cardinal principle of the Gospel.

* All of our missionaries at Los Angeles express a lively appreciation of the cordial coöperation of Rev. John T. Wills, pastor of the Congregational Church.

Enlargement of the Chinese Work.

There are still many places in which these poor pagan people are congregated where not only no effort is made to reach them, but where there is actually no opportunity for them to learn "the truth as it is in Jesus," even should there be some desirous of knowing it. It is true, the influx of this class of foreigners is not great in proportion to that from European countries. It is certainly not such as to afford any reasonable ground of alarm for the safety of our institutions. But they continue steadily to come: they are filling up Oregon and Washington Territory as fast as their labor is required. They are flowing down along the valleys of Lower California, and begin to appear in considerable numbers in the States and Territories east of the Sierra Nevadas. We see no reason to diminish our attempts to carry to them the bread of life. Are they any the less pagan for being on our shores? Are their souls of less value than those of other heathen? If not, all the reasons which would induce our churches to send missionaries to their brethren in foreign lands, hold good in regard to them, and in their case there is the additional one of economy in reaching them.

When we call to mind, also, the motives pertaining to the welfare of our country, the reasons for the immediate and persevering prosecution of this work seem perfectly conclusive.

THE INDIANS.

The Association has under its care eight Indian Agencies: Chippewa Agency, Minnesota; Lake Superior and Green Bay Agencies, Wisconsin; Fort Berthold and Sisseton Agencies, Dakota Territory; S'Kokomish Agency, Washington Territory; and among the Mission Indians in California.

The Chippewa Agency includes the following bands: Mississippi, Pillager, Otter Tail, Winnebagoshish, Pembina, and Red Lake.* The most of these Indians occupy reservations in the central and northern parts of Minnesota at White Earth, Leech Lake, and Red Lake. About 75 Mississippians at Gull Lake, who declined to move with their tribe to White Earth, now express a willingness to join them, and houses are already prepared for some of them. The Otter Tails, at the council after payment, expressed a strong desire to move upon the reservation, and an inviting site at a convenient distance from

* Red Lake is now constituted a distinct Agency.

Hobart, on the Northern Pacific Railroad, has been assigned them. It is expected also that the 350 Pembinas still beyond the reservation will be removed to Rice River Crossing, 20 miles north-west of the Agency. The Chippewa Agency numbers in all about 6400 souls.

WHITE EARTH.

Rev. E. Douglass, Agent.

Upon and around this reservation are about 1215 Indians. During the year past, the premises of the boarding-school have been improved. About forty boys and girls have been under instruction. The boarding department has also a dormitory for girls.

A new hall for the industrial department has just been completed and furnished with looms. Of these there are three: one each for the weaving of rush matting, rag carpeting, and coarse woolen fabric. Facilities for basket-making have also been supplied. A promising degree of success in weaving and basket-making has already been attained by the Indian women, and some specimens of their weaving will be shown at our Annual Meeting. It is intended to introduce the art of weaving into a large number of Indian families. A great quantity of rushes have been gathered and stored. The matting made is very desirable.

The agricultural industry of the reservation has advanced 33⅓ per cent during the year. Four hundred and nineteen acres have been under cultivation; 120 acres of prairie have been broken for the coming season. The Indians themselves have raised between six and seven thousand bushels of grain, and 10,000 bushels of potatoes, and have harvested 600 tons of hay. One hundred good gardens have also been under cultivation. The head chief has 200 bushels of wheat. One Indian having no team has put up forty tons of hay for sale. Another, lately a shiftless vagabond, has given evidence of reformation by putting up ten tons. The Indians own ten two-horse teams. During the year, they have received from Government 14 yoke of oxen, 10 ponies, 6 farm wagons, 18 yokes, and 30 chains. Bishop Whipple has given them 10 cows of the best quality, and the Government has added five.

A grist-mill, with two runs of stones, costing the Government about $6700, is nearly finished. The building is of sufficient size to contain all the grain raised at the settlement. Several wells, 14-inch bore and 25 feet deep, have been sunk, by means of an earth-auger, invented by Rev. Mr. Spees, now of Red Lake. A Library Association has been formed, and about 200 volumes have been procured as the nucleus of a library.

By an arrangement made with Bishop Whipple, the direct missionary work at White Earth is under the care of the Episcopal body, and that of the Red Lake Agency is under the direction of the Association. The confirmations in the Episcopal Church at White Earth during the year have been 76. An Episcopal minister has been recently added to the mission. Under the auspices of Bishop Whipple, a hospital costing $4000 has been built. The chiefs have voted $150 toward its support for this year.

Gen. C. H. Howard, after a visit to White Earth, gives the following interesting items of progress:

"We visited one chief who only one year ago lived in a wigwam and wore the blanket. With the help of his son he has fenced and planted with potatoes some five acres. His garden of two acres also showed good attention. His wife is no less ambitious to do her part. The two rooms of the house were clean and orderly. A cooking-stove and some chairs told their story of progress to one who had seen the family a few months before. A rude bedstead and a cupboard containing table crockery testified another step upward. A flat-iron had appeared since Mrs. Smith's last visit. As I talked with this Indian father and mother about sending their daughter to school, and they expressed a desire for a school nearer their place so that she could be at home nights, and as I saw him sitting upon his stoop dressed in civilized costume and holding his little two-year-old child in his arms, and contrasted his condition a year ago, it gave me new hope for the red man. One Indian woman had a sewing-machine. One had made her first butter. Mrs. Smith herself had taught many of them how to make 'raised bread' and how to make soap. She showed me baskets manufactured during the winter from material found on the reservation—a new occupation to these Chippewas. She has just begun to have them instructed in weaving. A rush which grows in great abundance in the numerous lakes in that vicinity, gathered and cured in the summer, affords material for weaving matting, which will be a profitable employment for the long winters."

Mrs. E. P. Smith, whose "heart is full of Indian work," sends us these words of encouragement:

"In our evening-school we average thirty men, women, and children that can not be reached by the boarding-school. I have three classes of young men, and am trying to teach arithmetic, reading, and writing—enough to help them in every-day life. Those that commenced the first of the winter can read very well, write a fair hand, and perform examples in addition and subtraction, and are just beginning on multiplication.

"My third class I commenced last week Thursday. Some of our most hopeful, working young men have come into it. I said to them, 'Now boys, I want to fit you for Indian clerks. We are going to have Indians for clerks just as soon as we can make them. Yes! I expect to see Indian boys at Washington before I die.' If you could have seen the enthusiasm in that class that night, and how hard they worked to get just the ideas I wished to give in this first lesson in arithmetic, you would say the day is dawning for the red men.

"Every thing brightens around us. We are full of hope for the future. We thank God and go forward."

The labors of Mrs. Smith with the Indian women of this station have been invaluable. The readiness with which they respond to her endeavors to instruct them in some of the industries most suited to their peculiar condition, has been remarkable. Her removal to Washington is a great loss to them.

LEECH LAKE.

The Indians at Leech, Cass, and Winnebagoshish Lakes, numbering 1540, are much less inclined to civilization than those at White Earth, hence the school is not as flourishing. A boarding department is partially furnished, and fresh efforts are to be made for the efficiency of the school. Great improvement in neatness and order in the house, and in cultivation of the ground, is reported. The superintendent, with eleven schoolboys, raised 300 bushels of fine potatoes and other vegetables.

The agricultural increase for the year has been from ten to fifteen per cent. Two hundred and thirty-five acres have been under cultivation. Thirty acres of new land have been broken. The corn crop was about 4300 bushels. The Indians cut and stacked 160 tons of hay. One thousand five hundred bushels of rice were gathered, and 200 pounds of maple-sugar made.

This reservation is very much cursed by whisky. Six Indians have been killed in drunken quarrels among themselves in as many months. The agent is making great efforts to capture the offenders, and destroy the liquor, but the difficulties are great.

RED LAKE.

R. M. Pratt, Agent.

Previously, Red Lake has been under the same agent as White Earth and Leech Lake, but this year an agent has been specially appointed for Red Lake Reservation and the Pembina bands in the vicinity. Within the year, Mr. Francis Spees, who lived among the Indians at Cass Lake some years since, and learned the Chippewa language, has been ordained as a missionary, and commences his labors among them with much enthusiasm.

Rev. S. G. Wright, who labored at Red Lake last winter, thus speaks of the promise of this missionary field:

"It is pleasant to look out and see the twenty comfortable dwellings, occupied by those who had spent all their lives, until one year ago, in a birch-bark wigwam; and these dwellings all erected by their own hands is another interesting fact. Many around us have abandoned the religion of their fathers, and do not hesitate to admit the truth of all we teach. They have lost confidence in their own system of religion; but to submit to the Lord Jesus Christ as the way to God, without any works of their own, to live a life of love and faith, to deny self, take the Cross and follow Christ, that is more than they are ready to do, and yet they want to join the church.

"We must have a boarding-school here if we are to accomplish any great work. The people around us are waiting for that; but yet the majority would oppose strongly the taking of any of the annuity money for that purpose. I do not think there is a more hopeful place for a school in any missionary field than this."

LAKE SUPERIOR AGENCY.

Dr. Isaac L. Mahan, Agent.

This agency, sometimes called La Pointe Agency, includes seven bands of Chippewas, numbering in all 5125. There are really no blanket Indians among these, though by reason of their poverty some wear but very little clothing. Many wear their hair plaited, though as soon as they take hold of any work, they cut their hair. They live for the most part on wild rice and fish.

The Association aids in the school work of this agency, and has the appointment through the agent of all its subordinate officers. The missionary work proper is under the care of the Presbyterian Board. Its church and schools are in a flourishing condition.

GREEN BAY AGENCY.

Thomas N. Chase, Agent.

This agency includes three tribes—Menomonees, Stockbridge Munsees, and Oneidas—numbering over 2800.

A portion of these Indians spend a few months of each year in hunting and trapping, but are fast giving up this for farming, cutting timber, and logging. Many of them have good farms.

The school and religious work is carried on for the most part by Methodist and Episcopal societies.

Rev. J. W. Stryker and wife, under appointment of this Association, have been for some months missionaries at Keshena among the Menomonees. They were five years among the freedmen, and did not lack enthusiasm in their work. An extract, showing Mrs. Stryker's first impression, may not be uninteresting:

"I believe I am in the most promising field of labor that I have been in for some time. These Indians (the pagan part) are physically and, I believe, morally and mentally in advance of the colored people generally. I am quite sanguine of success, and I believe as soon as the sugar season is over, I shall have a large school. The children seem to be more in earnest than I expected they would be."

FORT BERTHOLD AGENCY.

L. B. Sperry, Agent.

This agency, in Dakota Territory, has recently come under the care of the A. M. A., and the new agent has but just started for the reservation. Hence we can furnish no very definite report of Indian work there.

This agency includes the Gros Ventres, Mandan, and Arickaree bands, numbering on the reservation some 2250.

These Indians are represented as gentle and easily governed. They cultivate land, but the climate is uncertain, and only about one year in three do they have good crops. There are few, if any, frame-houses. Most of them live in earth-covered lodges.

No missionary or educational work has yet been commenced among them; but the agency comes under the care of the Association with the expectation that such work will be immediately organized.

SISSETON AGENCY.

Rev. Moses N. Adams, Agent.

This agency, like that at Fort Berthold, comes under the care of the Association by request from the American Board, and its relations to us are not yet fully adjusted. It includes the Sioux and Wahpeton Indians at Lake Traverse, in the eastern part of Dakota. There are enrolled nearly 1500. Many of them have settled on land and are cultivating it in the hope of securing a title from the U. S. Government to the section on which the improvement is made.

Most of the Indians on the reservation have changed their dress and appear quite civilized in this respect. Many of the adults have long since learned to read and write in their own language.

Two school-houses belong to the agency. A manual-labor school is much needed.

We copy from a letter of Rev. J. P. Williamson, missionary in Dakota of the American Board, which has charge of the mission work:

"I have just spent a few days visiting the Indians at Flandreau, D. T., and am pleased to report the encouraging progress they are making in civilization.

"I arrived there Sabbath morning, and though they were not looking for me, I found the whole community at church, as is their regular practice. They are also learning to value the week-days, and were loth to give up a day when I proposed to meet them for general purposes on Wednesday.

"The oxen, wagons, and other utensils issued them in June, by the Agent, M. N. Adams, are highly appreciated, and have effected the end desired—that of encouraging them to do more for themselves.

"One object of my visit to Flandreau was to stir up the Indians to do more toward building a new church, and in this I succeeded well, getting individual pledges for about $400 in work, principally in the way of hauling lumber, which I am here to purchase."

S'KOKOMISH AGENCY.

Edwin Eells, Agent.

This agency, in Mason County, Washington Territory, includes three bands, S'kallams, Towandas, and Elwahs—in all, 875 Indians. Of these, 200 are on the reservation.

We quote from the report of Mr. Eells:

"Our school, though small, is prosperous. We have now twenty Indian scholars, the full number the appropriation will at present support. We have fifteen boys and five girls. It is difficult to get girls into the school. The scholars we have are making good progress in their studies. Some who have been in school but a year, read now in the Second Reader and Testament, recite their six verses of Scripture at Sabbath-school, and take much interest in books generally.

"Our Sabbath-school is quite interesting. The regular attendance of white and Indian children is thirty; and the adult Indians attend in numbers varying from twenty to seventy. Last Sabbath, the whole number was one hundred and five. Sabbath services have been held with the Indians every Sabbath for eight or nine months past. My father, Rev. C. Eells, former missionary of the American Board, has been spending his whole time gratuitously doing missionary work among them.

'I have now nearly completed a council-house, 20 x 40 ft.; walls, 14 ft. high; to be used as a church. It presents a very neat appearance, and will be of great use to us. Ever since we have had regular preaching, the interest has seemed to increase. My interpreter, an Indian, has during the past winter professed his faith in Christ, and is earnest and zealous in his efforts for his people. He is of great service in missionary work.

"The Indians are forming more settled habits of industry, and all those who stay here are doing well. My chief regret is, that so few can support themselves on the reservation. Those who are not here live mostly at the saw-mills, and drink a great deal of whisky, and are passing rapidly away.

"The present results of our labor here are more than I expected when I came; still I can not fail to be impressed with the fact that, as a nation, they are passing away and will soon be gone. They are so generally infected with disease that they have few offspring and will not be long-lived themselves.

Up to the time of our Annual Meeting, we had received no report from the Mission Indians in Southern California.

The experience and observation of another year confirm the opinion that, with Government officials in sympathy with the effort, the missionary and educational work among the Indians presents no peculiar or insuperable obstacles. The greatest difficulties are wholly exterior, and arise mainly from the opposition of interested whites, who covet the possession of the Indians' lands and pines, and to obtain them would be willing to see the Indians exterminated. So extensive is this feeling along the frontier, that he who insists upon just and honorable treatment for the Indian "maketh himself a prey," and becomes a shining mark for slander and abuse. There is hope, however, that if the Christian public can be fully aroused to sustain vigorously the efforts now made in coöperation with the Government, this opposition will be overcome, and we shall be permitted to see the blessed results of Christian labor in their behalf.

The above tables give an aggregate of six stations, six churches, and nine schools. The church membership is 498, and the regular attendance at the chapels 1360, the occasional attendance being much greater.

The report from the mission says,

"The whole number attending our schools is 738, and 500 in constant attendance. We have ten teachers in our schools, all of whom have been educated, either among ourselves, or at the best institutions in the island, and most of them especially trained for the work of teaching; and the schools are better in character than they ever have been before. Nearly every one of the teachers conducts exercises on the Sabbath, and some of them quite acceptably. Without their assistance, we should hardly be able to manage our six churches and eight Sabbath-schools with only three ministers.

"It is a most gratifying thought to us that we have the education of over 700 children.

They will form the material for our churches in the future. The ignorance and superstition of our people, more than any thing else, has been the great drawback to our prosperity. But to have our churches built up of those who have been somewhat educated, and who have been under Christian training, promises us altogether better things in the future.

"Another thing that is exceedingly gratifying, and that shows the progress we are making, is, that we do not have to depend nearly as much upon foreign assistance as we once had to do. When I joined the mission about fourteen years ago, we had twenty-three foreign missionaries, with only one or two native assistants; now we have only seven missionaries and ten native assistants, yet making with their families our force fuller than it was then. Our mission cost the A. M. A. annually at that time between $5000 and $6000, while now it is about $3000, and the schools are really better now than they were then."

BRANDON HILL.

"The principal thing I have to report here is the reopening of our chapel. It is not nearly finished, but having no other place in which to worship, we are obliged to use it, uncomfortable as it is. Some who could not be present the Sabbath we first met in it, said they shed tears of joy when they heard the voice of singing again in the place. There are many in the community that do not care for the Gospel; but I am sure I do not know what some of the poor people whom we have gathered around us would do, should they ever be deprived of the religious privileges they now enjoy. We reopened the chapel in January, and since then our congregation has been good. Our prayer-meetings have generally been well attended, and more than usually pleasant. There have been about 100 scholars in the Sabbath-school, and over 200 in the day-school. As we have received such an accession of scholars to the day-school, I have no doubt that we shall soon have a large number attending the Sabbath-school.

"The contributions of the church this year have been about the same as usual. We have had to devote the greater share, however, to rebuilding the chapel. Besides this, the people have had a great deal to do in the way of labor; indeed, what they have done in this way is considerably more than what they have done in the way of contributions in money."

PROVIDENCE.

"The church here is quite small, smaller than any other in the mission, and has sustained a greater loss by death than any other. It has now only sixteen male members, and if they did not show more than usual self-denial and more than usual interest in the affairs of the church, we could not get along at all. I can not tell why it is that this church is not more prosperous, for there is not one of our churches in which there is more earnest piety, and in which there appears so much love for Christ, and so much love for souls as in the church at Providence. I know that the community around is very bad, and that there are very many bad influences at work that make it very hard to bring the ungodly under good influences, still we can not but believe the time will come when they must be affected by the religious influences existing there.

"There is a good teacher there who has been long in the mission, and who preaches when I am not there; his assistance in the church is very valuable.

"The congregation and Sabbath-school are never very large at Providence, but they have been as large as usual this year.

"On the whole, I have never felt that our mission was accomplishing more for Christ than now, or that God was blessing us more abundantly; and in reviewing the year, we feel that we have great reason for gratitude and thanksgiving."

BRAINERD.

Rev. John Thompson reports an addition of eight members to the church at Brainerd, on profession of faith. The following are extracts from his report:

"I am glad to be able to say that our Sabbath-day services are good, the Sabbath-school is well sustained, the district prayer-meetings are well attended, and that five persons have applied for church fellowship with us during this week. Of course we have our sorrows and disappointments in common with all the Lord's people, but we enjoy many favors too, and I am sure that a good work is being carried on among us."

MANNING'S HILL.

"Of this church," Mr. Thompson says, "I am glad to be able to speak hopefully: four members have been added on profession. The new chapel is now too small for us, the Sabbath-school alone fills it, and we can not comfortably accommodate all who come; we must enlarge erelong. The Bible-class is unusually good, old and young taking deep interest in it, although some of the former can not read, yet they derive much good and gain a store of Scripture knowledge, which is very comforting to us all. I conducted this class three Sabbaths ago, when the good old deacon, Edward Small, wept for joy as he listened to his children and grandchildren repeating verses from memory and tracing the connection between the Old and New Testaments. This aged brother was once a slave, when he suffered much for the cause of truth and righteousness. He is now old, but active in his Master's cause, which he loves. The day-school under John L. Kelly is good, having gained thirty-nine marks and passed third class under government inspection."

ELIOT.

Of this church and station Mr. Thompson says,

"There are good signs of improvement here. The new chapel is too small for the growing congregation. A root of bitterness in the little church which did trouble us has, I hope, been removed. The Sabbath-school is very good, as it has been for some years, and is, I hope and believe, the ground of hope for the growth of the church.

"Mr. John McLeod labors here mainly, giving a Sabbath to Brainerd and to Richmond occasionally."

CHESTERFIELD.

Owing, doubtless, to his illness, we have received no report from Rev. C. B. Venning, of the church under his charge.

For reasons given elsewhere, the question of a transfer of this mission will be had before this Annual Meeting.

MENDI MISSION, WEST-AFRICA.

Missionaries.—Rev. George P. Claflin, Rev. J. K. Billheimer, Daniel W. Burton, Mrs. Claflin, Mrs. Billheimer, Mrs. Burton, Mrs. Mair.

Native Assistants.—Five.

Under Appointment.—Barnabas Root.

Stations.—Good Hope, on the Sherbro Islands; Avery, on the Bargroo River; (the station at Lawana has not been occupied during the year.)

Since our last report, two ordained missionaries with their wives have joined this mission. They sailed from Boston Jan. 29th, and reached Freetown, Sierra Leone, early in March. Of these, Mr. and Mrs. Claflin returned to the mission after a short visit to this country on account of health. Mr. and Mrs. Billheimer joined the Mendi Mission for the first time. As heretofore stated, they have both of them, as missionaries of the United Brethren in Christ, had valuable experience on the western coast of Africa, and Mrs. Billheimer has since pursued a pretty full course of medical study with special reference to this work.

Barnabas Root is a native African, educated in part at the mission, where he was converted to Christ. He afterward came to this country under the care of the Association, took a full collegiate course, and graduated with honor at Knox College, Illinois, and then completed a theological course at the Theological Seminary, Chicago. He has since been usefully employed in missionary service in the South, having had charge of a mission church in Montgomery, Alabama.

It had been expected that Mr. Root would return to the mission this fall, but the committee have not been able to send with him the reinforcement desired, and it has been thought that the best interest of the work in Africa would be promoted by allowing him to spend some months in connection with our Southern work for the threefold purpose of the valuable experience he would there obtain, the good he could do there, and the interest that may thus be created in behalf of African missions in the minds of Christian young men and women being educated at our higher institutions. Thus far the Committee are happy to say all those hoped-for results are increasingly promising. The prospect of soon being able to draw from our institutions needed supplies for the missionary field in Africa, and thus forming a more intimate connection between our work there and here, is continually brightening. There is, however, no part of God's vineyard that more imperatively requires maturity of Christian character to prevent the laborers falling into the snare of the devil than Africa; hence the necessity of great caution in an effort of this kind.

We are assured that many of the young men and women of the best Christian character and most culture in our schools have a ripening conviction that God, by his Spirit and providence, is pointing them to Africa as their field of Christian labor.

The purpose of opening a new mission station at Senehu, mentioned in our last report, has not been abandoned; but it has been judged unwise at the mission to attempt the occupancy of new territory until more fully reinforced. There is now every prospect of being able to supply the needed help at the earliest suitable period next summer.

The failure of Mrs. Burton's health, temporary, it is hoped, has compelled her to leave the mission for a time. She was accompanied by Mrs. Mair to Scotland, and we learn that her health is steadily improving. One of the native assistants, an ordained missionary, whose services have heretofore been reported as very valuable, has been dismissed from the mission for unchristian conduct; and an aged native assistant, Martha Davis, familiarly called Aunt Day, who has long been a great comfort and assistant to the female missionaries especially, has gone to her rest. Her later years were mainly spent in labor for the physical comfort of the suffering.

The statistics of the church have not been reported; there has been no marked ingathering of souls, though later letters say there is much to encourage the missionaries in their work, that there seems to be a spirit of earnest inquiry among the young men, giving hope of their future usefulness; and there have been a few hopeful conversions to Christ.

Mr. Claflin says,

"The Gospel is meeting these evils, (of heathenism,) and slowly transforming the people as it reaches them, though there are many wayward steps on the part of those whose faces seem heavenward. There is at present an increased attendance at our meetings for worship. Our church and female prayer-meetings are of much interest, and also those held at a private house; and the day-school, numbering fifty-eight, at present under care of Mrs. Claflin, is prospering. We have encouragement to labor, but we desire a more gracious visitation of the Spirit of God, that these people may be led to himself."

It still remains true that there are large demands for the spread of missionary operations in the Sherbro and Mendi country; but the ground can not be possessed without a large reinforcement of the mission, and for this the main dependence for the future must be in our Southern schools. Two applications, however, very favorably reported of are before the Committee for appointment to join the mission next season: one from a member of the senior class in the Chicago Theological Seminary, and the other from a young man now in the service of the American Bible Society. Both are men of mature Christian character.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Although drawing no pecuniary support from the Association, Mr. Green has sent us his annual statement as usual. From this we derive the following:

The station, September 1st, 1872, included Makawao proper, Kula, and Hamakua, with three distinct churches, Makawao, Kula, and Hamakua, or one united church, Makawao. Missionaries, Rev. J. S. Green, Mrs. A. C. Green.

By the removal of his son, Rev. J. P. Green, near the close of last year, Rev. J. S. Green and wife have been left alone at Makawao, with the entire labor of that station and two out-stations on their hands.

Feeling the burden too heavy for him, he entertained the suggestion of having a native pastor ordained and placed over the united congregations of Keokea and Kalepoleka as a union church. The experiment was not, however, satisfactory. In less than a year, the newly-ordained minister was deposed from the ministry, and the station again tendered to Mr. Green. Mr. Green says his congregations are diminishing because the race is, though he thinks the race and the language will last during his life. There is, he says, a sifting time in the churches, and numbers of the native ministry and of the people are falling away from the truth.

The connection of the Association with the work of Rev. Mr. Green in the Sandwich Islands is so slight—the assistance given him being almost nothing—that to report the church at Makawao as belonging to a mission of the Association is liable to convey a wrong impresssion; and, as is found, does so in fact. The Committee have concluded, therefore, to report it as substantially self-sustaining. At the same time, they will be glad to receive and transmit to Mr. Green any funds contributed specifically to aid him in his self-denying and self-sacrificing work.

SIAM MISSION.

Bangkok, Siam.

Missionaries.—Rev. D. B. Bradley, M.D.; Rev. C. B. Bradley; Mrs. Sarah B. Bradley; and Mrs. Mary Bradley.

Dr. Bradley died at the mission June 23d, in the seventieth year of his age. His death has prevented our receiving our usual annual report from this mission.

Dr. Bradley first went to Bangkok, in 1835, as a medical missionary, under the care of the American Board. In 1849, he and his colleague, Rev. Jesse Caswell, came under the care of the American Missionary Association. Mr. Caswell soon after died. Dr. Bradley was then in this country; and, while here, was married to Miss Sarah B. Blachley, of Dane, Wis. On his return to the mission, he was accompanied, also, by Professor John Silsby and Rev. L. B. Lane, and their wives. These gentlemen retired from the mission in 1854–5, and are now in this country; one is in Alabama, and the other is a pastor in Ohio.

The mission property of the Board was purchased by the Association, consisting of buildings, printing-presses, etc. By the use of the printing-office Dr. Bradley has, for the last eighteen years, made the mission almost wholly self-supporting. His knowledge of the Siamese language enabled him to prepare, for general circulation, a number of Christian tracts, translations of parts of the Bible, and works on medical and astronomical subjects. Next to the translations of the Psalms, of Isaiah, Jeremiah, Proverbs, Esther, and the Songs of Solomon, an Old Testament History, and a Life of Christ are the most important. These have been widely circulated and read by the people.

He was an indefatigable laborer in the service of Christ, and lived and died in the confident expectation that the seed sown in that as yet sterile field will at length bring forth much fruit to the honor of the Master. The accession of his oldest son to the mission, nearly two years since, gave him great hope for the future, a future he did not live to see.

In January last, Dr. Bradley wrote that he had just received from the press the prophecy of Jeremiah and the book of Lamentations in Siamese. The translation of the book of Job had been completed, to be revised before printing. In addition to the book of Daniel, translated from the Hebrew by Mrs. Bradley, and printed at the mission, she has this year added translations of Esther and the two books of Chronicles.

Rev. C. B. Bradley has been making a thorough revision of the New Testament, for which his accurate knowledge of the Siamese and his fine scholarship have well prepared him. His work has, however, been retarded, not so much by acute sickness as by a prostration from which he hoped soon to be relieved.

The fact that the Siamese Mission has no intimate connection with the great work of the Association, which providentially has been directed to the African race, and the hitherto unfruitfulness of Siam as a missionary field, has led many of the friends of the Association to the conviction that the unity of the work and the happiest relations of the Association to the great body of its contributors would be promoted by resigning this part of its foreign work to some other missionary organization. If this can be done in any way that shall be agreeable to our remaining missionaries there, there can be little doubt of its expediency.

Any consideration of this subject, however, would be very incomplete that did not recognize the fact that the scholarship of Mr. C. B. Bradley, the full knowledge which every member of the family has of the Siamese language, the ability of Mrs. Bradley to translate directly from the Hebrew, the translations already made of many parts of the Bible, and the facilities furnished by the printing-office for providing religious literature in the Siamese language, supply peculiarly favorable conditions for carrying on the missionary work there.

I. This Society shall be called "THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION."

II. The object of this Association shall be to conduct Christian missionary and educational operations, and diffuse a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures in our own and other countries which are destitute of them, or which present open and urgent fields of effort.

ART. III. Any person of evangelical sentiments,* who professes faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, who is not a slaveholder, or in the practice of other immoralities, and who contributes to the funds, may become a member of the Society; and by the payment of thirty dollars, a life member; provided, that children and others who have not professed their faith, may be constituted life members without the privilege of voting.

ART. IV. This Society shall meet annually, in the month of September, October, or November, for the election of officers and the transaction of other business, at such time and place as shall be designated by the Executive Committee.

ART. V. The annual meeting shall be constituted of the regular officers and members of the Society at the time of such meeting, and of delegates from churches, local missionary societies, and other coöperating bodies—each body being entitled to one representative.

ART. VI. The officers of the Society shall be a President, Vice-Presidents, a Recording Secretary, Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, two Auditors, and an Executive Committee of not less than twelve, of which the Corresponding Secretaries shall be advisory, and the Treasurer ex-officio, members.

ART. VII. To the Executive Committee shall belong the collecting and disbursing of funds; the appointing, counseling, sustaining, and dismissing (for just and sufficient reasons) missionaries and agents; the selection of missionary fields; and, in general, the transaction of all such business as usually appertains to the executive committees of missionary and other benevolent societies; the Committee to exercise no ecclesiastical jurisdiction over the missionaries; and its doings to be subject always to the revision of the annual meeting, which shall, by a reference mutually chosen, always entertain the complaints of any aggrieved agent or missionary; and the decision of such reference shall be final.

The Executive Committee shall have authority to fill all vacancies occurring among the officers between the regular annual meetings; to apply, if they see fit, to any State Legislature for acts of incorporation; to fix the compensation, where any is given, of all officers, agents, missionaries, or others in the employment of the Society; to make provision, if any, for disabled missionaries, and for the widows and children of such as are deceased; and to call, in all parts of the country, at their discretion, special and general conventions of the friends of missions, with a view to the diffusion of the missionary spirit, and the general and vigorous promotion of the missionary work.

Five members of the Committee shall constitute a quorum for transacting business.

ART. VIII. This Society, in collecting funds, in appointing officers, agents, and missionaries, and in selecting fields of labor, and conducting the missionary work, will endeavor particularly to discountenance slavery, by refusing to receive the known fruits of unrequited labor, or to welcome to its employment those who hold their fellow-beings as slaves.

ART. IX. Missionary bodies, churches, or individuals, agreeing to the principles of this Society, and wishing to appoint and sustain missionaries of their own, shall be entitled to do so through the agency of the Executive Committee, on terms mutually agreed upon.

ART. X. No amendment shall be made in this Constitution without the concurrence of two thirds of the members present at a regular annual meeting; nor unless the proposed amendment has been submitted to a previous meeting, or to the Executive Committee in season to be published by them (as it shall be their duty to do, if so submitted,) in the regular official notification of the meeting.

* By evangelical sentiments we understand, among others, a belief in the guilty and lost condition of all men without a Saviour; the Supreme Deity, Incarnation, and Atoning Sacrifice of Jesus Christ, the only Saviour of the world; the necessity of regeneration by the Holy Spirit, repentance, faith, and holy obedience, in order to salvation; the immortality of the soul; and the retributions of the judgment in the eternal punishment of the wicked, and salvation of the righteous.

ANNUAL MEETING

OF THE

AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

THE TWENTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL MEETING of the AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION was held at Clinton, Iowa, commencing Wednesday, October 28th, 1874, at three o'clock P.M.

In the vacancy of the Presidency, Rev. G. F. Magoun, D.D., one of the Vice-Presidents, was called to the chair. The meeting was opened by reading the Scriptures, prayer, and singing. Following these, the chairman delivered a brief opening address, making fitting allusion to Rev. Dr. Kirk, late President of the Association.

Rev. A. J. Chittenden was appointed Scribe, and Rev. J. G. Merrill, Assistant Scribe. The following persons were chosen as the Committee on Nominations: Hon. Samuel Plumb, Rev. O. Emerson, Rev. W. W. Woodworth, and Rev. J. F. Dudley.

The Report of the Treasurer was read by Secretary Whipple, and the Report of the Executive Committee by Secretaries Strieby and Whipple. A recess was taken until half-past seven in the evening.

EVENING SESSION.—The Scriptures were read and prayer was offered by Rev. L. T. Chamberlain. The sermon was preached by Rev. G. F. Magoun, D.D., from Acts 17 : 26, 27: "And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek after the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us." The sermon was followed by prayer by President Blanchard.

The following Committees were announced, to which were referred the appropriate portions of the Reports: ON FINANCE, Rev. H. L. Hammond, Rev. S. L. Herrick, and Deacon C. S. Colton. ON EDUCA-TIONAL WORK IN THE SOUTH, Rev. J. Blanchard, Rev. A. Harper, and Deacon W. Russell. On RELIGIOUS WORK IN THE SOUTH, Rev. L. T. Chamberlain, Rev. J. E. Roy, D.D., and Rev. H. W. Cobb. On the INDIAN WORK, Rev. S. R. Riggs, Rev. O. Emerson, and Deacon John Roy. On the CHINESE IN AMERICA, Rev. W. W. Woodworth, Rev. John Todd, and Deacon George B. Hopkins. On the FOREIGN WORK, Rev. E. P. Goodwin, D.D., Rev. E. G. Smith, and Hon. Samuel Plumb.

THURSDAY MORNING.—The Association assembled at eight o'clock for devotional services, led by Rev. J. F. Dudley. The hour was occupied profitably in prayer, singing, and remarks.

At nine o'clock, Dr. Magoun took the chair. The following Committee was appointed for the nomination of permanent officers: Rev. E. P. Goodwin, D.D., Rev. A. L. Frisbie, and Deacon J. H. Merrill.

The Report of the Committee on the Chinese Work was read, and adopted, after remarks by Secretary Strieby and Rev. Dr. Patton, who read an interesting letter from a Chinese convert, Tai Chung, followed by prayer by Rev. S. R. Riggs.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE CHINESE WORK.

The committee are glad to learn that the efforts of the agents of this Association among the Chinese in California have, under the wise and efficient superintendence of Rev. W. C. Pond, resulted in a substantial progress during the year; that there have been hopeful conversions, and that Christian young men, Chinese converts, have asked for an enlargement of the work, and have shown their sincerity and their zeal by their liberal donations for this purpose.

We commend the action of the Executive Committee in establishing, at the request of these young men, the Central Mission of San Francisco, Cal., by the renting and furnishing of the Mission-House, and they recommend that the enlargement which this work still calls for be made as fast as the necessary funds can be furnished.

The Committee on the Indian Work reported. Remarks were made by Rev. S. R. Riggs, Rev. E. P. Wheeler, Drs. Patton and Roy, and Rev. O. W. Cooley; prayer was offered by Rev. A. L. Frisbie: and the report was adopted.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE INDIAN WORK.

Your committee have carefully read that part of the Report of the Executive Committee which treats of its work among the Indians.

This Association rejoices in the fact of a deeper and more intelligent interest in the elevation of the red men. This report gives us the evidence of decided success in the working of the present governmental policy, with agents selected by the Christian Missionary Societies of this country; the character of the white communities gathered about our Indian Agencies is in many cases at least above the average in our white settlements. From the changed character alone of agents and employees, much good will come to the Indians.

Six agencies are noted in this report as being in this way placed under the special control of this Association. This is quite a responsibility. To provide the best men and women for these places involves much thought and anxiety on the part of the Secretaries of this Society, but it costs the churches nothing. It is a good in itself; but the greatest good is in the fact that it furnishes peculiar facilities for conducting more strictly missionary work. In some of these agencies, as the report states, the work of evangelization is conducted in part or in whole by other missionary societies. But several of the agencies are entirely in the hands of this Association. The Indians are looking hitherward for the good news of salvation, as at present they can look nowhere else. This report notices with approbation the opinion of Missionary Spees, of Red Lake, that successful efforts to Christianize the Indians must be made mainly through the native language. So Mr. Dunster, the first President of Harvard, thought and wrote two hundred and thirty years ago. So John Eliot thought and acted. So did Roger Williams, and Thomas Mayhew, and the Jesuits in Canada or elsewhere among the Indians. So did the Apostles on the day of Pentecost, when they preached to every man in his own language wherein he was born. And so do modern missionaries think and act, the world over. The child-language on the mother tongue, is the heart-language. And the heart-language is that which the Holy Spirit vitalizes and uses most readily in conversion. This involves the necessity of special missionary workers among all these bands and tribes of Indians. Books, and especially the Bible, are to be prepared in every language; men and women must be found and sent out who will devote their lives to the work of Christianizing these wronged red men. And then higher civilization depends upon the faithful work of our missionary societies.

Your committee are of opinion that to meet the demand upon this Association coming from agencies now in their hands, not less than twelve or fifteen thousand dollars should be furnished by the churches the coming year.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Secretary Strieby read a paper on the "American Missionary Association and its Work," having special reference to the recent discussions on that subject in the National Council at New-Haven. The paper was approved and recommended to be published.

The Report of the Committee on the Educational Work in the South was read, and after slight modifications, was accepted, and the resolutions appended were adopted.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE EDUCATIONAL WORK.

Your committee have scarcely any thing but admiration to express concerning the educational work of the American Missionary Association.

The work of primary education for the children of the Freedmen, which the war threw on the hands of the Association, must soon pass to the several States. But State institutions, North or South, do not usually educate for Christ, and the question whether the future educational system of the South, so far at least as the blacks are concerned, is to be and remain Christian must largely depend, under God, on this Association. More especially is this true of the colleges and higher institutions where, if anywhere, the children of the emancipated people are to learn the language in which the Christian religion was first written.

Your committee, therefore, rejoice in the educational work of this body as exhibited in the report, as one of the stupendous events of modern Christian civilization, and as alone and of itself a reward of the toils of the friends of emancipation in their struggle against the slave-trade.

We recommend the adoption of the following:

1st. Resolved, That we rejoice in the continued prosperity of our educational work, and recommend that the Executive Committee omit no reasonable efforts for its support and enlargement.

2d. Resolved, That we rejoice that the general advice against secret societies given at Mt. Vernon, O., by this Association, and since reaffirmed in substance in the A. M. A. Magazine, has been well received and generally regarded by our brethren at the South, and we here renew that advice in application to our colleges and higher institutions at the South, hoping that they will carefully exclude the secret college fraternities, as injurious to the best interests of learning and religion.

The Committee on the Religious Work in the South made its report. It was followed by remarks from Rev. L. T. Chamberlain, Rev. O. Emerson, Rev. H. W. Cobb, President Blanchard, and Rev. A. J. Drake. Prayer was made by Deacon Pettengill. The report was accepted and the resolutions adopted.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE RELIGIOUS WORK.

Your Committee on the Religious Work of the Association beg leave to report as follows:

We have read with thankful interest the narrative of what has with God's blessing been accomplished during the past year in this most important department and field of the Association's work. Certainly the results have been fully commensurate with the labor expended. In the number of new churches planted and of converts gathered in all the churches, and of students preparing themselves for Christ's work as teachers and preachers, the committee discern occasions of hope and encouragement.

Your committee discern also the increased responsibility which every success lays on the friends of Christ. With the multitudes of the Freedmen, thus shown to be susceptible of true religious impression and education, it is manifestly enjoined upon us to put forth our utmost efforts. It is never to be forgotten that the highest object of this Association is the conversion of souls to Christ; and certainly the Lord of the harvest is summoning us, by the sheaves that are already gathered, to enter more diligently into the inviting field.

We would likewise express our satisfaction in observing the methods which have been employed in the multiplication of churches, namely, the preaching of the word, the gathering of children and adults into the Sunday-school, and the building up of permanent active organizations. Such are, undoubtedly, the true methods of church extension. We accordingly recommend the reinforcement and increase of efforts in that specific direction.

In closing, we submit the following resolutions:

First, Resolved, That the Association renewedly pledges itself, in the faith of Jesus Christ and the love of souls, to the prosecution of its distinctively religious work.

Second, Resolved, That the spiritual successes of the past year among the Freedmen by the society, afford increased incentives to the cultivation of that great field. The Lord has fulfilled his promises.

Third. Resolved, That our supreme appeal for support is to be in the name of dying souls and in the name of Him who gave his life in their behalf and ours.

A recess was taken until two o'clock P.M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.—The meeting was opened with prayer by Rev. S. L. Herrick. The Report of the Committee on the Foreign Work was read, and discussed by Drs. Goodwin and Patton, Secretary Whipple, and the Rev. Messrs. Cobb and Drake, and adopted.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN WORK.

The Committee to whom was referred the Foreign Work of the Association submit the following report:

The effort to carry out the policy adopted a year since, namely, to effect an early transfer of the work in foreign lands, with the exception of that in Africa, has been only partially successful. The mission in the Sandwich Islands has been placed upon an independent basis, the mission in Siam relinquished, and the property transferred to the only surviving missionary.

In the Jamaica field, difficulties have been met, which seem to render such a transfer for the present impracticable. In the judgment of the missionaries, and of those connected with the government of the island, the work can not be safely put into the hands of any missionary organization now on the island, and the people themselves are not yet able to assume its support.

Furthermore, the work has proved itself too great a success, as respects the stimulus to industry resulting from it in a marked degree, the increasing desire for knowledge, the steady elevation of moral sentiment, and, above all, in the conversion of souls, to allow of its abandonment.

The committee, therefore, recommend that the appropriation of $3,000, asked for by the missionaries, be granted, and the work continued until the day of transfer or of self-support clearly opens.

The Mendi field is to be congratulated upon the signal progress of temperance, and the adjustment of tribal difficulties that have hitherto greatly hindered the work. The wants of this vast field are still unmet, and the cry of its perishing millions for the bread of life still rings across the waters, asking answer of all Christian hearts.

But the conviction is a growing one, that the evangelization of Africa is to be chiefly hoped for through the agency of her own people. Indeed, it would almost seem as if through these long and weary years, God had, in a manner, been holding back the work, in order that, through the emancipation and Christianization of the colored people of the South, the children of Ethiopia might themselves become the apostles of her redemption. They best appreciate the prejudices, superstitions, and spiritual needs of their countrymen. They alone can brave with safety the perils which have lined the coast with the graves of devoted servants of Christ. Let us hope, therefore, that through this great work now being wrought in our own land, God is solving this hard problem of the ages, and that the day draws on apace when the Gospel of Him who hath made of one blood all the nations of the earth shall make this mighty empire of heathenism bud and blossom as the rose.

The communion of the Lord's Supper was celebrated, Rev. O. Emerson and Rev. J. E. Roy, D.D., conducting the services.

A paper prepared by Rev. G. D. Pike on "African Evangelization," was read by Secretary Whipple, and ordered to be printed.

The ladies of the congregation retired to an adjacent residence and held a meeting in reference to the coöperation of women in the work of missions. The following resolutions, offered by Dr. Patton, were adopted, and sent to the ladies' meeting:

Resolved, That the degraded condition of the women in all the fields of the Association, whether in this country or abroad, appeals loudly to the female members of our churches to add their special contributions to the treasury.

Resolved, That we do not deem it advisable to organize distinct female auxiliaries to aid this Association, lest there be too many local societies; but we rather counsel that efforts be made to broaden existing women's societies in the churches so as to comprehend this cause among their objects.

Subsequently the following resolution, adopted at the meeting of the ladies, was read before the Association:

Resolved, That, so far as we have considered the subject before us, our views coincide with the resolutions read to us from the Association, and after returning to our various homes, we hope to have further conference in reference to them.

The Report of the Finance Committee was read, discussed, and adopted, as follows:

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

The Committee to whom was referred the Financial Statement of the Association have given to the matter what attention they were able in the limited time allowed them, and have also had a somewhat full conference with one of the Secretaries. The account of the receipts and expenditures for the fiscal year ending September 30th, 1874, is succinctly given, excepting for Berea College, the report from which had not reached the office. The certificate of the Auditors in due form is appended to the statement, and all appears perfectly satisfactory; we have also had the supplement to the Treasurer's report made by the Secretaries, in our hands.

It is of course impossible for your committee with so little time, and so far away from the office where the books and papers are necessarily kept, to make any thorough examination of the financial condition of the Association. This difficulty was felt by the Committee on Finance last year, and led them to recommend that a committee be appointed to examine the Treasurer's report and the financial condition of the Association previous to the next annual meeting, and report thereon. But the committee was not appointed, and of course we have no such report. It is not easy to secure a thorough investigation of this kind by competent persons not connected with the administration of the Society, nor perhaps is it necessary thus to duplicate the work of the Auditors every year. The appointment occasionally of a special committee, like that which reported last year, should be sufficient to preserve the confidence so well earned. In the report of a special committee, made at the last annual meeting (Annual Report, p. 10), a change in the method of keeping the accounts was recommended, which, we learn from the Secretaries, has been adopted, introducing a more thorough system, and separating the different branches of the work, so that the condition of each interest can be readily shown.

The great sad fact that meets us in this statement is the debt of the Association, which is now in round numbers $80,000. More than $50,000 of this debt is an inheritance from the previous years, but there has been an increase of more than $25,000 during the past year. This is accounted for in part by a diminution of receipts from Great Britain, of $14,799, a diminution of receipts from our churches of $12,178 for general purposes; nor could the arrangements for the expenditures at the South be suddenly changed to meet the diminished receipts. A new adjustment has now been made for the coming year, which prudence and a stern necessity seemed to require.

The committee deeply sympathize with the serious disappointment of the Executive Committee in having to report an increased rather than a diminished debt; yet it appears to have been unavoidable.

What shall be done for the future? The receipts must in some way be made to balance the expenditures. How shall this be done? By retrenchment, some will say. The question of retrenchment divides itself into two questions, the one of diminishing the operating expenses of the Association; the other of withdrawing from portions of the field. With regard to the cost of collection and administration, we see not how it can be materially lessened. It is now only 10½ per cent of receipts.

We can easily see how this per cent can be lessened by larger receipts from the churches, for the cost of administration for $500,000 would be no more than for the present sum. But the now popular cry for retrenchment may be pursued so far as to impair efficiency of service, and then it becomes penny wise and pound foolish. To withdraw from a part of the work is the other mode of retrenchment. While we would assent to the new adjustment spoken of in the supplement, if the committee in their wisdom can make it without material injury, we can not indorse the general feeling of balancing receipts and expenditures in this way. Curtail operations, and you will lessen receipts still more rapidly. A retreat scatters forces faster than the shells of the enemy. Let it be known that this society abandons any considerable part of its undertakings, and it needs no prophet to foretell that this debt of $50,000 will not soon, if ever, be paid.

The receipts must be increased. There must be more thorough appeals made to the churches, greater demands made on them for these races. Have not the officers of this society been too modest? Have they not stood back in deference to other societies when they should have pressed forward and made their voice heard? Much as we dislike special appeals, they must be occasionally resorted to, and we believe this is the time for this Association. Surely it can make out a strong case before the public. It certainly has peculiar claims that can be urged here upon the American people.

The objects of its missionary labors are within our own country, members of our own governmental household, and he that provideth not for his own, especially for those of his own house—you know the rest of the verse. The colored men are our wards, and we must take care of them. We are debtors to all these races, even to the newly-arrived Chinese, zealously engaged many of them in doing menial services in keeping us clean; to the negroes, who have for generations given unrequited labor to raise our rice and cotton, and whose prayers, valor, and blood, it is not too much to say, turned the scale in the great four years' struggle for national life; and to the Indians, for land sold to us for a song and counted by us as a grand inheritance.

The care of these races, their instruction, especially the negroes, in all that pertains to citizenship, must appeal powerfully to every patriot in the nation. In laboring for them, we are laboring directly for our country and the welfare of our country.

All these are special claims in addition to those common to all missionary bodies, what we owe to all men as members of a common brotherhood, as those for whom Christ died, and to whom we are commanded to present the everlasting Gospel. There is money enough in the country for all the work, and the officers of this society should have the sanction of this meeting, for a large increase of donations from the churches, so that the aggregate of their income from all sources for the ensuing year shall be $500,000.

The Committee on the Nomination of Permanent Officers reported as follows, and the report was adopted.

REPORT

OF THE

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

THE TWENTY-EIGHTH ANNIVERSARY of the AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION closes a year in which death has appeared among us with unusual frequency, in unusual forms, and over an unusually wide extent of our field.

Rev. E. N. KIRK, D.D., the venerable and dearly beloved President of the Association, died at his residence, in Boston, under a stroke of apoplexy, Friday, March 27th, 1874. On the morning of that day, he sat down, after breakfast, to prepare notes for farther remarks on Revivals, which he had been requested to make at the Ministers' Meeting on the following Monday. Shortly before eleven, he laid down his pen, walked across the room, fell upon the sofa, and lingered in a wholly unconscious state till about five o'clock, when the end came—the end of an active, consecrated, and useful life, and just such an end as he would himself have probably chosen. Dr. Kirk was elected President of this Association in 1865, and has manifested a deep and growing interest in its work, attending its meetings whenever health would permit, and always adding largely to their value by his eloquence and the fervor of his prayers. This was remarkably attested at our last annual meeting, held in Newark, N. J. Though Dr. Kirk required an assistant with him on the way in the cars, in his lodging-room at Newark, at the table, on the streets as he passed to and from the meetings, and in the pulpit, yet his attendance at the sessions was constant, and his attention unflagging. His opening address, though the pen of an amanuensis wrote it, and the lips of a friend read it, was full of the old fire of zeal and love, so seldom combined, yet so marked in him. Those who were privileged to be at the morning prayer-meeting will not soon forget the warmth of his stirring remarks and the unction of his earnest prayer.

He was a man of broad sympathies and varied activities. The preaching of the Gospel with voice and pen was the work of his life; but that preaching ran on no narrow line; temperance, education, missions, and the cause of the slave, as well as the conversion of souls and the edification of the church, shared his zealous efforts. He has gone to his rest, full of years, and his works do follow him.

In the late appalling visitation of yellow-fever at Memphis, Tenn., the principal of the Le Moyne School, Mr. D. E. COTTLE, and his devoted wife, and also Miss EFFIE J. GOULD, formerly a teacher in the institution, but, at her decease, teaching in a public school of the city, fell victims. Though, with the advice given, they might have left the devoted city until the peril was past, they remained at their post, as did numbers of physicians and ministers of the Gospel, and others, several of whom sunk in death in the midst of their unwonted toil and sacrifices.

Mr. and Mrs. Cottle had been in the work at Memphis but a few weeks, they having left Columbia, S. C., where they had resided for some ten months, engaged in benevolent work, and where they were much esteemed. Mrs. Cottle was seized with the fever on the eighteenth of October, and died on the afternoon of the nineteenth, although until two hours before her decease, all regarded her case as yet hopeful. When conscious of her state, she bade those around her good-by, with these words: "I am sinking. I am wandering. I don't know where I am, but I know that I love Jesus."

On Sunday, Mr. Cottle went to the cemetery to see the precious dust of his wife laid away. He was taken sick on his return, and died on Friday afternoon, October 26th. When his last moments came, a bright, happy look broke over his face. He tried hard to speak, but could not, and then raising his eyes toward heaven with an expression of intense joy, he passed away.

Rev. SETH T. WOLCOTT died in Jamaica, West-Indies, December 15th, 1873, after a long and severe illness, but his end was peace.

Mr. Wolcott was one of the earliest missionaries of this Association among the emancipated people in Jamaica, to whose welfare he devoted the service of his life. A few years ago, he resigned his connection with us, desiring to make the missionary and educational work at Richmond, Jamaica, self-supporting. He has since labored independently, but with no less devotion of heart and life to the upbuilding of Christ's kingdom than when receiving a salary. Few more earnest, hard-working, self-sacrificing missionaries have ever lived.

The bright career of the Jubilee Singers in Great Britain was darkened by the shadow of death. In Glasgow, Scotland, February 20th, 1874, died Mrs. Laura Cravath White, wife of Prof. G. L. White, Treasurer of Fisk University and Musical Director of the Jubilee Singers. She was one of the early teachers of the Freedmen in Nashville, Tenn., and assisted in organizing the Fisk School. After her marriage with Mr. White, she continued her connection with the institution, and accompanied him and the Singers to Great Britain, and, though in feeble health, and with her family around her, she contributed, in no small degree, to the success of the Singers, by her judicious counsels and self-sacrificing assistance.

The early spring months of this year brought the death of Miss Ada Clapp, of Oberlin, Ohio, another of our early and faithful teachers. She was at the Fisk School at its opening in 1866, and had been connected with our work most of the time since, except the last year, when ill-health forbade. Her last school was in Montgomery, Ala. The later years of her labors in the South were spent under a burden of ill-health that would have driven most persons from the field, but she toiled on heroically. Her last sickness was long and painful, but she was among her friends, and had the sustaining presence of the Saviour.

Mrs. Elizabeth B. Burton, of our African Mission, died on shipboard, June 23d, 1874, and was buried in the ocean, midway between Liverpool and New-York.

Mr. and Mrs. Burton have been connected with the Mendi Mission more than twenty-one years. They first sailed for Africa December 25th, 1852, and arrived at Freetown the following month. Though able to perform much valuable missionary service, and suffering less from fever than most others, Mrs. Burton was frequently compelled to intermit her labors, and twice she left the Mission, expecting never to return. Yet, on the improvement of her health, impelled by her own and her husband's love for the Mission, she again returned; for the last time in January, 1871. During the last year, her conviction became settled that her work in Africa was done, and in May she bade a final adieu to the mission and the people, expecting never again to meet them on earth. Sooner than she anticipated did the end come, but she met the call of her Lord with a confiding trust.

The last is perhaps the saddest in this extended death-record. Rev. N. E. Willis, pastor of the church in Marion, Ala., and his wife, came to their death by an accident on the railroad near Columbiana, Ala., September 24th, 1874—the train falling through a bridge 55 feet high. When Mr. Willis was first reached, he said cheerily, "I'm all right;" but after pieces of the wreck were removed from him, he said there was no feeling in his limbs, and as he was lifted up, a shadow came over his face, and he immediately became unconscious, and remained so until his death, about four hours later. Mrs. Willis lived through three days and two nights of terrible suffering. A babe to whom death had come before birth, had been laid in the coffin with the father. When told that she could not survive, she said, "I do not know that I have any thing to do to get ready for death; for my future is safe, not through my worth, but through Jesus Christ." A little before she died, she was asked if Jesus was with her in the dark valley; she answered with a happy smile, "Oh! yes!" but quickly added, "But it's not dark!"

Mr. Willis was one of our most cultured and efficient pastors in the South. Long a teacher in some of the best schools in Massachusetts, he brought to our Southern field a power that was felt most happily in his pulpit ministrations, as well as in his influence on our work generally.

Thirty-six Life-Members are reported as having died during the year.

FIELD WORK.

On a field where such laborers sow and reap, and whence they themselves have been garnered, in their ripeness, by the Lord of the harvest, we might expect to find that faithful work had been done. The particulars of that work will be given in the detailed statements of this report. We preface them by a brief summary.

If we look Southward, we see that, notwithstanding the financial embarrassments there—much greater than at the North—very encouraging progress has yet been made.

In the church work among the Freedmen, we report ten new churches, one of them being made up largely of the colored members of the old Midway Congregational Church, formed in 1752, by a company of New-Englanders from Dorchester, Mass.; showing that Congregationalism, though somewhat sparsely planted in the South, in past years, has a wonderful tenacity of life in that soil, and may well be cultivated there more extensively.

Revivals are reported at Chattanooga, Tenn., and Atlanta, Ga.; at Raleigh, McLeansville, and Dudley, N. C.; and at New-Iberia, La. Ingatherings have been made in the vicinity of Savannah, Ga., and in Montgomery, Ala., a steady increase has doubled the church during the year. We invite attention to the details, given elsewhere, of the revivals in North-Carolina, where our work has been represented as so fruitless.

Sixty-nine theological students have been under instruction in four institutions, namely, Howard, Atlanta, Straight, and Talladega, all of whom have also been engaged to some extent in preaching. There is a somewhat prevalent opinion at the North that Congregational churches in the South have but a tardy and uncertain growth. We take the liberty, therefore, of presenting some figures, showing the relative increase in numbers in that and other fields of labor. The American Board reports in 1873, as the average addition on profession of faith, for each minister, 4; the Home Missionary Society, 3⅓; the Congregational churches of Connecticut, 5.42; all Congregational churches in the United States, 5; the churches of the this Association in the South, 11.22, more than double the highest number. We do not produce these figures in any spirit of boasting, but only as vindicating the wisdom of carrying the Gospel and the polity of the Puritans to the poor blacks, and as showing that the South, instead of being unsuited to their growth, is remarkably favorable to it.

The EDUCATIONAL work exhibits a progress marked by such events as the dedication of Virginia Hall, at Hampton; the rapid advance toward completion of Jubilee Hall, at Nashville; the improvement of the buildings and grounds at Atlanta; and the erection and refitting of buildings at Tougaloo. An equally encouraging fact is the steady progress of the pupils in nearly all the schools in the South; the attendance, notwithstanding the severe pecuniary pressure, is equal to past years, with the exception perhaps of those in Louisiana, where a variety of causes have, in a measure, impeded the schools.

Turning our eyes Westward, we discern many evidences that the INDIAN tribes are yet uncivilized, and that the old and bitter contest between their savage vindictiveness and the white man's frauds, wrongs and whiskey, is not yet ended; but we can rejoice that the peace policy of the government, with the coöperation of missionary and religious bodies, is yielding promising fruits in the increased culture of land, the erection of new and better homes, the adoption of civilized apparel, and, above all, in the greater interest in schools and the preaching of the Gospel.

Our schools among the CHINESE on the Western coast are making commendable progress, and their more direct influence on the conversion of souls is not without good results, as is witnessed by the ingatherings of some of that peculiar race into the churches near the schools. At San Francisco, Cal., the religious interest in the school became so great, as for a time to demand a part of the week to be devoted to spiritual inquiry, instead of the ordinary studies, and, as the result, a movement has been set on foot to rent a building in which these converts and inquirers may have a religious home.

Much more money is called for, and could be most advantageously used there, than we can in any way furnish.

In the FOREIGN field, the Committee have been endeavoring to carry out the instructions of the last Annual Meeting, to transfer to other Boards all our foreign missions except that in Africa, which was to be enlarged and strengthened as the outgrowth of our missionary labors among the colored people in America.

The mission at the Sandwich Islands is no longer under the care of the Association, and that in Siam is providentially closed by the failure of health of the only remaining male missionary, Rev. C. B. Bradley, and his return to America. More difficulty has been found in closing our relations with the missions in the West-Indies. Arrangements have been made by which we are relieved of the cost of the schools, and our connection with the churches will be terminated as soon as it can be done without sacrificing important interests. Preliminary steps toward the enlargement of our missions in Africa have been taken.

The return of the JUBILEE SINGERS after their successful, we might almost say triumphant, career in Great Britain, is one of the marked events of the year. Few Americans of the white race have had such a reception as has been accorded to these young ex-slaves, by persons of highest rank in British society—a just rebuke to the miserable caste-prejudice that still lingers in this country. Some of our pert hotel-clerks and self-important railroad conductors could only, by a fee to the servants, gain admission to the empty rooms in mansions where the titled owners have welcomed and feasted these colored people.

The practical results of the visit of the Singers to Great Britain are found in the sum of $50,000, with which, it is hoped, Jubilee Hall may be nearly completed. But the necessity of endowments and of more buildings still presses upon us, and the Committee have authorized the calling of the Singers into the field for another campaign of two years.

The NATIONAL COUNCIL of Congregational Churches, in New-Haven, occupied much of its time in discussing the Report of the Committee on the Consolidation of the Benevolent Societies. That Report touched the American Missionary Association at two points: First, in a resolution emphatically commending it to the continued confidence and support of the churches. A substitute was offered, setting forth that the good work of the Association was now ended, and that it might well be merged in other societies. After a full discussion, the substitute was voted down, and the original resolution was adopted, almost unanimously. A second resolution recommended the exchange of our African missions for the Indian missions of the American Board. Objections to this transfer were stated by the Secretaries of both societies, and the resolution was rejected. This vote adds the implied sanction of the Council to the continuance and extension of our work in Africa.

The Committee tender the thanks of the Association to the venerable American Bible Society for its continued and generous responses to our calls for copies of the sacred Scriptures for distribution in our field of labor.

The last Annual Meeting empowered the Executive Committee to appoint a Corresponding Secretary to represent the West in the operations of the Association, should that policy be advisable. The Committee consequently requested Rev. W. W. Patton, D.D., of Chicago, to take that office, which he consented to do for six months, not feeling certain that a more permanent connection with the Association would be best for him or for it. When the six months expired, the Committee desired Dr. Patton to remain until they or the Association could decide what to do permanently on the Western field. He now withdraws, leaving the Association to order its policy as it may deem proper.

THE SOUTH.

THE great panic which swept over the whole country just at the beginning of the fiscal year of the Association, was especially severe upon the South. It came just as the cotton was being picked, and caused a heavy decline in the price of this great staple, from which it has not recovered to this day. Thus while in general, during the year, the agricultural products of the North have commanded fair prices, the cotton of the South has not repaid the cost of raising.

The Association has, therefore, in addition to the embarrassments caused by the financial disturbances upon the collecting field, been compelled to carry on its great work in the South under still greater difficulties, originating from the same cause. In many cases, the difficulty of collecting taxes has been so great that the public funds promised by cities and States toward the support of our schools have been greatly delayed, and then in some cases secured only by a loss in discount of from ten to thirty per cent. The students in our institutions who have been engaged in teaching, have suffered in the same way, and have been compelled to turn their warrants into money at the same large discount. Some of the most prosperous colored people who own plantations or were working them upon shares, and had been able for several years to readily maintain their children at our central schools, have been compelled to withdraw them or ask credit. Thus the year has been a very perplexing and expensive one financially.

It has, however, been prosperous and successful in respect to all the great interests, educational and religious. The most important points have been firmly held. The obligations have been in general promptly met, and we end the year with nearly all our institutions and churches in better condition than at the beginning.

The following detailed report of the operations of the year is respectfully submitted.

I. CHURCH WORK AND THEOLOGICAL INSTRUCTION.

1. CHURCHES.

Ten new churches have been organized, located as follows: At Raleigh, N. C.; at Louisville and Golding's Grove, in the region of Savannah, Ga.; at the University at Atlanta, Ga.; at the Cove, Alabama Furnace, and Kingston, in the neighborhood of Talladega, Ala.;

at Carrollton and La Fouche, La.; and at Helena, Texas. The church at McMinnville, Tenn., has been disbanded, owing to the fact that the colony of Northern families which led to its organization has not been prospered, and most of the families have returned to their old homes in the North.

It should be noticed that these churches are generally in the neighborhood of our older ones, and are a natural outgrowth of them and of the educational institutions. The new organization at Golding's Grove, Liberty Co., Ga., is composed largely of the former colored members of the old Midway Congregational church, formed in 1752, by a company of New-England people from Dorchester, Mass. We give an extract from an article which appeared in one of the secular papers of that region, giving the history of this remarkable church, which has furnished nearly seventy ministers to the Presbyterian churches of the South.

"Midway Church was planted in 1752 by a colony of Congregationalists, who emigrated with their pastor, first from Dorchester, England, to Dorchester, Mass., thence to Dorchester, S. C., and finally, allured by Gen. Oglethorpe's accounts of the Georgia colony, to Midway—so called because of its supposed equal distance from the Ogeechee and Altamaha Rivers.

"The records of the church contain a complete list of the names of the heads of families, who thus braved the hardships of the wilderness and death from savages, in quest of a suitable home, where they might worship God under their own vine and fig-tree, with none to molest or make them afraid. They embrace many families not unknown to fame. Among them was Lyman Hall, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. These people were of Puritan stock, and brought with them the stern zeal, fervent piety, and indomitable spirit of the English dissenter of the Cromwellian school.

"True to the traditions of their fathers, they proceeded at once to erect their Ebenezer, and built a temporary house of worship very near the site of the present edifice, and adjacent to the plantation of Thomas Mallard, who long afterward was a revered deacon of the old church, and lived to a great old age. * * *

"Here and there in that celebrated fifteenth district of Liberty County, where three fourths of the male inhabitants were graduates of colleges, and morality and religion flourished to an extent unparalleled in the State, a stricken few of the ancien régime only remain, as monuments and beacon-lights to tell the story of the eventful past."

As the result, the abandoned plantations have been divided up and very largely sold by their owners to the colored people, the most of whom were their former slaves.

Of the Congregational church recently organized, Rev. James Porter, of Savannah, writes:

"On Monday, the 27th of July, 1874, large numbers of the members of the Savannah, Belmont, Ogeechee, and Woodville churches united in an excursion to Liberty County, McIntosh Station, about thirty-one miles from the city.

"They were invited thence by the call of the members of the old Midway congregation, remnants of an old ecclesiastical organization formed over one hundred years ago. They have recently been under the pastoral care of the Rev. Joseph Williams, of the Knox Presbytery, but have since returned to their old allegiance. Rev. Floyd Snelson, of Andersonville, Ga., is now their pastor.

"A committee of escort met the brethren at the depot, and escorted them to the old Hutchinson's Church about three quarters of a mile distant, where they received the kindly greetings of the pastor and members of the Midway congregation who had assembled in that place.

"Rev. Mr. Snelson then stated the object of the call, which was to form a council to consider the question of recognizing the body there assembled under the name of the Congregational Church of Midway; that one hundred and three members of that famous old church had united with him in the call, and that he hoped the brethren would accede to their request, and extend to them the hand of Christian fellowship.

"To this end, on his motion, the Council was organized by electing Rev. Aaron Rowe, pastor of the Congregational church of Savannah, as Moderator, and Rev. James Porter, assistant pastor of the Savannah church, as Scribe.

"After due consultation, the Council voted to recognize the church, and then proceeded with the following religious exercises, extending an invitation to ministerial brethren of the various denominations present to join in the proceedings: Invocation, by Rev. Mr. Laury, of M. E. Church, the reading of a hymn by Rev. F. Keaton, of Second street Baptist church, Savannah; opening prayer by Rev. Mr. Francis, of the M. E. church, Savannah, which was followed by an appropriate sermon by Rev. A. Rowe, from the text, 'This people have I formed for myself; they shall show forth my praise,' (Isaiah 43: 21); the prayer of recognition, and an address of welcome by Rev. James Porter.

"The church edifice not being large enough, the officers and members of the Midway congregation were formed in a line outside, when the Council passed around and extended them the right hand of fellowship. The ceremonies were truly imposing, and will, we think, mark a very important epoch in the history of Congregationalism in Georgia.

The new churches near Talladega are the natural outgrowth of a well-defined plan of evangelization established by the College and Theological Seminary at that place, for the region of country round about. The students in the Theological Seminary are employed and paid for doing missionary work under the direction of one of the theological instructors. During the summer vacation, which is a favorable time for religious work in that section, a number of points are selected where a church and school are needed. At each one of these places a series of meetings is held, which is expected to result in the organization of a church and the building of a meeting-house for the use both of church and school. One of the theological students is usually chosen pastor, who supplies the church at regular times during the year with preaching, and conducts a Sunday-school. Usually arrangements are made by which a day-school is maintained a part of the year by one of the students of the College. The work has thus been already established at five places, and will be extended as rapidly as practicable. Generally from $150 to $200 is required in money in order to help the people in the building of the chapel.

Revivals and the Spirit of the Churches.

The most marked revival of the year occurred at Chattanooga in June last. One of the teachers writes of it as follows:

"Lost and found, is the glad cry of many in our midst to-day. The colored churches have been greatly blessed in additions of such as hope to be saved. The city has been thoroughly canvassed by ministers and members of churches. Prayer-circles in families have strengthened the despondent Christian, the unconverted have been easily persuaded to listen, and the people have thronged God's house by day and by night to solve the same old question, 'What must I do to have eternal life?' Denominational strife has succumbed before the presence of the Spirit, and leaders have just learned that 'a book religion can have Jesus in it' as expressed by a presiding elder.

"Three weeks' effort under the direction of Rev. H. E. Brown, of Talladega, Ala., has changed the entire community. If all have not become Christians, all have been constrained to think and apply truth instead of yielding to excessive feeling. The one object labored and prayed for, more than all else, was the conversion of sinners, but closely allied, that these churches might know and feel the true elements of spiritual power that to them lie hidden in the glorious Gospel of the Son of God; that the simple truth might take possession of the inner life, and work out in a practical morality.

"One little girl went forward several times for prayers; while others at once found pardon, quietly and thoughtfully she sat among them. Now a tap on my shoulder, and her sweet voice, blended with a happy voice, said, 'O Miss B.! I think Jesus has forgiven my sins. I am so happy! I mean to live to honor him.' And then she went to explain to the undecided, how easy it was to be a Christian.

"In some cases, strong men groaned and cried aloud for mercy. Two hundred were forward for prayers, many of them saying, 'I have done all I know;' relying upon doing, instead of coming to Jesus. Fifty others sent in requests for prayers. One prayed that 'the Lord would turn her cup over, and let all the filth run out; then turn it upright, and fill it full of clean religion.'

"In the First Congregational Sunday-school twenty-four have begun a new life. Fourteen of these have united with this church, and six by letter."

Rev. E. E. Rogers writes from Atlanta, Ga.:

"I know it will rejoice the officers of the Association, if I tell you what God has done for this church. Thirty-six persons have been added to the church, by profession, during the year ending May 31st. We have had a continuous religious interest, with some abatement during the holidays, since the 1st of November. Yesterday was a day of unusual interest. Six were baptized, by immersion, at the close of the Sabbath-school, and in the afternoon we received ten into the church.

"The building fund for our new house of worship has already reached $916. Are the friends of the American Missionary Association aware of the fact that this church, with a membership of one hundred and fifty-two persons and a Sunday-school of three hundred and fifty members, is worshiping in a school-room in Storrs's School Building? We ought to erect a house of worship at once, worth $5000.

"I wish you could attend one of our Wednesday evening prayer-meetings. The readiness in taking part in the exercises is truly refreshing. We never have time for all who are ready to speak or pray. The influence of this church is reaching far and wide, and its friends may feel that their labors and prayers have not been in vain."

Rev. A. Rowe has recently sent us the following statement of the work near Savannah:

"Our church work is spreading. Five were received into the Belmont church at our communion, August 30th. Nine have given their names to become members at Woodville, September 6th, and five in the city. We have also commenced a work at a place called Louisville, two and a half miles south-west of the city. Nine have given their names to organize a church there, and I have been told by one of the nine that several more are waiting an opportunity to join them.

"We want a chapel 20 x 30 feet at this point. This would give us control of some forty families. At present they meet in a shanty about 8 x 12 feet. The people have bought lots, built little houses, and are working hard to pay for the same. The proprietor of the land will donate a lot to build a chapel on. One hundred and seventy-five dollars would furnish the material for the building, and we could put it up.

"No one can tell the importance of these Congregational organizations here, except those who are right on the ground to see for themselves. Not another church has taken an open, bold stand against liquor-drinking and the liquor traffic. Our little temperance society, organized last winter, has become a power in the city and surrounding country. It has provoked others to good works. Two other societies have been organized in the city, and one at Belmont.

"One of those, who has given his name to become a member of the church in the city, says, 'This temperance opened my eyes. I was blind—whisky blinded me; but the temperance took the scales away, and led me to Jesus. Now I see a man can't be a Christian and drink whisky; a man can't drink whisky and be a Christian."

Under date of October 13th, Rev. W. G. Marts writes from North-Carolina:

"I was in the midst of a series of interesting meetings at Raleigh, when I was compelled to go to McLeansville by reason of a previous engagement.

"At Raleigh, ten or more have expressed a desire to find the Saviour, and some of them have shown great contrition of heart and deep earnestness in their search after the new life.

"The meetings at McLeansville for the week or ten days just ended, have resulted, by the blessing of God, in the hopeful conversion of eleven persons, some of them heads of families. The Spirit of God seemed to be present with power, and many more are still seeking the Saviour.

"In the revival at Dudley, ten or more were converted. I shall go down there soon to baptize and receive into the church the converts, and also to continue the revival effort."

Of the work in Louisiana, Miss Mobley writes:

"We have been praying earnestly during the past week that God would convert the sinners of New-Iberia. Meetings have been held, and the result is forty inquirers and seven converts. Among those inquiring are many of the Sabbath-school children. Our Sabbath-school prospers; it numbers one hundred and fifteen scholars. The white citizens of the place regard our work with favor, and freely admit that great good is being accomplished among all classes of people.

"May 6th.—Since writing the above, there have been several more conversions. Last night, our church was packed, and when my father called upon those who wished to be prayed for, to come forward, seventy persons responded to the call."

At a later date, Miss Mobley adds:

"The result of our meetings, so far, is forty converts—the oldest about ninety, the youngest eleven years. Among the converts are a number of Catholics, which fact has created quite a stir among the rest of the Catholics. One evening last week, while the people were bowed in prayer, a Catholic woman dragged her daughter out of church, and beat her because she was praying for a change of heart. The girl escaped, and rushed back into the church, crying the louder for God to have mercy on her, and give her a new heart. She found peace that night. The mother, fearing arrest for having disturbed the meeting, left the next morning for St. Martinsville, taking with nerevery thing belonging to the girl, except the clothing she had on at the time. Another Catholic woman has written to New-Orleans to her mother to come up here and save her brother from the ''Merican religion,' as they call it. The evidence that some of them give is very touching. One of them felt herself to be a sinner, but did not know how to pray, and had to be taught the publican's prayer. After conversion she said, 'If I been know 'ligion was so good, I been have him dis long time; when I was ten years ole.' Her oldest child is a man over forty years of age, so you can guess, somewhat, what her age is."

Quite recently, Miss M. writes:

"The church at New-Iberia continues to grow. Among our recent converts is a woman (very much of a lady), who has been living in this town about five years, and had not once attended church, until we came here. Both of her children now attend the week-day and Sunday-schools. We have in the church some of the best material in the place; our work is to mould it aright. Of course, we encounter opposition and difficulties.

"What it is to be a pure Christian, very few of these people understand. They profess to be religious, yet the ten commandments are a dead letter to them. The immorality and degradation are fearful; few out of the South know how terribly fearful. Preachers and teachers, to do them the good they need, must be intelligent, cautious, Christian men and women, walking circumspectly in all things. Such, and such only, will effect any good among them. They should also have better meeting-houses. Far too little has been done by their missionaries toward refining the tastes and habits of these people. That they are capable of improvement, is manifest right here in New-Iberia. The colored people look to-day fifty per cent better than they did two years ago; their persons, children, and houses are cleaner; their meeting-house is kept more neatly. This prepares them for a better house of worship than they now have. Our present one does not accommodate the growing congregation."

Rev. Daniel Clay, of Terrebonne, writes, under date of December 9th, 1873:

"We opened our little chapel on the third day of December. The Lord blessed us with a fine day, and we have a beautiful church. We spare no time in asking God's blessing upon our mission, and we are certain that some of our prayers are heard. The time is exceedingly close up in this part of the vineyard, but we do not entirely forget our missionary duty. Inclosed please find nine dollars, for missionary purposes."

Brother Taylor, at Lockport, reports the continuance of religious interest; also, that his Sabbath-school is large and increasing. His meeting-house is crowded, not only on the Sabbath, but on week-days. This house is very rough and uncomfortable; but the people are poor, and must worship as they can.

Will not those of our Northern Congregational brethren who are able to worship in expensive and luxurious edifices, remember their poor brethren and sisters as they shiver and suffer in their rough board houses; houses without windows, with planks for seats, without stoves, but with innumerable inlets for the winds and storms?

From Rev. Evans Green, Carrollton:

"Our church was consecrated to God, on last Sabbath, the 3d of May, and we had glorious times. Rev. S. S. Ashley was made Moderator, and Professor J. A. Martling, Scribe. After the regular routine of business, Rev. Mr. Hooker, of the First Congregational church, delivered a very able sermon, and the right hand of fellowship was extended to the members by Rev. S. S. Ashley. Our church, I am proud to say, will be a success, and a power in the locality where it is situated. Our building, when finished, will be the finest-looking edifice in Carrollton, and I hope, by the assistance of God and our friends, that we shall be able to complete it at an early day."

A pastor of one of our churches in Alabama, who was a delegate from the Central South Conference, and present at the recent National Council, thus writes, after his return to his church:

"While we have had no special work of the Spirit resulting in a powerful revival, we have had what perhaps is as good, or better; namely, His gentle effusions, long continued, resulting in accessions to the church, by profession, at every communion, except the two during my absence, so that our resident membership has been more than doubled during the year.

"The possibility that our Congregational churches in the South are 'little schism-shops,' as a venerable D.D. in New-England has ventured to suggest, has led me to the comforting reflection that, at least in Alabama, they are 'schism-shops' of a pattern long ago established in the far East, where the star shone over Bethlehem, and the choral song broke forth from the sky, 'Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will toward men.' The Lord multiply the number of such 'schism-shops,' and the salvation of this dark South-land is sure."

Of the church work in Selma, Alabama, we have from the pastor the following account:

"We had just got into our chapel, when I made my last report. The increase of attendance upon public services has shown the wisdom of building a church and locating it centrally. Several have been regular attendants at our services, who were hardly ever seen inside a church before.

"Our increase in membership has been just about the same that it was last year, so that, in the two years' life of the church, it has gained 200 per cent. Most of the additions this year have been from the children and young people in our Sabbath-school. This does not give us as much strength at present, as it would if the additions had been from the older ones, but yet it is the right material to make a strong church eventually.

"It is sometimes said that the prayer-meeting is the index of the church. If this is so, ours would be called a live church certainly. In looking over the attendance at our weekly prayer-meetings, from January 1st to June 1st, I find the average was 39, while, during those five months, there were not over 49 members in the city at any one time, and much of the time there were fewer.

"We had anticipated a falling-off in our Sabbath-school, after coming into the church, and holding it at the same hour of the other schools, but we were pleasantly disappointed; for there was a steady increase until the teachers in Burrill Academy left for their summer vacation. There was a falling-off then. Our Sabbath-school has numbered 275, during the year. No one is enrolled as a scholar until he has been present four Sabbaths."

Rev. C. W. Francis writes from Atlanta, Georgia:

"The church in the University was organized to meet the growing need for a congenial Christian home for the young people who were receiving their education here—many of whom had been led to Christ since entering school—as well as to provide Christian privileges for the band of teachers, who would otherwise be without them. The experience of the few months past has more than vindicated the wisdom of the step thus taken. Already the church has come to be the centre of religious thought and activity, and its meetings are the most precious enjoyed here. Though no marked religious interest distinguished the history of the last year, there was a steady and healthful growth in spiritual life, and accessions to the church, by profession, at every communion service.

"The church is organized upon a very simple basis, being bound together by a very plain evangelical covenant, and has already gathered into its fold representatives of nearly every Christian denomination. The lessons of charity thus taught are among the most valuable learned here, and the liberalizing influence upon the students of such a practical exhibition of Christian union, in the region where sectarian bitterness among the classes they represent is very prevalent, is most desirable, and must be fruitful. As they complete their education, and go out to their work, resuming, as most of them will, their places in their former church relations, a new and better element will thus be introduced, which will do much, we trust, to bring on the day when the old sectarian hatred and jealousy shall give place to a newer and sweeter charity, which is the spirit of Christ."

Of the church in Storrs's Chapel, Mr. Francis writes:

"The past year has been one of prosperity to the little church meeting at Storrs's Chapel. Two seasons of special religious interest have been enjoyed, in each of which occurred a goodly number of conversions, and many very valuable accessions to the church. Thirty-four new members have been received—all by profession of faith. Indeed, in all the history of this church, this has been the main source of growth, only eight or ten members having been received by letters from other churches, and those, with one exception, were presented by persons who had removed to Atlanta from distant places—thus disproving, so far as this church is concerned, the complaint recently made, that our churches are built up only as they draw from others. On the contrary, this church has dismissed a large number to other churches, and has given aid and inspiration to all the rest in its vicinity, and its example is recognized with gratitude by them all.

"Rev. E. E. Rogers, who had served for more than a year as pastor of this church, was most reluctantly surrendered by them in May last, in order that he might accept a call to enter upon home missionary work in Kansas. Since that time, preaching has been provided by Rev. G. W. Walker, one of the Professors at Atlanta University, and Rev. C. W. Francis, for six years pastor of the church. Although thus deprived of pastoral care and aid for several months, the church has maintained all its meetings with great regularity and edification, and does not falter on its Christian work.

"It is a very promising field for some faithful minister, and they are anxiously awaiting the advent of such a man, and prepared to give him a hearty reception and a cordial support in all Christian activities. The church has made some progress in the work of gathering funds for a much-needed house of worship. It has worshiped in a school-room thus far, and various circumstances make it eminently desirable that the inconvenience and limitation of this situation be terminated as early as possible."

2. THEOLOGICAL INSTRUCTION.

Four students have graduated from the Theological Department of Howard University, two of whom have entered the service of the Association, in the South. Theological instruction has been provided also to classes at Atlanta and Straight Universities and Talladega College. The number of theological students at these four places was 69.

Of the Theological Department at Howard University we have this report:

"Thirty-two students have been enrolled during the year; two have withdrawn, one to enter the medical department, the other to engage in teaching and preaching at Falls

Church, Va. The thirty now in the department are classified—Seniors, seven; Middlers, six; Juniors, eleven; unclassified, six. The Seniors entered the department at its organization, September, 1870, and have gone over the course prescribed with a fair degree of success. The standard of study was raised at the beginning of the present year. The classes that then entered had better general preparation than former classes, and are doing well.

"The students are from five different denominations of Christians, and have been active in department, university, and other prayer-meetings, and in Sunday-school. Harmony has been preserved. Several pastors of neighboring churches have attended the lectures. In this way the department exerts a steady though indirect influence on churches which represent an aggregate membership of three thousand souls.

"Prof. Reeve has been assisted in his department by Prof. Westcott, Rev. J. G. Butler, Rev. J. E. Rankin, Prof. E. Whittlesey, Rev. W. E. Parson, and M. E. Goldberg, teacher in Hebrew."

The following is from the pen of the late Rev. N. E. Willis, of Marion, Ala., who, with his devoted wife, lost his life by the railroad accident near Columbiana, Ala., as he was returning a few weeks since to his field of labor. He was one of the committee appointed by the Central South Conference, to visit Talladega College, and report upon its condition and prospects.

"In the Theological Department under Rev. J. N. Brown, the examination in Psychology was exceedingly gratifying. Without making use of the technical terms common in text-books upon the subject, the pupils have been trained to observe, to think, and to express their thoughts upon mental operations, and it was made clear that by such a course as had been pursued with them, any mature young men, though comparatively illiterate, may comprehend the leading facts in mental philosophy. In the Gospels and Gospel Harmony, the students also showed proficiency. Each had a large blank-book, in which he had collated from the four Evangelists, by clippings from cheap Testaments, those passages relating to the same events, a method of study unique, but having many advantages to theological students such as those here. Although but partially through their course of instruction, these pupils are already far in advance of the majority of colored preachers actively engaged in pastoral work throughout the State."

† From report of last year. * Deceased. ‡ Licentiates.

II. EDUCATIONAL WORK.

During the war and immediately after, the educational work in the South was almost exclusively a primary one. Whatever might be the age of the persons who were gathered into the schools, the first thing to be done was to teach them to read. The number of pupils that can be instructed by a given number of teachers in the rudiments is many times greater than that which can be taught in the more advanced studies. A public school in a city, having a principal and a score of female assistants, will furnish facilities to nearly as many pupils as Yale College, with its large array of professors and tutors made up of the best scholars in the country.

Almost immediately after the establishment of peace, the Association began to lay in the South the foundations of Academies, Normal Schools, Colleges, and Universities. The aim has been to provide for the most advanced wants of the people, by adding to a sufficient number of its schools, higher departments of instruction as needed, until there should be furnished to the colored people of the South complete facilities for business, normal, collegiate, and professional education. This plan has involved a large expenditure, in land and buildings, and by creating the demand for more expensive instruction, has resulted in reducing each year somewhat the number of persons employed and also the number of pupils enrolled in the schools. The necessity of adding a few men as professors to instruct the higher classes that were brought forward each year, and which are necessarily small, has necessitated the relinquishment of primary and less important schools. This, however, should be said, that in most cases the primary schools have passed into the care of the young people who have been educated in our schools, so that these operations of the Association have not been suspended, but carried on by those whom we have trained up for the work.

The comparison of the statistics of this year with those of last shows an enrolment in the South and on the Pacific coast for this year of 10,499 against 14,048. In the classification, however, we find 76 in Theological classes this year against 47 last; College Preparatory, 231 this year against 182 last; 1292 Normal against 981 last. There appears from the statistics to be a less number this year in the Collegiate Department, 46 against 56 last year; but this is owing to a change in the plan of reporting the College students. Last year we reported the number as it stood at the close of the year after the promotions. This year we report the number who have been in the college classes during the year.

The greatest difficulty the higher departments of education in the South have to contend with originates in the poverty of the people. It is not an easy task to take the children of an uneducated race and make thoroughly educated men and women. But the eagerness and enthusiasm of the colored people for an education, help greatly to overcome the difficulty. Yet never was the saying of the wise man more forcibly illustrated than in the case of the colored people, "The destruction of the poor is their poverty." The South, as a whole, since the war has not been prosperous. Neither in agriculture, commerce, or manufactures has any large proportion of the people been successful. As a whole, the South is poorer to-day than immediately after the war. How then can it be expected that the colored people, who entered upon freedom ten years ago without education, or lands, or money, and with the forces of society so strongly against them, can provide to any great extent for the liberal education of their children? Then how much more difficult it is for the young people who are already considerably advanced in their studies to earn the means for their self-support. Almost the only opportunity of earning money, except by the lower forms of manual labor, open to them, is by teaching schools for their own people. The poverty of the people makes it difficult for them to establish tuition schools which more than provide a comfortable living for the teacher. In the public schools the wages are only moderate, and in most cases the warrants they receive in pay can be turned into greenbacks only at a heavy discount. In some of our institutions to-day, we are taking the State money, or the obligations received by students for teaching the past summer, of which the purchasing power in the markets is only 65 cents on a dollar. Under these circumstances, it is inevitable that the number of pupils in our higher departments will be comparatively small. We have, however, planted and are carrying forward institutions that are to endure for the centuries, and we cannot halt or go backward. They are doing the work which is imperatively needed for the uplifting of the race, and we cannot stop because unable to reach as large a number as we desire.

The following statements respecting our seven Chartered Institutions will be found, on the whole, we think, full of encouragement and hope.

CLOSING EXERCISES—DEDICATION OF VIRGINIA HALL—SPEECHES.

(Several papers have given extended and interesting accounts of these exercises, which took place June 11, 1874. We can not republish these in full, but we present below a sketch made up of particulars furnished by the New-York Times, the Christian Union, and the Congregationalist.)

The Annual Closing Exercises at this school, together with the dedication of the new and yet incomplete "Virginia Hall," have drawn together here, and to-day, a large company of the friends of the institution, including delegations not only from New-England, New-York, and Philadelphia, but from Washington, and various points in Virginia.

The history of "Hampton" is now a part of the history of the country. The brave efforts of the American Missionary Association in behalf of the freedmen in all that section around Fortress Monroe, to which the negroes flocked, after they were declared contraband of war, and the energetic labors of General Armstrong, as an agent of the Freedmen's Bureau, and as the organizer and upbuilder of the institution, are known to the general reader.

The examinations were conducted by the respective teachers in reading, book-keeping, arithmetic, algebra, history, geography, and natural philosophy, with free questioning by the visitors. Dr. Ormiston, of New-York, especially took in hand several of the classes, with the view of testing their actual command of knowledge. His own great satisfaction in the results was shared by us all. Particularly commendable was the reading. It was characterized, to a remarkable degree, by feeling, the fitness of tone and emphasis to the thought.

The rhetorical exercises were attended by an audience that completely filled the great assembly-room, and largely composed of colored people, to whom it must be the grandest stimulus and education. It is this also to the white Virginians, to whom a model school of this high order, and with such various and complete appointments, is an entire novelty. We noticed one of these, who wore a signally unhappy and suspicious look, but gradually brightened up through the day. Meeting him at evening as a hotel acquaintance, he proved to be an editor of the Richmond Enquirer. "I came," said he, "greatly prejudiced against the school, and expecting to blow it up; but I am convinced. I yield my prejudices. It is doing a noble work for the colored people."

The original speeches and essays were characterized by simplicity, good sense, and genuine moral earnestness. There seemed to be one underlying thought—that of grateful appreciation of their great advantages, combined with personal responsibility for them, as on trial for their people. A tissue of religious feeling ran through all their sentiments. Another sentiment was noticeable—an amiable feeling towards their former masters. Every one of the speakers had been once a slave. While they gave their Northern friends the prominent place in their salutations, there were also salutations for their "kind Southern friends," and not a single word of upbraiding or reproach. It is plain enough that out of these students, orators will come from time to time. It was a proud and touching hour when the diplomas were given, and they were sent forth, with tremulous words, and the fervent benediction of the venerable President of Trustees, Rev. George Whipple, of New-York.

THE COLLATION.

From these exercises of the morning, now ended, the company of guests, swollen to at least two hundred, marched under escort across the grounds to the new "Virginia Hall," there to preface the dedication, appointed for the afternoon, by a lunch in its spacious dining-room. By a happy thought, this large apartment had been arranged with numbers of little tables, instead of one or two long ones, and the consequence was a very social time over the abundance of cold meats, pickled oysters, salads, lemonade, cake, strawberries, and tea and coffee.

The North and South thus met together; the past and the present kissed each other. Here, at one table, sat Rev. Dr. Ormiston, of New-York, Rev. Dr. Ruffner, of Virginia, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, and Principal Johnson, of the Normal School, at Trenton, N. J.; there, at another, Gen. Barry, the accomplished artillery-officer, at present stationed at Fortress Monroe, Indian Commissioner E. P. Smith, and Rev. Dr. Dyer, of the Episcopal Board of Missions; at still another, General O. O. Howard, Secretary Cravath, of the A. M. A., and Dr. Ward, of the Independent; and elsewhere, to mention only a few of those present, Secretaries Whipple and Strieby, Revs. A. S. Twombly and J. W. Harding, of Massachusetts, Revs. T. K. Fessenden and E. G. Beckwith, of Connecticut, Rev. Dr. Armstrong, of Norfolk, and E. W. Blyden, a colored missionary from Liberia. The mixture was one that it was good to see.

THE DEDICATION.

The afternoon was occupied by the dedication services.

Dr. Ormiston, with his Scotch fervor and coruscating rhetoric, and most genial fatherliness of advice, made an educational address, grandly comprehensive and inspiring, and rather lengthy. The marked speeches of the afternoon, of public interest, were by Dr. Armstrong, an old and thoroughly respected divine of Norfolk, and by Dr. Ruffner, ex-slaveholders, and gentlemen of the highest old Virginia type. Dr. Armstrong said that the occasion reminded him of a time when he got lost in attempting to ascend a mountain. Bewildered and discouraged, his spirits were suddenly elated by meeting an old friend. "How came you here? You live the other side of the mountain." "Yes," he replied, "and I came up the other side, and we are met upon the top." "So, friends from the distant North, we meet from different sides upon the top of the mountain." And then with most winning courtesy and graceful oratory, the Southern doctor gave the heartiest approval of the Institute, its managers, and its work. "Friends from the North, you are striking in the right place, If there is one thing we desire, it is to educate teachers, and the right teachers; as the experience of missions teaches that the missionaries do well to raise up a native and permanent ministry, so here, what we want is a native body of teachers, such as you are raising up."

Dr. Ruffner began by saying that if there was any thing he never expected to do in his life it was to love General Howard, but turning at the same moment towards the General, with a kind of gesture of welcome, the latter hastened forward, holding out his only hand, which Dr. Ruffner eagerly grasped, in token of good-will, while the new Virginia Hall rang with vociferous cheering. Dr. Ruffner then set forth, among other things, his reasons, and those of the Conservative party, for opposing mixed schools. He also showed how the negroes in Virginia might better themselves in worldly circumstances by industry and temperance, and gave the outgoing teachers—the colored youths and maidens of the graduating class—some excellent advice.

The address of Rev. Dr. Dyer, of the Episcopal Missionary Society, was also a grand testimonial to the thoroughness of the culture at Hampton. Dr. Dyer said that he went to the west with a presentiment that he should be disappointed; that the progress made would not be so much as he had been told it was. But he had been shown that his presentiment was groundless; had seen that the normal work and the whole conduct of the institution was in the highest sense praiseworthy, and he promised to plead the cause of Hampton, wherever he should go. Hon. Mr. Allen, of the Virginia Senate, followed with a lively speech, showing that opinion in favor of a State appropriation for the Institute was steadily gaining ground in the Legislature. General Howard next made some interesting remarks, in which he briefly alluded to the opprobrium which had at times been heaped upon those engaged in fostering negro education in the South, and how it had been faced, and in a measure overcome, by the spirit of love; and closed with an appeal for pecuniary help in the work at Hampton and elsewhere.

One of the very best speeches of the occasion was that of the colored missionary, a pure black, Rev. Edward W. Blyden. His doctrine was that the noblest aspiration and the truest development of the black man was to fit himself to go back to his ancestral land, and to assist in the regeneration of Africa. "He never can find here his true manhood, as an underling, an imitator, and parasite of the Anglo-Saxon. The black race never can be absorbed in the Caucasian. There has been mixed blood enough. Let it stay here. The mulatto can never be persuaded to go to Africa, and he is not wanted there. But the real black man feels it in his bones, and he will go, sooner or later. God has a providential work for him, a work for his own race, better and nobler than he can ever accomplish here."

"How do you like that?" we asked a colored man upon the stage. "Don't like it at all. Don't believe it. I'm an American, not an African; don't know much about that country over there. I'm going to live here in my own country."

Rev. Mr. Fessenden then made an appeal for the support of "Hampton," by contributions from Northern friends of the institution. He strongly recommended subscriptions of $1000, the yearly interest upon which would support scholarships, the tuition fees being but $70 per year. Thirty thousand dollars are wanted for the completion of "Virginia Hall," and the trustees have decided not to carry forward the work until that amount is forthcoming. Who can doubt that it will be supplied? The school is not sectarian; all evangelical churches are interested in its noble work, and several scholarships were promised to-day. After what has been said at the dedication services of the new hall to-day, it looks as if New-England and Virginia were henceforth to work side by side in the cause of negro education.

President Fairchild describes the Commencement Exercises:

The commencement exercises were introduced on Thursday evening, June 25th, by the anniversary of the Alpha Zeta Society. The old chapel was beautifully decorated, and the orations of nine young men were decidedly interesting and creditable. This was followed, on the next evening, by the Phi Delta Society. The evening commenced with a fearful storm of wind and rain, and the exercises were a little delayed, but the chapel was nearly filled, and the audience listened with undivided attention to the speeches of seven young men. [The Ladies' Literary Society will probably ask a place next year.] On Saturday P.M., there was an exhibition of the Primary and Intermediate schools. The exercises, which consisted of little speeches, colloquies, and songs, were exceedingly interesting, and are rarely excelled by such youthful performers.

The baccalaureate sermon was preached on Sunday, by President Fairchild, from 1 Timothy 6: 20, 21, in which it was shown that it is not science, but science falsely so called, that tends to shake the public confidence in divine revelation.

On Monday evening, Judge Burnham, of Richmond, Ky., favored the literary societies with a very able and eloquent address on the "Progress of American Ideas."

The examinations on Monday and Tuesday were thorough and creditable to both teachers and pupils, and what is not usual, they were well attended. The commencement proper occurred on Wednesday, July 1st. It was a beautiful day, cool and clear, and the dust had been laid by previous showers. The bower in the grove was as good a place of gathering as could be desired. At half-past seven in the morning the crowd began to gather, and at ten, though no great speaker from abroad had been announced, the audience was estimated at fifteen hundred. Many came from a long distance by the mountain roads, and every team in Richmond was engaged three weeks in advance. The exercises of the forenoon consisted of sixteen orations and essays from eleven young men and five ladies, interspersed with excellent music. Four of the young men were graduates, two white and two slightly colored, and three natives of Kentucky. The exercises were all good, and nearly all were very practical and appropriate to the times. The whole scene, speakers, singers, and audience, demonstrated that one spot at least has passed beyond the necessity of the civil rights bill.

The meeting in the afternoon was presided over by Prof. Rogers, and was addressed by President Fairchild. At the close of the exercises, strangers were invited to visit the new Ladies' Hall. Many availed themselves of the opportunity. Berea is rapidly improving. A chapel and two or three school-rooms, all of which could be built for $10,000, are greatly needed. With these, the college would have all essential facilities for many years.

Summary.—College Course, 8; College Preparatory Course, 53; Theological Course, 6; Normal Course, 390; Number of Boarders, 137.

The following account of the commencement exercises is furnished by Prof. Spence:

"The closing exercises of this institution for the last scholastic year began on Sunday, May 24th, with a sermon by the Rev. H. S. Bennett, college pastor.

"In the afternoon of the same day the pupils of the Sunday-school were examined in the Bible studies of the year. These were a series of lessons on the leading doctrines of the Scriptures with proof texts. Their aim was to fit the students as they go forth, the most of them as teachers, to state their religious beliefs and the reasons for them according to the Scriptures. The exercises were interesting, and showed that much careful and successful study had been bestowed upon the lessons.

"On Monday, the 25th, classes in primary grades taught by normal pupils were examined. The result of this examination was satisfactory as to the wisdom of continuing practice-teaching in connection with the normal courses.

"On the following three days, besides examinations in lower grades, thirty classes were examined in the following grades: Normal, Higher Normal, College Preparatory, College and Theology. The studies pursued were from those of the common school to geometry, astronomy, history, French, Anabasis, Virgil, Horace, theology, algebra, and instrumental music, in all of which it was evident that a good year's work had been done.

"On Tuesday evening, the exhibition of the Normal class took place, at the close of which eighteen graduates received Normal certificates. These certificates are a recommendation of the bearer as competent to teach common schools. Diplomas are reserved for graduates of higher courses of study.

"On Wednesday evening, the Literary Society held its annual public exercises. These were orations, essays, and a debate. On Thursday evening, the Senior Preparatory exhibition was held, at the close of which eight young men were admitted to college. The exercises of these three evenings indicated fair culture for the advancement of the students, and as a general thing their delivery was admirable. The orations were memorized, no prompting being required in any case, and both orations and essays were given with force and propriety. The music was furnished by the university choir, which numbers twenty-five. The pieces sung were mostly selections from Baumbach's Sacred Quartettes, the Opera Chorus-Book and Mozart's Twelfth Mass. On Thursday, the second arrival of Jubilee Singers occurred, and although destitute of bass and alto, the rest sang pieces in such a way as to hold the listeners spell-bound. What they did thus with only two parts, made it easy to imagine what it was which charmed so many thousands when the troupe was entire.

"Looking back over the past year, there is much for which to be grateful to God in his dealings with this institution. A year ago, the State of Tennessee was laid waste with the cholera. All was sorrow and gloom. But instead of empty school-rooms and dormitories, as then seemed likely, the attendance the past year has been so great as to render it difficult to receive all those who applied for admission.

"Another cause of thankfulness is the good work done by pupils of this institution in teaching during the year 1873. Of those who now are or have been members of this institution, one hundred and thirteen are known to have taught more or less during that time. Eighty-seven of these reports have been received, containing the following facts: Total number of months of teaching done, 481, or the work of one man forty-eight years and one month, at ten months a year; pupils taught in day-school, 7043; pupils taught in Sabbath-school, 5450; total of salaries earned, $17,611. If the rest of the one hundred and thirteen not heard from average as those heard from, we have a total in round numbers of 10,000 pupils taught by pupils of this institution mostly in the States of Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, and Arkansas, during the year 1873, and salaries earned between $20,000 and $25,000!"

Prof. G. W. Walker writes:

"The closing exercises of the Atlanta University for the school year of 1873 and 1874, began with the annual examinations on June 22d, and ended with the commencement exercises June 25th. By the act of the Legislature granting aid to the University, it was made the duty of the Board of Visitors of the State University to attend these examinations. Members of the board were present every day, and their report to the Governor is very favorable. It is now openly and fully acknowledged by even the enemies of the institution that it is in every way a success. Its great power to disseminate right principles, as well as knowledge, is conceded by all. Almost all of the students are teaching during the vacation; yet more teachers are called for than the school can supply.

"The exercises of the last day, connected with the graduation of four young ladies from the Higher Normal Course, were well attended, and were exceedingly interesting. First, four young men, who had won the honor in a spirited literary contest, delivered orations that would have been creditable at any commencement. Then followed the equally excellent graduating essays of the young ladies. After the presentation of the diplomas, speeches—very happy and encouraging—were made by several visitors. Among them were Rev. Dr. Wills, of Atlanta; Bishop Haven, of the M. E. Church, North; Rev. Mr. Woodson, Baptist, from Indianapolis, Ind.; Rev. Mr. Johnson, of the African Methodist Church, Atlanta; and Rev. William J. White, of Augusta, Ga.

"The number of students in attendance has not been quite as great as during the preceding year. The principal cause has been 'hard times.' Yet the attendance has been such as to give full employment to the usual number of teachers. The health and progress of the students have been good. But the one sad feature of the work this year has been that many have been compelled to leave in the midst of the year for want of means of support. The good people of the North have failed to furnish the usual funds to help the needy. So some of our best scholars have been compelled to leave. And 'hard times' is not the only excuse given for this withholding of aid. Some people say, 'They have been helped so long that they ought now to be able to help themselves.' And yet laborers get but a dollar a day, or $10 to $12 dollars per month and board; while the simple expense of board and tuition at the institution is $12 per month. And it must be remembered that many were sold away from parents and friends in childhood, and thus have no father or mother to look to for aid and comfort. The writer of this thinks that too much aid is damaging to any young man. But how can these orphans of the nation get a thorough education without any aid, when few young men at the North reach the ministry without aid from some Education Society? Let benevolent men and women study on this problem, and we think they will be willing that each needy student should have some aid at their hands.

"During the year, a church has been organized in the University, which has greatly promoted the religious interest among the students. It now consists of about 40 members. A new interest in the direction of the ministry has also been developed. This may be accounted for, in part at least, by the labors of the new theological professor, Rev. C. W. Francis, as well as by the formation of the church.

"Some progress has also been made in affairs of a material nature. The grounds have been fenced. The larger building has been provided with apparatus for heating by steam. By the kindness of R. R. Graves, of Brooklyn, the library has been replenished and permanently endowed. The cabinet and the philosophical apparatus have also received valuable additions.

"All these evidences of prosperity are cheering, and give promise of greater success in the future; provided that the Northern friends of this growing institution properly support it."

The real estate of this institution has been increased during the year by the purchase of six acres of ground with a good dwelling-house for the use of the Theological classes, through the liberality of Mr. R. R. Graves. This gives the college all the land that will be needed for future enlargements.

We take the following account of the examination at Talladega College from Our Mountain Home, a paper published in Talladega:

"IS THE COLORED MAN SUSCEPTIBLE OF BEING EDUCATED?

"This question, which at one time received at the South an answer almost wholly negative, is no longer a debatable one. The unanimity with which the colored people have availed themselves of educational advantages wherever afforded them, has proven that they desire to be educated; and the rapid progress that they have made, even in our imperfectly taught and badly governed public schools, has convinced many, who doubted their capacity to learn, of their mistake. This change of opinion has been going on for several years past, until now the answer to the question, 'Is the colored man susceptible of being educated?' is almost as entirely affirmative as it was once negative.

"We have been led to make these reflections by what we heard and saw during the commencement exercises of Talladega College, an institution of learning established in our town some years since for the education of the colored people, and more particularly, we believe, for the training of colored teachers.

"The examinations of the various classes, so far as we heard them, were as thorough and creditable, to teachers and pupils alike, as any that we ever listened to. There was evidently no 'cramming' about it, for any of the visitors were at liberty to ask such questions as they chose; this several of them did, and were answered promptly and correctly.

"We heard classes in Greek, Latin, Algebra and English Composition, examined, and must say that the pupils acquitted themselves in a way that would do credit to any school or any scholars. We were particularly struck with the thoroughness of the examination of a class in Algebra, the ease with which the several members of the class solved problems in equations of two or more unknown quantities, and the readiness with which they gave the reasons for the operations they performed in solving the examples given them.

"All the visitors, of whom there was a considerable number, and several of them old and experienced teachers, agree, so far as we know, in pronouncing the examinations in every respect creditable. Such opinions as the following, we give as specimens:

"A rising and thoroughly educated young physician said to us, 'The examination of the class reading Cicero's Orations was the best I ever heard.' The Mayor of the town, in a short speech made to the school, said, 'The Gordian knot has been cut; the colored man can be educated, as proven by the wonderful progress that your pupils have made.' One of the Board of Aldermen said, 'It would be a blessing if all our schools were as well taught as this one.' And so we might continue to give favorable expressions for a column.

"Talladega College has been the means of accomplishing more good among the colored people than can be easily estimated. Its pupils, many of whom teach during the vacations, spread the healthful and religious teachings that they themselves have received, among their race throughout the surrounding country, and thus its influence for good is not confined to our town. Long may it remain to continue its good work, say we!"

From a communication in the same paper, by Hon. G. T. McAfee, we copy the brief extracts below:

"I have resided in this city since March 1, 1833, and have been for the most part connected, as a trustee, with the principal schools in this place, and a devoted friend to the cause of education, and I will content myself by saying that no institution of learning since that time to the present equals this College, and that the worthy President and associate teachers are eminently qualified for their high, delicate, and responsible trusts. . . .

"And it seems to be all-sufficient to dissipate the most chronic unbelief as to the practicability of acquiring an education of a high order by the quondam slaves and their offspring, just to give attention, during a three days' examination, to the recitations and exercises of the students of this institution."

Summary of Students.—Theological, 24; Law, 15; Medical, 12; Collegiate, 7; Collegiate Preparatory, 19; Normal, 64; Intermediate, 75; Primary, 50. Total, 266.

A Boarding Department was opened at the beginning of the year, in connection with this institution, for the first time, but owing to limited accommodations, only a small number of students could be received. There is great need of larger grounds and more buildings before Straight University will be in condition to accomplish its mission for the South-west.

During the first term of the year, Rev. S. S. Ashley wrote as follows:

"We are doing more satisfactory work this term than during any preceding term since my connection with the institution. We have a class of young men who are earnest, industrious, eager to learn, and devoted to preparation for Christian work: without an exception, they are already active workers in the Sabbath-school or the pulpit.

"A Sabbath-school is maintained in the chapel; and on Wednesday P.M. of each week, there is preaching by some member of the faculty in the chapel. Pray for us."

This institution has a fine plantation of 500 acres and four frame buildings for school uses. It was found, early in the year, that these buildings were not sufficient for the wants of the institution, and it was decided in December, under the advice of J. F. Claflin, of Lombard, Ill., who had gone into our service without salary, to make a thorough reconstruction and material enlargement of them at once, notwithstanding the great pressure felt upon our treasury because of the panic. This work was undertaken early in January by Mr. Claflin, who was sent as a special superintendent of the South-west, and who brought to this work unusual ability and energy. He also took the charge of the school, effecting a reorganization which resulted in an increase of economy of expenditure, and of efficiency in the educational and religious work. The State voted to continue its appropriation, $4,500, to support the Normal Department, and was led also to vote a special appropriation of $10,000 toward the erection of a new building, provided the Association should raise an additional $15,000, and construct a building costing $25,000. We are sorry to say that thus far the $15,000 have not been secured, and we fear that this appropriation by the State will be lost.

2. HIGHER SCHOOLS.

Williston Academy and Normal School, Wilmington, N. C.

Superintendent.—Mr. D. D. Dodge, Nashua, N. H.

Principal.—Miss Ella E. Roper, Worcester, Mass.

Assistants.—Miss Hannah L. Fitts, Candia, N. H.; Miss Sarah Davis, Dudley, Mass.; Miss Esther A. Warner, Lowell, Mass.; Miss Janet H. Gay, Nashua, N. H.; Miss Mary E. Colburn, Nashua, N. H.

Matron of Mission Home.—Mrs. D. D. Dodge, Nashua, N. H.

Number of pupils, 88; number in Sabbath-school, 200.

The first year of this school as reorganized has been a very satisfactory success. Mr. D. D. Dodge, of Nashua, N. H., has been in charge, and has been assisted by several lady teachers who have been in the schools at Wilmington, N. C., for many years. For the want of school-room, the number of pupils has been comparatively small, but notwithstanding this limitation, the teachers feel that they have accomplished more in the way of permanent and satisfactory results, by their year's work, than in any former year. It is to be hoped that funds will be provided to enlarge the school accommodations, so as to afford room for about double the present number of pupils.

In behalf of the teachers of Williston Academy, Miss Ella E. Roper sends us the following account of the work during the past year:

"The American Missionary Association commenced work upon its present basis, in the city of Wilmington, October, 1874. The plan pursued, up to this date, was, gathering the largest number possible and doing as much for each as circumstances would allow. A more concentrated system of working was gladly embraced by the laborers, some of whom had been at this post for years. The unused portions of the dwelling-house having been renovated, eighty seats and desks were supplied. Selection of the most promising was made from the applicants, with whom our endeavor was to be this: to pursue the course of teaching that should soonest fit them for teachers; to throw about them more powerful restraints against the looseness, moral, social, and religious, which they encounter constantly; above all, in season and out of season, to lead them to the great Fountain of truth and light. Eighty-eight pupils were enrolled, and were in most cases steady, faithful attendants. The increased diligence in study, in older and younger; the steady growth in manliness and in womanliness; the improvement in manners socially; the enlarged intelligence in regard to doing right upon principle; advancement in all these points gratified us daily, and sustained us in the midst of many anxieties. Most of the pupils will be with us this year, the second of our enterprise. They come with apparently greater seriousness of purpose in life, and with more vigor of mind. The result of the year's course in music should not be omitted. Regular instruction was given in vocal music to all the students; private instruction in instrumental, to individuals. So much advancement was made, that the pupils are much sought for in the city choirs, and one of the young ladies is organist at the First Presbyterian (colored).

"The religious work had several departments. A regular service was held upon Sabbath mornings, at which, although the attendance was rarely large, we never failed to find Christ's most precious promises verified. The Sabbath-school at 3 P.M. was full to overflowing, making the want of more room as painfully apparent as did the six days wherein we must do all our work. A Bible-class for teachers especially, but free to all, followed the morning service, in some respects the most interesting hour of the day. It was of goodly proportions, in numbers, in the character and the earnestness of the numbers, from youth to old age. These three services, together with the weekly religious meeting, enjoyed the direct supervision and care of the superintendent, Mr. Dodge."

Avery Institute, Charleston, S. C.

Principal.—Mr. M. A. Warren, Charleston, S. C.

Assistants.—Mrs. M. A. Warren, Charleston, S. C.; Miss Martha A. Perry, Holden, Mass.; Miss Lucia A. Kingman, N. Bridgewater, Mass.; Miss Hattie C. Foote, Waterbury, Conn.; Miss H. Miller, Charleston, S. C.; Miss Fannie S. Parsons; Mrs. M. S. Seabrook, Charleston, S. C.; Mrs. C. V. Cuttino, Charleston, S. C.; Miss Leonora Johnson, Charleston, S. C.; Miss Rebecca Peace, Charleston, S. C.; Miss M. McKinley, Charleston, S. C.

Matron of Mission Home.—Mrs. M. A. Young, Fayetteville, N. Y.

Number of pupils, 390; number in Sabbath-school, 432.

In January last, Mr. M. A. Warren, who as Principal has so successfully conducted Avery Institute for the past five years, retired from our work, having been appointed Principal of the Normal School in connection with the State University at Columbia. Rev. James T. Ford, who had been for several years connected with our work in Charleston, as Pastor of Plymouth Church, and had had large experience as a teacher in New-England, entered at once upon the charge of the school, so that there was little break or change in its successful progress.

A fine class graduated from the Normal course, and several young men are preparing for college.

Brewer Normal School, Greenwood, S. C.

Teacher.—Mr. J. D. Backenstose, Geneva, N. Y.

Number of pupils, 37; number in Sabbath-school, 52.

Steady progress was made in this school toward the realization of the idea of its founder. The number of pupils is not large, but the steady, persistent, and thorough work in the school-room is producing its results in the pupils, and the people begin to see the difference between a good school and an indifferent one. Pupils are coming in to Greenwood from the neighboring places, in order to avail themselves of the advantages of a school.

Normal School, Andersonville, Ga.

Teachers.—Miss Laura A. Parmelee, Toledo, Ohio; Miss Harriet V. Bills, Tecumseh, Mich.

Number of pupils, 80; number in Sabbath-school, 50.

Miss Parmelee writes:

"Perhaps to outsiders, noting only the small enrollment of pupils in the school the work might not seem hopeful, but to us, considering the poverty of the country, and seeing as we do the self-denial which those who come are obliged and willing to endure, we are not at all discouraged. Remember that the cotton crop failed last year, that most of the planters are bankrupt, many families suffering for food, and very few able to command money for school expenses. A large part of our scholars came from adjoining or more distant counties, living on almost starvation diet for the sake of school. Shall I give you the board-bill of one young man? Only one item, cost of provision for one month, $2.50 (two and one-half dollars). He told us that he could live on that, and from such observation as I could take of his housekeeping, I am confident he did so. The teachers were sometimes half ashamed of their own luxury, which you know is not luxury at all except as contrasted with the greater destitution of those around.

"Since the scholars were few, we had a better opportunity to study them separately and to mark the growth of character, which in some was certainly very marked. Ah! there are so many things which can never be told—little things, but full of comfort and encouragement to us."

Storrs School, Atlanta, Ga.

Principal.—Miss Amy Williams, Livonia Station, N. Y.; Miss Gertrude M. Hitchcock, Perrysburg, O.; Miss Lizzie Stevenson, Bellefontaine, O.; Miss Nellie J. Howe, West Fairlee, Vt.; Miss Mary Beach, Perrysburg, O.; Miss M. Anna Baker, Oberlin, O.
Matron of Mission Home.—Mrs. W. L. Clark, Thomasville, Ga.

Number of pupils, 645; number in Sabbath-school, 290.

The School Board continued its co-operation in the support of this school. The Association furnished the building and nominated the teachers, and the School Board made it a part of the usual system and paid the teachers the usual salary.

Lewis High School, Macon, Ga.

Principal.—Miss M. E. Sands, Saco, Me.
Assistants.—Miss A. Lynch, Ballston, N. Y.; Miss Flora V. Camp, Chicago, Ill.; Miss Addelyn D. Gerrish, Leetonia, O.

Number of pupils, 716; number in Sabbath-school, 175.

As during the previous year, half the teachers in Lewis High School were from the North, and half from the South.

Beach Institute, Savannah, Ga.

Principal.—Mr. A. N. Niles, E. Hampton, Ct.
Assistants.—Miss P. M. Lee, Wayland, Mass.; Miss Anna D. Ludlow, Oswego, N. Y.; Miss J. S. Hardy, Shelburne, Mass.; Miss Carrie E. Waugh, Scriba, N. Y.; Miss Susie H. Pierce, Washington, D. C.
Teacher of Music.—Miss E. H. Twichell, Saratoga Springs, N. Y.
Matron of Mission Home.—Mrs. A. N. Niles, E. Hampton, Ct.

Number of pupils, 469; number in Sabbath-school, 170.

Of the Temperance work in connection with our school and church at Savannah, we have the following account:

"Until recently no temperance organization has existed among the colored people of this city. The Rev. Mr. Rowe, an earnest minister, sent by the American Missionary Association to take charge of a little church which is under its auspices, and which holds its services in the chapel of the Beach Institute, has been making zealous efforts to inspire an interest in the subject of temperance. He has organized a society, and about one hundred have signed the pledge. Every week, on Thursday evening, we have a temperance meeting in our chapel. Mr. Rowe has had assistance from other speakers only two or three times, but his own ball is not yet unwound, and he throws off threads, both grave and bright colored, which interest and amuse the people. No astonishing success is expected. Some may not adhere to their pledge, but many, we trust, will, and we hope that an interest has been begun which will deepen and widen.

"Several of the pupils of our school have become members of the new society. Some of the boys have given entertaining temperance recitations at the Thursday evening meetings, and we mean to have more of the same sort. At the recent exercises at the close of our last term, a large proportion of the oratory was upon the theme of temperance; and we hoped that the exhibition was not simply successful and entertaining, as it was pronounced to be, but that it would have a moral influence.

"At one of the weekly temperance meetings, two of our younger pupils were present—a boy of about seven years, and his sister, nine years old. As they sat beside their mother, one of the teachers went to them and asked the children if they would not like to sign the pledge, telling them that if they would make this promise, and would keep it, they would be sure never to be drunkards. After a little more pleasant talk, in which the mother said she was willing to have them sign, if they wanted to, they went with the teacher to the table, where the sister sat down and wrote her name, and then the teacher signed the little boy's for him.

"On the Sunday following, the seven-year-old member called at the teacher's home, and talked of what he had done on the previous Thursday evening. He continued: 'Last night they made some punch at our house, but I wouldn't touch it, for I'm a temperance boy. My papa,' said he, 'used to bring home cordial to me very often, but I tell him he needn't bring any more, for now I'm a temperance boy.' We hope that the bright-eyed little fellow may continue to be a temperance boy till he grows to be a temperance man, and that many others of our pupils may follow his example."

Trinity School, Athens, Ala.

Teachers.—Miss M. F. Wells, Ann Arbor, Mich.; Miss Du Bois.

Number of pupils, 150; number in Sabbath-school, 200.

Lincoln School, Marion, Ala.

Teachers.—Rev. N. E. Willis, Brighton, Mass.; Mrs. N. E. Willis, Brighton, Mass.; Miss Mary E. Hayden, Bridgewater, Mass.

Number of pupils, 188; number in Sabbath-school, 145.

During the year, a State Normal School and University was established by the School Board of Alabama, at Marion. Rev. N. E. Willis, our missionary and teacher, was elected one of the Professors, and Mrs. Willis and Miss Hayden were elected assistant teachers. This institution is under State patronage, and the Lincoln School has been virtually merged in it.

Emerson Institute, Mobile, Ala.

Principal.—Rev. E. P. Lord, Olivet, Mich.
Assistants.—Miss Kate A. Lord, Olivet, Mich.; Miss Loretta E. Hart, Rockford, Ill.; Miss Jennie Stevenson, Bellefontaine, O.; Miss Jennie D. Loba, Olivet, Mich.; Miss Clara E. Prentice, Rockford, Ill.

Number of pupils, 233; number in Sabbath-school, 375.

Rev. E. P. Lord reports the work thus:

"We have refrained from writing of our work at Emerson Institute until we had something more than hopes and needs to speak of—though any faithful work in this great field will always have an abundance of these two items. But now we are gratefully confident that we have a third item—namely, good accomplished.

"In January, one year ago, Emerson Institute, after having been closed for some time was re-opened as a normal and academic school.

"Mobile reaches a large region, which can not be reached by any other educational influences—Southern Mississippi, Alabama, and Western Florida. This whole country is almost without common or private schools, and there are very few competent teachers. The colored people of Mobile are exceptionally intelligent and prosperous. Many of the young people have received a little education, but the principal use they have put their advantages to is to make more money, or to get more political influence over the ignorant masses. They prove with fearful distinctness that a 'little learning is a dangerous thing,' and that all efforts to educate them should be coupled with the most earnest and effective Christian influences.

"The state of the people in the country about Mobile is deplorable; they hardly know what a school is. Hundreds of young men are idling their lives away, with not even a desire for a more noble and useful life. In a tour of a week through the wilds and the pine forests of Lower Mississippi, I conversed with eight hundred people, of whom less than fifty could read and write.

"We have in our school now fifteen young persons who are fitted for teaching. All but two of them have lately become followers of Christ. They are all anxious to continue in school next year, and to do all that they can among their people during the summer. We wish to interest Christian people of means in these young teachers, by supplementing their meagre salaries, and enabling them to continue in school another year.

"Another source of great encouragement to us is the wonderful change in the feelings of the white people—the influential class—toward us as teachers of the colored people. It is no light matter for these wealthy people to give up life-long prejudices, and to be willing to have a school for colored children for a near neighbor. A wealthy Southerner, who had hitherto refused to sell any of his land to negroes, has at last consented to sell them land for homes, quite near to his own.

"We feel that the Lord has blessed our labors abundantly this year, and that he is pointing out a still greater work for the coming season, which, with his aid and the help and prayers of the Christian people of the North, we will try faithfully to do."

Swayne School, Montgomery, Ala.

Principal.—Mr. J. M. McPherron, Montgomery, Ala.

Assistants.—Mrs. M. V. A. McPherron, Montgomery, Ala.; Miss E. C. Ayer, Lockport, N. Y.; Miss Sarah E. Brown, Penfield, N. Y.; Miss Helen M. Leonard, New-Bedford, Mass.; Miss Agnes Duncan, Wayland, Mass.; Miss Spees.

Matron.—Mrs. G. W. Andrews, Montgomery, Ala.

Number of pupils, 477; number in Sabbath-school, 164.

The yellow-fever delayed the opening of the school at Montgomery for several weeks, but with this exception the year was prosperous and successful. The Association and school authorities co-operated in its support as formerly.

Burrell School, Selma, Ala.

Principal.—Mr. J. M. Cumings, Tabor, Iowa.

Assistants.—Miss Anna Haylor, Oberlin, O.; Miss Sarah L. Emerson, Hallowell, Me.; Miss Sarah C. Williams, Lafayette, O.; Miss Lucy M. Fay, Prairie Depot, O.; Miss Abbie Fay, Prairie Depot, O.; Miss Mary E. Wilcox, Madison, O.

Matron of Mission Home.—Miss Delia E. Emerson, Hallowell, Me.

Number of pupils, 460; number in Sabbath-school, 415.

At the close of the first term, the Principal resigned, and the school passed into the charge of Rev. G. Stanley Pope, the pastor of the mission church at this station.

Of the prosperity of the school work, Mr. Pope writes as follows:

"The school work has been encouraging in many respects this year. The attendance has greatly increased over last year, although the times are much harder. At present there is a good deal of interest felt among the more advanced pupils in having a Normal class formed at the opening of the new year. Several have made application to join such a class. There have been 460 different pupils during the year, with quite a regular daily attendance, and the pupils have in general made good progress, and some have even surprised us.

"One young man who commenced the year in 2d Primary passed through 3d Primary and 1st Intermediate into 2d Intermediate, where, at the close of school, he was one of the best scholars in the highest class. Of course, such progress is rare. During the year, this young man has given his heart to the Lord, united with our church, and proves as earnest in his work here as in the school-room. He greatly desires to fit himself for usefulness.

"There has been a good degree of religious interest in the school, and quite a number of conversions. Several of the converts have united with our church. The temperance work, so well begun last year, has been vigorously carried forward. A good many new names appear on our pledge, and there has been a deepening and strengthening of temperance principles in all."

Howard School, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Principal.—Mr. Henry B. Wolcott, Oberlin, O.

Assistants.—Miss Carrie M. Blood, Lyme, N. H.; Miss Sarah B. Paddock, Baraboo, Wis.; Miss Adella Royce, Oberlin, O.; Miss Emma Fairfield, Mansfield, O.

Number of pupils, 430; number in Sabbath-school, 180.

The co-operation of the City Board of Education and the Association was continued as under the same general arrangement as that of the previous year.

Le Moyne Normal and Commercial School, Memphis, Tenn.

Stevens, St. Johnsbury, Vt.; Miss J. A. Van Allen, New-York City; Mrs. L. M. Shepherd, Memphis, Tenn.; Mrs. H. C. Belt, Memphis, Tenn.; Miss S. A. Bradley, Memphis, Tenn.

Number of pupils, 283; number in Sabbath-school, 103.

A few days after the opening of Le Moyne School, the first Monday in September, the yellow-fever made its appearance at Memphis. For some time its ravages were confined to a portion of the city the farthest removed from our school, and our teachers felt little apprehension of danger. They were given permission to close the school, and retire to some of the inland regions of the State where the yellow-fever never comes, but they were left to act according to their own judgment. They heroically remained at their post, and Mr. and Mrs. Cottle fell victims to the pestilence. Miss Effie J. Gould (formerly one of our teachers, but then engaged in the public schools), who was living at the Mission Home, also died. Miss E. M. Barnes recovered by what seemed to be almost a miracle, after all hope had been given up. The school re-opened in January, under the charge of Prof. A. J. Steele, formerly of Tougaloo, and, contrary to our expectation, was more largely attended than ever before.

One feature of the school is the "Students' Day," at which time the Faculty retire and give the care of the institution into the hands of the students; from among their number a temporary Principal, Preceptress, and teachers are chosen, who take entire charge of the school and conduct its exercises. The object of this is to test the ability of the students.

Miss E. M. Barnes gives an account of one of these occasions:

"Yesterday was 'Students' Day' here, and a golden one it was in the history of the Le Moyne Normal School. Fortunately, we are sometimes permitted an especial outlook into the future; days when the possibilities which the coming years may have in store for the colored race loom up before us with such vividness, that all weariness and discouragements are forgotten, and we find ourselves inspired with renewed strength for our duties.

"Yesterday was one of those altitudes, from whence we could look thankfully back over the past, hopefully on to the future, and gratefully up unto God.

"Under the admirable and energetic direction of our new Principal, Prof. A. J. Steele, our school has become so well organized, and is under such excellent discipline, that we were confident it could be successfully surrendered to the students for a day's experience in teaching. They accordingly elected their entire Faculty, displaying excellent judgment in their selection, and on Wednesday morning assumed the management of the school.

"During the opening exercises in the assembly-room, we took the seats vacated by the newly-elected teachers, while they occupied ours upon the stand. And a noble-looking Faculty they were. The lower schools came up as usual, marching to music of the piano. After the customary devotional exercises, and a few very appropriate remarks by the new Principal, the schools passed to their respective departments and duties, evidently impressed with the importance of the occasion. The class-work was just as on other days, all the teachers, so far as we could see in the few moments spent in each room, bearing themselves with a dignity and self-possession which commanded the respect and attention of the scholars. Gymnastic exercises were, as usual, attended with music.

"After recess, the schools again came together, and the regular drill in singing was conducted by Miss Wright, who selected new songs, and displayed decided skill in the instruction given. Throughout the day, the most perfect order was observed, each scholar seeming to pride himself in helping to sustain the reputation of the Institution."

"It being the day for our regular School prayer-meeting, the scholars all met again in the assembly-room, the new teachers upon the stand. The meeting was conducted by Mr. Thomas. He spoke with much emotion of the success and pleasant experiences of the day, and of his gratitude to God that as a school they had acquired such power of self-control as to win the confidence of the teachers thus reposed in them.

"The meeting was one of deep interest. One of the parents who were present, in her prayer thanked the Lord that she had lived to see the day when some of her own race could, even for one day, conduct such a school as this. Tears were in many eyes.

"But a few years ago, that noble-looking band were slave children, bought and sold at their masters' will. Looking at them now, and thinking of what they may yet become, what wonder that our eyes grew dim with tears of gratitude that we have been allowed some humble place in the great work of elevating a race and moulding its future to a higher type of existence.

"The new Faculty were invited to take tea with us at the Home, and a very pleasant and enjoyable evening it was. Thus closed what will doubtless prove to them one of the happiest days they will ever experience.

"This has been a trying year for our school—a year of changes. Commencing in September with only two of the former teachers; then broken up in October by the painful death of three of our teachers by that fearful scourge the yellow-fever; my own severe and protracted illness for over two months; then in January reopening with new teachers, thus bringing a second almost entire new set of instructors within four months—we almost feared the effect of all these changes and interruptions upon the school, and yet the blessing of the Lord seems to rest upon it. Our building is crowded to overflowing, and the school was never more prosperous than now, and its popularity is constantly increasing."

Normal School, Lexington, Ky.

Instructors.—Mr. J. G. Hamilton, Miss Laura King, Mrs. Belle Jackson, Lexington, Ky.

Number of pupils, 222; number in Sabbath-school, 450.

Substantial progress was made in Lexington by the enlargement of school facilities on the part of the school authorities of the city. During the latter part of the year, the teachers in the Normal School were supported by the public fund.

Mr. Hamilton gives an encouraging report of the Sabbath-school work.

"The most interesting feature of our work at Lexington is the Sabbath-school work. Organized in 1871, by the teachers of the Association, it has grown from a mere handful of pupils until it numbers in the aggregate between four and five hundred, or, to put it more correctly, until all the sitting and standing room of our large building fails to accommodate the numbers who flock to the school. The organization and working of the school have excited considerable interest in the community, and scarcely a Sabbath has passed during the year without our visitors expressing approbation of our good work.

"The school has a corps of twenty regular teachers, whose interest in the work has grown with their connection with the school. Each month has witnessed improvement in the pupils; their interest never flags and their thirst for knowledge never ceases. During the present year, we have added to the school a library of nearly four hundred volumes. The most cheering feature of this work is that natives of Kentucky to the 'manor born' are the most enthusiastic and devoted workers we have in the school, and the day of breaking away from long-cherished prejudices has come to Kentucky at last. The teachers of the Association who first came to Lexington found a most bitter and hostile sentiment toward those interested in educating the negro. Now a kindlier feeling has taken its place, and the friends of education for the blacks have multiplied many fold.

"We can not but believe that our Sabbath-school has contributed something to the development of this sentiment in Lexington."

CHINESE IN AMERICA.

EARLY in the year, Rev. W. C. Pond, who formerly, as pastor of one of the Congregational churches of San Francisco, had shown a great interest in Mission work among the Chinese, was made Superintendent of our work on the Pacific coast. Under his wise and efficient management, very substantial progress has been made during the year. The most important event was the establishment of the Central Mission in San Francisco, by the renting and furnishing of a Mission House.

The movement originated among the Chinese Christian young men, as will be seen from the following letter from Jee Gam, one of our teachers:

"MR. POND—REV. SIR: The members of our Congregational churches and Christian class were requested to remain after the union meeting was over which was held at the Second Church, Thursday evening. We consulted about our Christian work on this coast, and the amount of money that the American Missionary Association have been spending for years, yet the fruit is exceedingly small when compared with its expense.

"The Presbyterian Chinese Mission House was built twenty-two years ago, and the Christian service has been held ever since that time; but oh! how tedious was the work for the first nineteen years, and how great was the expense, yet the average of those who had united with this Mission was only one in every year. The cause of this slowness was the Presbyterians had not a good Chinese preacher—that is, a good speaker; but since the last two years they have had an excellent preacher (Horn Jen by name); he was baptized at the same mission house nine years ago, and then went home and took a course of study in his own language and the Bible that is translated in Chinese. After he had graduated and preached three years in Canton, Mr. Loomis sent for him to return and take the place of the former preacher. He did so, and has been working ever since, the last two years. The number that have been admitted to the Mission House was larger than during the first nineteen years.

"The Methodist and Baptist also have their mission house and have a good preacher, and we can never carry on our work here as well without having a good preacher of our own language. I myself came to California when I was quite young, and therefore I did not get much education, and so most of our young men are the same. We can never preach as good missionaries without being well educated in our own language, and we never can get an education without a place or a house as a mission and a prominent preacher as every other denomination. Chung Mon expressed himself in a tone of great grief; he said, 'We are scattered as lost sheep without a shepherd, and as orphans without a home.'

"Now, brother, we beseech you to provide us a mission house somewhere near the old First Congregational Church, or in any other direction which will be the most convenient to all the heathen Chinese. Perhaps you may think there are too many denominations already. It is true, but there are not one-fiftieth of the Chinese population that is now attending schools."

From Rev. Mr. Pond's Letter.

Mr. Pond subjoins to his report a letter giving his views of the appeal of Jee Gam. It will be seen that the proposition gains force on examination, and is deemed quite important.

"I replied to this communication immediately, giving but little encouragement, and telling him our resources were limited and would not bear the drain which such operations would involve. I explained that we had no idea of bringing our work into competition with that of the Missions; that what we wanted to do was to add, not to divide, and that on our present plan, we could reach parts of the city and of the State, where operations as expensive as those of these missions could not be sustained; and that we were working not for our denomination, but to save souls.

"But after repeated conferences, I found our Chinese brethren so fully agreed and so earnestly desirous, that I began to question whether the guiding hand of God might not be in it. I find that they have no desire to compete or to divide; but believe that with a room centrally located they could add very largely to the amount of Christian influence brought to bear on their countrymen, without withdrawing any thing from the missions. I have been with them to look at the building which they would like to secure. It will give them a chapel and school-room about 20 by 50 in the lower story, together with a second story which may be divided into rooms, and may, perhaps, be rented. We can get the building for $80 per month; possibly for less. It is very suitable, very well located; at a considerable remove from the missions, but close enough to the chief Chinese quarter of the city. After I had looked at the building, I had a meeting of our Chinese class. Eighteen were present, all of them (as we hope) believers. We talked and prayed about the matter till almost 11 o'clock at night. I told them to see what they themselves could do toward furnishing the chapel and defraying other expenses; believing that thus I should test the matter quite effectually; and I said I would call to-day on some of them to learn the result. I thought that it might be they would show me a subscription of $100. I found one carried already up to $365 and not yet complete.

"I feel that to take this step is to commit ourselves to a large advance, not so much in expenditure as in work. But in view of the zeal, the good judgment, and the generous pledges of these brethren, I feel as though it would be a great mistake, amounting almost to a crime, to say no to them. It seems to me that with this central school, and the chapel services which we shall be able to connect with it, and the home feeling which they will come to have in it, a work may spring up which will add enthusiasm to our efforts elsewhere, and will enlist in our behalf a deeper interest on the part of Christian people in California. I believe that if we get this new work successfully inaugurated we shall appeal, not in vain, for generous collections here. I may be disappointed, but I am confident in my hope.

"I ask you to bid me go forward. I seem to see in this, which has come from our Chinese brethren themselves, a solution of the problem over which I have been thinking and praying anxiously. For I have felt it deeply that these brethren were—as Chung Mon said—'like sheep without a shepherd, and like orphans without a home.'"

Of the success of this Central Mission, Bro. Pond writes us in a recent letter:

"The Central School is grand. It will be blest of God I am sure. And its work and statistics, like those of this month, give me ground to stand upon in appealing to the churches."

INDIANS.

THE American Indian and his future, his character and his destiny, his relations to the United States Government, the possibility of his preservation from utter extinction, and the duties of Christians toward him, constitute a complicated problem, providentially forced upon the American people, and demanding the attention especially of all Christians. It is not a pleasant subject for consideration, but it can not be wisely or safely put aside, and, unhappily, its most disagreeable facts arise from the past action of Government agents.

It is not proposed to enter into any extended discussion of the various elements of this problem, but only to touch it at a few points lying nearest us, and involving present duties, and to state a few facts that have a bearing upon the ultimate solution.

Of the vast hordes of these Indians, who once roamed unrestrained over every part of our wide domain, and who bloodily disputed our claim to any part of it, a comparative handful only now remain. In 1855, the whole number was estimated at 350,000; and in 1872, the Secretary of the Interior reported but 293,000. Latterly, the policy of the Government has been to locate them on reservations, and thus provide for the necessary extension of our railroads, with their accompanying population, and, at the same time, secure the best opportunities for the Indian's improvement in industrial pursuits, and his ultimate citizenship. To accomplish these ends, the present Administration, soon after coming into power, sought the co-operation of the various religious societies. Hitherto, the wrongs endured by the Indian, sometimes from the Government agent, but more often by corrupt men, and the introduction of maddening, intoxicating drinks, which the agent should have prevented, have produced bloody wars, which so far wasted and corrupted the Indians, that many Christians despaired of saving them from utter destruction, and were indisposed to any enlargement of missionary effort, except in a few favored localities.

So strong was this feeling of despondency, at the time the new peace policy was inaugurated, that some who should have been first to respond to the call of the Government, hesitated long, and were only induced to enter anew upon the work from the fact that the Government proposed to remove the evils flowing from the corrupt agencies, and to call upon Christian bodies to select men after their own heart, for whose support Government would provide, and into whose hands all the interests of the Indian should be placed.

The result of the new effort has been a decided success. The alternative, under the renewal of the old system, promised to be bloody wars, like those of 1852–54, and 1864, or, perhaps, as some advised, the extermination of the Indian.

The present Commissioner of Indian Affairs expresses his pleased surprise at the indications of prosperity continually pouring in from all parts. True, there have been some serious disturbances, some loss of precious life, some instances of treachery, demanding and receiving punishment, but not a moiety of what has been falsely reported, not a tithe of what was sometimes seen under the old policy. More has been done for the Indian within the past year, and with more favorable results to the Government, than for any ten previous years. The continuance of the present policy and efforts for a single decade, the Commissioner thinks, will sweep away Indian barbarism forever, and preserve the Indians, if not as distinct races, yet as incorporated parts of our nation.

But some object that it calls for increased expenditure. True, and a great nation should furnish it. The extension of railroads demanded by our expansion, involves extinction of game, implies starvation to the Indian and his family, except as he is taught agriculture and the arts, and aided until he can make them support him. The lands obtained from the Indians have been sold by the Government for from ten to twenty times as much as the Indians received, and a tithe of the gain thus received would secure all the Indian needs in the change contemplated. Can a great nation refuse the dole?

Red Lake Agency, Minnesota.

R. M. Pratt, Agent.
Rev. Francis Spees and wife, Missionaries.
Mrs. S. Elvira Person, Teacher.

At this agency there are, in addition to the above, ten employees. The Indians have in general shown themselves ready to labor, and have done good work in their sugar-camps, their saw and grist mills, and in cutting wood. The building of Indian houses, with Government assistance, has gone steadily forward, and an advance in the arts of civilized life is apparent. A school, numbering in the aggregate sixty pupils, has been continued through the year. A boarding-school is very much desired at this point, and an appropriation for this purpose has been obtained from Government.

Rev. Francis Spees, who went to Red Lake last year, has continued his labors with great success. Besides being a hard and steady worker, his knowledge of the Indian language gives him great influence. On the 8th of February, a little church, of seven members, was organized, called the Red Lake Mission Congregational Church. Seven others have been added since, and the prospects of the little church are very encouraging. It was hoped that a church building would be completed this year; a part of the lumber was purchased, and operations were commenced, when it was seen that the finances of the Association would not warrant the outlay necessary for its completion. It was a great disappointment to the people to be thus obliged to delay their work. Mr. Spees reports the number of his congregation as twice that of last year.

Concerning the need of a boarding-school, the agent writes, January 5th:

"I am more and more convinced that one of our great wants here is a boarding-school, and unless this want is supplied, in some way, we can not be as successful as we desire to be. It is what the Indians themselves wish, and it will be impossible to secure any thing like regular attendance or punctuality till we can have entire control of the pupils. The thing needed is the funds to build and furnish such a boarding-house. I do not apprehend it would be very expensive, year by year; nearly all the work, with proper management, could be performed by the students, and quite enough provision could be raised, without interfering with their studies; and learning how to work and live is no small part of the benefit which would be derived from such a school."

Extracts from the letters of Mr. Spees will show the actual progress made by the Indians at this agency toward the civilized and Christian life, and the method of work among them:

"Yesterday, one of the most talented of the Indian chiefs came into our house—a man of fine physique, with large forehead, keen eye, and commanding personal appearance. He was well dressed in about half-citizen's clothes. In the interview which ensued, he said, 'I ponder at times in my mind over the apparently different religious sects among civilized people, and then of the Indian ways of doing. I often, in the night-watches, when all is still, think over these things, and if I knew the true way, I would follow in it. I urge my family to attend meetings on the Sabbath. I say to my children, If your minds are ever turned, it will be the work of the Great Spirit. In the past, when trouble has overtaken me out on the hunt, with my family, it has seemed to me at times that the Great Spirit has helped us. At one time, when we had been without food for two days, and my heart was sad as I looked into the faces of my famishing little ones, I had a presentiment that help would come, and told them so, as I took my gun, and went out to an eminence overlooking the surrounding country. As I sat there, with my head bowed, waiting, all at once I roused, and in the dim distance I saw a form; I looked again, and perceived it rapidly nearing me; soon there came rushing past me a large elk. With quick aim, I discharged my gun, and had the pleasure of seeing him lifeless at my feet.'

"Yesterday, Mazhekeash, the head brave of Red Lake, came in with two others, and asked Major Pratt for a written form of temperance pledge, and after making temperance speeches, giving as their reasons the ruinous effects of whisky among their fellow-Indians, and their desire to break up the traffic, they came forward and signed the pledge."

"RED LAKE, Dec. 11, 1873.

"Yesterday, an Indian came into the room where I was writing, and said, 'My friend, I have come on a hard errand. A man who is very sick has sent me to get you to come and talk with him about the Great Spirit. He dreamed last night that two men in black clothing came to teach him what to do. He wants you to come quick.' I went with Dr. Allen some two miles, and found an old man, who had been one of the leading heathen medicine-men, lying apparently near his end with consumption. With effort, he said, 'Because I want to do what the Great Spirit would have me do, is the reason I sent for you. I want to do his bidding.' It was his way of saying, 'I want to become a Christian.' I pointed him to the 'Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world.' The poor dying man seemed to clutch at every word with terrible earnestness, and when I explained to him that he was a bad man, and was carrying a load of sin, that he must roll it off at the feet of Jesus, he seemed to grasp the thought, and responded an earnest 'yes.'

"Last evening, we had one of our blessed prayer-meetings. Several, who had lately found Christ, spoke, and one man, with deep feeling, said, 'My friends, will you pray for me? I want to start in this Christian life.'

"The interest of the Indians in Sabbath services is increasing. Last Sabbath, a number of Indians, women and children, came some two miles to church; another woman and child came on foot six miles. Several Indians are expecting to unite with our church, at the next Communion. They seem to be changed men—at least they are already receiving the cold shoulder from the heathen Indians. One of them has two wives; I told him that becoming a Christian involved the turning away from all his sins; that he could have but one wife, and he must be lawfully married to his first wife. His reply was, 'I am man enough for that.' Another Indian said to me, 'I do not know why I feel as I do, unless the Great Spirit has called to me, for I used to be one of the foolishest of the Indians; now I want to lead a different life.' So, in this quiet way, the leaven seems to be working."

Under date of July 9th:

"Last Sabbath was our church communion. I baptized five persons. Four Indian women were received into the church, and two Indian men, husbands of two of the women. Before coming into the church, the two couples arose, joined hands, and were married, then were baptized, and after assenting to the Confession of Faith, received the elements of the Lord's Supper with the church. Dr. A.'s wife remarked after meeting that it was one of the most interesting seasons of her life.

"Two more have already given their hearts to the Saviour, and a third yesterday promised to turn to God, and wishes me to converse with his wife about her soul's salvation.

"The adult Indians are to be converted, if at all, through receiving the truth in their own native language. The children can be reached through both Chippewa and English, but all over twelve or fifteen years will never learn English enough to understand Gospel truth in it to any considerable extent. We have printed on canvas in large type the Lord's Prayer in both Chippewa and English, and I am at work on the Ten Commandments, and will print other Scripture. I can teach them in the church and Sabbath-school in this way the simple truths of Christianity.

"One of the Christian women found an ax the other day, and was advised by a neighbor to saw off the handle and hide it for a while, and then rehandle it and own it. Her reply was, 'No, I would not steal before I prayed, and much less will I now that I am trying to be a Christian. If I find an owner for the ax, he will get it.'"

LAKE SUPERIOR AGENCY, WISCONSIN.

Dr. I. L. Mahan, Agent.

This agency has its head-quarters at Bayfield, Wis., but has charge of the Indians at Red Cliff, Bad River, Lac de Flambeau, Grand Portage, Fond-du-Lac, Lac Court D'Oreilles, and Vermillion Lake. There are 26 employees and four teachers, not including the teachers under the care of the Presbyterian Board at the Odanah Mission. The total population of these tribes is 4919, and their property is estimated at $38,225. The schools are four, with a total membership of 226. Two night-schools have been conducted.

We quote from the report of Agent Mahan:

"The work of this agency is assuming shape—the employees are trying to do their duty, and the Indians are really in a more prosperous condition than they have ever before been; this is acknowledged by friend and foe.

"The school work has been successful as a general thing. Our Lac Court d'Oreilles school, in charge of Mrs. Holt, opened July 15th, 1873, with about twenty-five pupils, the number increasing during the winter to sixty, with the most encouraging interest manifested. During the winter, seventy-five pupils were in attendance quite regularly—the whole number was one hundred and ten.

"The Mission Boarding School of Odanah, under the control of the Presbyterian Board, is in a most flourishing condition. The Government pays by contract $2500 annually, and the Board about $3000, for the support of this school. The children are kept three years.

"The school at Red Cliff has been in operation all the past year, paid and supported entirely by Government aid. It has been very successful. A night-school was opened during the winter, and was appreciated by the young men and girls, many of the former going three miles to attend, after working in the logging camp all day. A good missionary teacher and generous support should be given this school by the A. M. A.

"Another school has just been started at Vermillion Lake, in Minnesota, under Mrs. Wheeler.

"The other school at this agency is at Grand Portage, Minn., and is taught at Government expense.

"Our school work has been successful; the general advancement has been beyond my expectations. When I called upon the children at Lac Court d'Oreilles, and, picking them up on the street, found they could many of them read anywhere in the First Reader, without difficulty, I was amazed; and this in eight months! Shall we not then give more of our attention to this branch of our civilization? Give me good, faithful missionary teachers, and the necessary funds to carry on this enterprise, and our Red children will soon be transformed from roving bands of murderous thieves and ignorant savages to scholars, farmers, and educated mechanics.

"I have two reserves—Flambeau and Fond-du-Lac—that have no school or other improvements. The former are about eight hundred strong, and live in a country where the sound of a missionary's voice has never been heard, where whisky is sold, and the ruin of their souls hastened through the influence of bad men. May I not lift a voice for these Flambeau Indians, and ask that some steps be taken by the American Missionary Association to secure a missionary for them, as also for the Fond-du-Lac Indians? Send us, then, missionaries—persons who will go into their wigwams and huts with the 'smile of kindness' and the 'Cross of Christ,' whispering in their ears, 'We love you, and want to do you good.' With this spirit, backed by the prayers of our Christian hearts, we may yet rescue this poor, deluded, and ignorant race."

GREEN BAY AGENCY, WISCONSIN.

T. N. Chase, Agent.

At this agency, the educational work is carried on by several denominations, there being on the list of teachers one Episcopalian, one Methodist, one Presbyterian, one Catholic, and three Congregationalists, the latter supplied by the Association.

The tribes are the Oneidas, Stockbridge Munsees and Menomonees. About two thirds of the latter are Catholics, and religious and educational work among them by Protestants is almost impracticable. The whole number of scholars enrolled is 331, and the average attendance 142.

FORT BERTHOLD AGENCY, DAKOTA.

L. B. Sperry, Agent.

The employees at this agency number eight, and two teachers. The school has aggregated over 50 pupils during the year. There has been some talk of removing these Indians to the Indian Territory, that they may be at a distance from their enemies, the Sioux, and may gain the advantage of better climate and soil. A delegation from the Rees and Mandans visited Washington in the spring on this errand, but it was decided to retain them on their reservation in Dakota.

Rev. S. R. Riggs, who visited the agency in May, writes:

"I have visited the Indian village several times, and seen Mandans and Rees and Gros Ventres in their earth houses and in their cabins. The earth houses are large and roomy, but badly ventilated. On the outside they look like great root houses. . . . In my intercourse with these Indians, nothing has interested me more than to find the men so generally able to understand and to converse in the Dakota language. On Sabbath morning, we held an English service, which was attended by the employees and traders generally. . . . As I walked through the village and over the adjacent prairie, and saw the red-painted stones and the sacrifices of cloth and other things, I was profoundly impressed with the thought that these people are yet 'heathens.' They have not taken the first step toward the true knowledge of God and the way of salvation. And yet they are now, perhaps, in better circumstances to be approached with the offers of the Gospel than ever before."

The Fort Berthold agency has recently come under the care of the American Missionary Association, and one object of Mr. Riggs's visit was to ascertain what missionary work was needed. He says:

"In concluding this report of my visit to Berthold, let me say, This missionary field is yours. It is an open field. It is a long-neglected field. It is ready for the sowers of the precious seed. The harvest will come on apace. Do not neglect it. Send there the best man you can find, a true, noble, sympathizing, Christ-like minister of the Gospel, who will count it all joy to labor for the salvation of those Mandans, Arickarees and Gros Ventres. Now, may God greatly succeed your work."

The Association has not yet been able to find a suitable man to enter upon this missionary work.

Of the school, the agent writes, August 5th:

"The school is making encouraging progress, though the attendance is less during the warm weather than it was during the winter; the warm comforts of the schoolroom attract many during the cold months, who prefer play during the summer. About forty of the agency children now read in the primer and twelve write a little, while twenty-five are still in the ab, abs, and abcs. The assistant teacher meets classes at all convenient times, and teaches them in sewing and making appropriate garments for themselves and little brothers and sisters."

Of the agricultural work, he writes at the same date:

"The Indians are making decided advancement in agricultural and other remunerative occupations. They are this year, for the first time, making hay for the agency. They have also chopped all the wood for the agency. Quite a number of the men have chopped and sold wood to steamboats this season, and many of them are now planning for opening wood-yards at various points along the river."

SISSETON AGENCY, DAKOTA TERRITORY.

Rev. M. N. Adams, Agent.

These Indians are a portion of the Sioux tribe that was driven out of the State of Minnesota after the massacre of 1862. Their present advanced condition is due principally to two causes:

1st. Faithful, persistent, and wise missionary labor; and

2d. The provision in their treaty by which they receive annuities only in return for labor of some kind. Generally this labor has been for themselves—plowing, fencing, planting, and house-building. Thus the annuity has been thrice blessed. The Indian gets day-wages, an improved farm with crops, and, best of all, habits of industry. This community of over 1600 Indians is scattered along a distance of over forty miles. This makes it somewhat difficult to provide all with educational and religious advantages.

There are four schools and a Manual-Labor Boarding-School, where 36 pupils have been taught, all supported by the U. S. Government. As an evidence of the flourishing condition of the people and of their successful efforts at improvement, Mr. Adams points to the extent of their farming operations, the products of the general industry, and the improvement of their houses. He says:

"Many of the young men have selected quarter sections of land on the reservation, cut and hauled and laid up logs, in log-cabin style, ready for the shingle roof, instead of mud or shakes, and are asking their agent for shingles, finishing lumber, nails, windows and doors, and carpenters to aid them in their good begun work of permanent improvements."

Mr. Adams reports the work of education such as to encourage the hope of great and good results. The progress of the pupils, he says, is commendable, and he proposes renewing efforts to reach all the children and youth of the agency with suitable instruction.

The mission work has been done under the auspices of the A. B. C. F. M., and the agent reports five native ordained ministers, and five Presbyterian churches, with an aggregate membership of from 350 to 400, on the reservation. He says:

"Very commendable progress has been made every way, but especially in education, and in opening farms, building houses, and fitting up homes for their families. Polygamy is at a discount, and pagan worship almost entirely unknown among them. The Sabbath is observed as a day of rest and of religious worship and service by most of them.

"The game has practically disappeared, and this whole population are completely shut up to farming, stock-growing, and industrial pursuits for a living. They are ripe for the adoption of laws, and the support and maintenance of the best institutions known to us—not altogether, however, without some opposition on the part of a few, who, like drift-logs, lie in the stream.

"We have, with almost unanimous consent, opened three school-houses. Two more are to be erected this season, besides a Manual-Labor Boarding-School building in process of erection, which, when completed, will be worthy the best efforts of this people, as well as creditable to the great and good Commonwealth, whose policy, through its Chief Executive, is working such wonders in the civilization and salvation of the aboriginal tribes."

S'KOKOMISH AGENCY, WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Edwin Eells, Agent.

There are here one missionary, one teacher, and ten employees, all except the missionary, who gives his services, supported by Government. There is a boarding-school with 26 scholars, 19 boys and 7 girls. A church has been organized at this agency during the year. Much interest has been felt in the temperance cause, and a hundred have signed the pledge. Last fall the reservation was subdivided into small tracts of land, and forty or fifty Indians have taken these lands, built houses upon them, cleared small patches of ground, and commenced making homes for themselves. This has caused a decided advance in their interest in such matters.

In August, Mr. Eells wrote:

"The children learn as readily as white children of the same general status. There are classes in reading and spelling, from the primer to the fourth reader, also in geography, arithmetic, grammar, and writing. They all regularly attend Sabbath-school, and repeat lessons of Scripture varying in length according to their ability.

"There have been regular services held every Sabbath during the year, a preaching service and Sabbath-school. All the employees are professing Christians. While there has been no special religious interest, the attendance has been regular and good, the average about one hundred. What missionary work has been done has been voluntary on the part of the residents here. The results have exceeded my expectations."

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

THE last Annual Report of the Executive Committee recommended the early closing of the Foreign Missionary work of the Association, except in Africa, and that "the Secretaries be directed to enter into correspondence with the missionaries and others interested, and that the utmost care be taken to consult their wishes and interests in the changes that may be made."

At the Annual Meeting, the committee to whom the report on Foreign Missions with the recommendation of consolidation was referred, subsequently reported through its Chairman, Rev. W. H. Ward, D.D., that they "heartily indorse the suggestion of the Executive Committee—that as soon as the preliminary steps can be satisfactorily taken, the Foreign Missions of the Association be transferred to other organizations."

Correspondence was immediately commenced, and the following results have been reached, namely:

The Association's Mission in the Sandwich Islands is now on an independent basis, drawing no funds from the treasury of the Association, except such as are specifically directed to it by the donors.

THE SIAM MISSION.

The immediate connection of this mission with the Association is also terminated. Negotiations were in progress, which it was hoped would lead to the transfer of the mission to another society, when the Rev. C. B. Bradley, who had been our only male missionary there since the death of his father, was so severely prostrated in health as to be compelled to relinquish all hope of further labor in that country, and he and his wife returned to the United States. The mission property at Siam, in 1849, cost the Association $1600. Little or nothing has been added to it from our treasury since, and whatever there is of present value there is due to the self-denying labors of the Rev. D. B. Bradley, M.D., deceased, who, for nearly a score of years, had made that mission substantially self-supporting. The Executive Committee of the Association, as a matter of simple justice, transferred to Mrs. Bradley whatever property rights the Association had in the mission premises. This was the more readily done because of Mrs. Bradley's desire to remain in Siam, where she would still perform missionary labor, and exert a wider Christian influence among a people to whom she had been so long and so well known, and to whose spiritual welfare she had in the service of Christ consecrated herself. The money value of the mission premises would have scarcely more than met the ordinary provision for a widowed missionary, including the return of the family to this country.

THE JAMAICA MISSION.

The Committee are not yet able to report arrangements for the transfer of this mission. The action of the Annual Meeting was immediately reported to the members of the mission, and it is believed they have honestly endeavored to conform to the wishes of the Association. They report, however, that they have not yet been able to negotiate the transfer, and they consider such transfer to any organization now working in the island of Jamaica impracticable. On the other hand, there is no missionary body in this country having missions in the island, and there is little probability that any will undertake work there. The mission also report that it is not possible for the people to assume the support of the mission. With the assistance secured from the government of the island, they have just succeeded in relieving the Association from the support of their schools, and this, with the average rate of labor at thirty cents per day (without subsistence) is all they can at present do.

The alternative, therefore, seems to be the abandonment of the missionary work there, or its continued partial support by the Association.

The following is the report from the mission for the last year.

It will be seen that there are in the mission three ordained missionaries and their wives, one female teacher from this country, and eight native assistants, six churches, and ten schools. The churches have an aggregate of 521 members, and an attendance of about 1400. Fifty have been added to the churches during the year, 42 on profession of faith, an average of 14 to each ordained missionary. The schools enroll 856 members, with an average attendance of 564.

Mr. Wilson says:

"Nearly all our teachers conduct services on the Sabbath, and some of them we think are in a fair way to become useful preachers. Now, to carry on our work, we ask the A. M. A. to support in the field only three ministers. Can the A. M. A., for the same money, do more good anywhere else?

"There never was a time when our churches and schools (with one or two exceptions) were more prosperous than at the present. We have labored hard to bring them up to their present standing, and to make them as nearly self-supporting as they are. We have fully canvassed the subject of a transfer of our churches to any other missionary body, and we find that it is quite impracticable. We acknowledge that the A. M. A. has done a great deal for the Jamaica Mission, but we think that involves a necessity for doing more."

Letters received from the mission throughout the year gave encouraging indications of renewed activity and interest both in the schools and churches. August 1st, Rev. John Thompson, who has in charge the churches at Brainerd, Manning's Hill, and Eliot, wrote:

"It is true that some of our company have been walking disorderly, and have parted from us for a time at least, while six of our number have gone to a world of spirits.

"Then, on the other hand, twenty-seven persons have united with us on profession, and two have returned to their first love. I rejoice, too, that a few more are now applicants for church-fellowship, and that the cause of God continues to advance among us, for which I trust we are truly thankful. All glory to Him whose we are and whom we serve.

"Our four day-schools have made considerable progress during the year, both as to numbers and proficiency. Our teachers are all godly men, whose aim it is to educate their pupils for both worlds. Some of the elder scholars are in fellowship with us, and it is known that several others are about to apply for church communion.

"The church at Manning's Hill has made steady progress during the year; ten persons in all have united in fellowship with us there, while the Sabbath-school has grown to be an organization of considerable importance. Additional accommodation has been made for the congregation in the completion of a gallery in the chapel, but we need still further accommodation to meet the wants of a constantly growing enterprise."

The following extracts from a letter written by a Christian gentleman, Hon. John Savage, Superintendent of Education for the island, brings out some of the peculiarities of our mission there. The letter was written after the announcement of the purpose of the Association to close its labors in Jamaica. It says:

"I learn with regret that the mission is being gradually reduced, and that the society contemplates the abandonment of all its operations out here at no very distant period.

"I think no one would doubt for a moment that very great good has been done by your mission in the parishes of St. Andrew and St. Mary. The people have had the plain, simple gospel proclaimed to them in language they could understand, resulting in, I believe, the conversion of many souls to Christ; while much has been done by your practical men to enlighten and elevate the people to a higher platform of civilization. It would, however, be impossible for me in a short letter to describe a tithe of what has been done, but I would mention one or two special features that have characterized your mission work out here.

"First. Providence so ordered it that your stations should be located in the midst of some of the most benighted and degraded people in the island, a people doubly debased, so to speak, under the abominable influence of unprincipled native teachers, 'blind leaders of the blind,' who held the people in the chains of heathenish superstition and vice, to the utter exclusion of all the purifying principles of Christianity. Your missionaries have had to contend with these wretched false teachers more than any others in the island; and during all these years they have bravely fought the battle with the sword of truth in hand; and have rescued scores, if not hundreds, from the demoralizing influence of these wolves in sheeps' clothing.

"Second. Your denominational system has been less rigid, or less sectarian, than any other in the colony. Consequently there has been more freedom of thought, and real earnest inquiry after truth, and appeals to the word of God in your mission, than may be found among those who are bound by the crystallized theological dogmas of rigid sectarian systems. Moreover, the influence of this liberty and toleration among your brethren has been not only beneficial to the people of their charge, but has also extended to many others outside your denomination, thus promoting the cause of truth generally in the island.

"Third. Practical industry and the dignification of manual labor has been another marked feature of your mission. Your ministers have not been ashamed to go into the woods and fields with their axes and hoes to engage in real hard toil, thus demonstrating to the people the true dignity of labor, and encouraging them in habits of industry and self-dependence. And though their example in this respect has not been followed as much as could be desired, yet some good impressions have been made, and a seed sown that will yet, I believe, bear precious fruit.

"While it was obviously of the first importance that a people who had been by a long and cruel system of slavery taught to regard all manual labor as a degradation should be set right on such a vital question, yet scarcely a missionary among the two hundred in the island, except your brethren, would stoop to set such an example to the people as they required. In this your mission has almost stood alone; the Moravians have done a little, and deserve much credit for their courage and self denial; while the continuation and extension of such a work can not but be most heartily desired by all who take an interest in the welfare of Jamaica.

"The state and prospect of your schools are certainly very cheering and encouraging just now, and it would be a sad pity if any thing should occur to retard their progress to still higher degrees of efficiency and usefulness. I should be very sorry to see your missions abandoned, because none of the other regular denominations would or even could enter into your peculiar labors."

This testimony from such a source is very encouraging, and is commended to the attention of the Association. The appropriation asked for to secure the continued prosperity of the six churches and ten schools is three thousand dollars.

MENDI MISSION, WEST-AFRICA.

Stations and Out-stations.—Good Hope (Sherbro Island), Avery, and eight out-stations or preaching-places.

Missionaries.—Rev. J. K. Billheimer; Rev. G. P. Claflin; Daniel W. Burton; Mrs. Billheimer; Mrs. Claflin; Mrs. E. B. Burton (deceased), and Mrs. M. M. Mair.

Under Appointment.—Barnabas Root, Robert Kirk.

Native Assistant at Avery.—Samuel Goodman.

Teachers.—Elias Tucker, Mrs. During, Mrs. Goodman, and two native helpers.

Mrs. Burton died at sea on her return from the mission, June 23d. Her death was reported in the August number of our magazine.

In May last, Mrs. Billheimer returned to this country, partly on account of her own illness, and partly on account of her child's. While at the mission, her services were more than usually valuable, because of her success as a missionary physician. She expects to return to Africa.

Mr. Burton and Mr. Root are expecting soon to embark for the mission.

During the year, the labors of the mission have been much as usual—the ordinary services of the Sabbath morning and evening, Sunday-school in the afternoon, and family, general, and female prayer-meetings, Bible-class, etc., during the week. In addition to these exercises, every Sabbath some of the native assistants, with other members of the mission church, have gone to the neighboring villages to make known the true God, and the way of life through an atoning Redeemer. They have been every where well received.

At Good Hope, Mr. Claflin reports efforts more than usually direct for the suppression of intemperance; and at one time reported the enrollment of more than forty names in a total abstinence society. He reports an addition of seven members to the church the first Sabbath in July. All of them, he says, had been formerly members of churches in Sierra Leone, but had been long living like the unregenerate, and now assign their real conversion to a recent date. The church now numbers 42.

The school at Good Hope numbers 60 pupils, and is now under the care of native teachers.

The Avery Station is on the mainland, about forty miles north by east from Good Hope. It has been often, of late years, disturbed by wars in the near neighborhood. Mahno, the nearest native town, has been thus destroyed three times. A small Christian community is being gathered around the mission that gives much encouragement, and the mission has received for its members the confidence and respect of the natives wherever they go. Mr. Billheimer reports three week-day evening prayer-meetings. Early in the year he wrote of many precious meetings, a crowded chapel, and one person professing conversion; with others struggling toward the light.

At a later date, Mr. Burton reported six recent converts. He says, the people north of Avery are largely Mendi, and the Mendi influence is continually increasing. The people rejoice at the idea of having mission laborers sent among them, and at Senehu, the principal chief, Banyah, it is said, has built a large house for the mission. An insufficient supply of missionaries has prevented the occupancy of it.

There is satisfactory reason to believe that a permanent peace has been secured, and thus the removal of one of the most formidable embarrassments of the mission accomplished. A tripartite treaty of peace has been entered into, the chiefs of both sides of the warring sections constituting two of the parties, and the British Government to whom all future differences are to be referred, the third. The obligations of this treaty were assumed by the contending parties with the most solemn and imposing native ceremonies, after which the written treaty was signed by sixteen chiefs, in the presence of the British commandant acting in behalf of his Government.

This treaty was made some months ago, and at the latest advices the country was rejoicing in peace; confidence and a sense of security were rapidly increasing, and the peoples so recently at war were freely intermingling with each other. Good results to the cause of Christ it was hoped would follow.

Although the condition and prosperity of the mission are not by any means what are desired, confidence in the importance of Africa as a field of missionary labor is in no measure abated; nor is there any more reason than heretofore to doubt the success of missionary labor there, in measure fully proportioned to its extent. Nor is the country less open, nor the missionary less cordially welcomed, not to say sought for, in all the region around the mission. But three or four feeble missionaries can not do the work demanded, and the richer results so much to be desired can not be reasonably hoped for, without a considerable increase of the missionary force. The good already accomplished there is not to be measured so much by the number of souls converted as in the general influence of the mission over all the surrounding region, the respect it has gained, the preparation for a wider sowing of seed and a richer harvest, and the demand created for a large number of mission stations. But where are the missionaries to man them? The command is, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." The cry from central and interior Africa is, "Come over and help us," and the reply is, "The climate is unhealthy." A merchant advertised in England for a young man to go with him to the western coast of Africa, and in forty-eight hours, for pecuniary gain, more than threescore offered. The President of the United States, in our late rebellion, called for volunteers in a desolating war, and the refrain from every part of the country was, "We are coming, Father Abraham, six hundred thousand strong." Carry my Gospel to the millions of Africa, say the command and the providence of God, and the strained ear is pained with listening for a faint reply. If, under the stimulus of gain, or the higher stimulus of patriotism, men are so ready to risk death, what ought we not to expect from love for Christ and zeal for the spread of his kingdom?

But the providences of God seem to indicate that to Africa's children, the Freedmen in training and to be trained in the South, will be largely given the honor of carrying Christianity and true civilization into the great haunts of the former slave-trade, and thence bearing the Gospel, with its attendant blessings, into the vast and, as yet, unknown interior.

To prepare the way for these oncoming numbers, to make choice of the most suitable locations, to re-lay, if need be, the foundations, to organize with efficiency any needed expansion, and, under the leadings of Divine providence, to secure, as far as may be, the conditions of Gospel success, is a work of no small magnitude, demanding the most careful examination of the whole field.

For this preliminary investigation, Rev. E. M. Cravath, our Field Secretary, and Rev. E. A. Ware, President of Atlanta University, have offered their services, and the Executive Committee have resolved that they "heartily approve of the proposal made by Rev. E. M. Cravath and Rev. E. A. Ware to go to Africa to inspect our Mendi Mission, and make such exploration and investigation as may seem best, with a view to reorganization and greater efficiency, such as is demanded by the nature of the trust creating our permanent fund for Africa, the past history of the Association, the relations of its work among the Freedmen to the evangelization of Africa, and the recent indorsement of the National Council."

The valuable experience of these brethren during the last ten years in our Southern field, gives them a fitness for this work, from which the best results are anticipated. They are expected to sail early in November.

(Since the Annual Meeting, it has been decided by the Executive Committee that the interests of the work in this country, and the pressure on our finances, demand the postponement of this trip.)

Rev. G. D. Pike, who has of late given much thought to Africa as a mission field, has prepared a paper, which will be presented to the meeting.

SERMON.

THE LOGIC OF OUR MISSIONS TO ALIEN RACES IN AMERICA.

"And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us."—Acts 17 : 26, 27.

The logic of our missionary work rests securely upon data contained in this passage. Five great propositions are here which sustain it—five great biblical propositions. They are found in no other book than the Bible, in no other religion than that which is at once both Jewish and Christian, which had long had an Old Testament, which was now coming to have a New Testament. The apostle who embodied these propositions in the "new doctrine" he preached to Epicureans and Stoics occupying for the time the council-seats of stone on Mars Hill, along with market-men and Athenian idlers, and here and there an Areopagite, had learned them from Moses and from Jesus. His discourse then and there was of a spiritual deity and a spiritual worship. His inference, two verses later, was against idolatry—the stately and glittering idolatry that crowded the market porticoes from which they had brought him, the hill, the Acropolis on his right, and summit and plain on every side with temples, altars, and statues. The sweep of his great argument takes in these two verses on its way. It has been said to embrace theology, anthropology, and Christology, and these two verses contain its anthropology. We take just so much out of the centre of his argument to show how it supports all missionary work, and especially the peculiar missionary work of this Association.

The first proposition affirms the common and equal divine origin of all men.

The words, "and hath made of one blood all nations," have been taken to mean our common essential humanity merely—that the race is one, and but one. They signify much more, the divine authorship of this—that the Godhead which is not like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven with art and man's device, made it of one. Paul takes in his hand here the flag Moses planted, and sets it up farther on. The author of Genesis had written, And God said, Let us make man. The apostle to the Gentiles declares, And hath made of one blood. And he declares it to men who had no idea of complete national unity even, howsoever at any time or by whatsoever their tribes were bound together, much more of any unity essential to mankind.

If it were only the identity of our mental and moral nature which he asserts, this would be enough for the logic of missions. Inspiration in him might have contented itself with setting forth the spiritual unity of human beings, and a common worship and duty for all. Africans, Indians, and Chinese to-day, with their common phenomena of mind, by birth, language, legends, games, manners, assemblies, religious ideas, sacrifices, temples, festivals, would prove such a unity. If matter and mind are one, they would prove more—a physiological as well as psychological identity in the races. On the other hand, if matter and mind are diverse, these phenomena would establish only a presumption of physiological unity. But Paul—thinking nothing of a psychology or a physiology far more modern than himself—affirms in the most comprehensive sense our common divine origin. The highest proof of it is seen in the fact that negroes, red men, Mongolians perform the mental and moral acts of men, do business, make contracts, govern and are governed, sustain the personal human relations, form intuitive ideas, construct generalizations, pursue the processes of pure thought, do right and wrong, make, obey, and violate laws, commit crimes, suffer punishment, believe in God and in Christ. But there is lower proof enough besides.

"Blood" is taken here by interpreters figuratively, as if put for nature or race-constitution; used "in a slightly metaphorical sense," says one. But Paul might have said, "made of one soul or spirit," and he did not. Or he might have simply said "made of one"—omitting all such characterizing, specific words,* and then we should be obliged to supply his ellipsis in thought, with substance or kind of material. The sense would still be, made of one stuff or constitution—made men in distinction from other creatures—one in reason, feeling, will—personal and spiritual. But he does not omit the full and complete identity of men. If he did not know, we do, that if the doctrine of one blood goes, that of one soul would go soon after. Physically phrased here the brotherhood must needs be a thoroughgoing brotherhood. It takes in the peculiar constitution of the vital element as the lowest point in the divine causation, and so all above it—a common constitution for morals and religion—as all belonging to all men and to men alone.

* As some MSS. do, the Vatican Codex, for example, but the Sinaitic (Tischendorf) does not.

The difference between human life and what is called life in other creatures—in animal or plant—is obvious enough, to man at least. And it was just as obvious as now before Paul's day. The molecule never knew itself as a molecule, or the globe itself as a globe, or the beast itself as a beast; but Africans, Indians, Chinese know that they are men, and that they and Americans are brothers. I think Paul uses the word "blood" in a comprehensive and not in a figurative sense. He does not take one thing for another entirely different, the two being mutually exclusive—or a part for the whole; but he takes the part and the whole, or in affirming of the part he affirms of the whole. As an Old Testament scholar, he knew from Leviticus at least, if not otherwise, that the life is in the blood. He must have held, as a Jew, that there is that in it which the blood of bulls and of goats can not supply, any more than it can be sacrifice for sin. He did say, when he wrote to the Christians of Corinth, "All flesh is not the same flesh; but there is one kind of flesh of men, another flesh of beasts, another of fishes, and another of birds." Such facts do not depend upon anatomical or chemical science for being known; they are of ordinary observation. His inspired common sense, anticipating modern scholarship, masses the race religiously and naturally together. He leaves margin enough for our physiology to work in and show how all races are of one blood—one species of being, body and spirit. Of transfusion of blood, as known in recent science and in medical practice, he could have had not the slightest idea; that it is never really harmless to inject the contents of the veins of one species into the veins of another, when the corpuscles differ; that this most complex of the fluids of the body antedates organization; that every substance taken into the system passes through it; that the vital properties of the tissues depend upon its vital properties alone; that food, matter, protoplasm are good for nothing save as the element which is in the living blood—and living human blood—is added thereto, and brings them into subjection to itself; all this is far later knowledge. He had no more anticipation of it than that the science, so-called, which not long since denied the common origin of men would turn back on itself and declare the common origin of man and brute. His terse affirmation struck the plain open truth which overpasses all science—the complete and universal humanness of human nature, and all that comes out of this which the brute never reaches—beginning with what is peculiar in the physical constitution and life, and stretching upward to what is highest in reason and spirit.

The Father of all men sets up here, in this apostolic proposition, an outpost against inhumanity, oppression, lack of mercy, of equity, and of benevolent love among his creatures. The moral bulwark against these and all despising and injuring of our fellow-men is, of course, ever the strongest, especially as fortified by a divine authority and law and penalty; but this outpost has its use, and against it the waves of that sort of thinking, scientific or other, which ignores faith and hates religious duty and enervates even humanity, roll up at times and beat furiously and then subside. The moral argument for missions is the crowning one. It never fails. It is that which moves mightily secretaries, preachers, teachers, Bible-readers, which touches the heart of the wealthy metropolitan as he lays down the monthly missionary journal and signs a check in favor of the office from which it issues, which constrains the widow still to give her mite; but we have more than that. At the very threshold of all dehumanizing classifications that would exclude any race, like the three this Association cares for, from the pale of human sympathy and Christian charity, the remorseless materialist, the heartless oppressor, domestic or political, the lustful trader in the birthrights and virtue of other races, the unpitying buyer and seller of men, meets the divine dictum that establishes these races forever within that kind and gentle pale. The trampled races are as human as the most erect. The mixed races are as human as the pure. There is no people, howsoever obscure or degraded, or decimated and dwindled, that does not belong to the solidarity of humanity; that is not capable of society and culture and worship; that can not make treaties with other men, as brutes never did or can, and is not entitled to have them kept; that can not be brought to God; that is not the equal of others in the eye of his law; that has not a right to help from every other toward character, goodness, and all good.

The Athenian whim, held by the rabble as well as by the philosophers who challenged him in the Agora, that they were Autochthones, born of the soil, which chemical analysis and the book of Genesis, ages older, in a sense support, only showing that all men are likewise, and that there is no essential difference in soil or in men, doubtless recurred to the Apostle, thinking out his argument upon his feet upon Areopagus, for it bore hard upon him as a Jew addressing Greeks. He knew its sources well in feeling and in thought, knew well the doctrine, taught long in his native Tarsus, that all things are of God and in God, that the world is the life of God, and its beginning and phenomena the development of God; and the other doctrine that man's life and every thing lower that is called life had from the first a physical basis only; knew that the representatives of both on the stone seats before him—Stoical Pantheist, Epicurean Atheist—agreed in this, that soul is body, that matter only is real, that supremest God is original matter. He met both with this: You and all your fellow-men are offspring of that Creative Force which is Personal Spirit. Successors of long lines of thinkers and schools that had struggled with the question—now cast into the forefront again in our day—Has the material world potency in itself to develop all forms of existence? or is it vitalized by mind? he had announced to them the Bible truth of creation. The world is a series of forces, said the Stoic; a concourse of atoms, said the Epicurean. Matter and force are one, God is fire, air, ether, said the Stoic; every thing is from mechanical sources, the gods even are known through the atom-pictures and machinery of sense, and limited every way like men and things, nothing is an intentional arrangement of God, said the Epicurean, the framework of heaven itself is not his work. God made the world and all therein, says Paul, all that exists, giving to all life and breath and all things. Then turning to his whole audience as Greeks, without singling out the philosophers, he rebuked their pride of place and pride of race, and the materialism on which both rested, alike and together. A diversity of human origins he could no more tolerate than a diversity of gods. If merely material, indeed, they might be plural; if of divine creation, how could they be? If God is one, it is reasonable that all made in his image, with characteristics that compel classification together, are also; if they are one, he must be. Shall there be contempt for any of the same parentage within the same family lines? Could Greek polytheists be of better clay than the Jewish monotheist who brought them an infinitely higher religion and an infinitely gracious Gospel? And in removing the fancy of a select origin and a superior make out of the path of his argument against idolatry from a spiritual Creator, he gave us the common equal divine origin of men—spirit and body—as the first postulate of our argument for missions to neglected, depraved, and perishing races.

The second proposition affirms the divine distribution of races throughout the world as to place and time.

Taking Paul's words in their full strength, they involve the general right, under providence, of each portion of the human family to make its home anywhere on earth. Interpreters are divided in opinion whether the immediate object of the word "made" is the clause beginning, "of one blood," or the next clause beginning, "to dwell." Either way, the drift runs thus, with the infinitive of design, "And hath made every nation of men"—instead of "all nations"—to settle, "to house itself on the surface of the whole earth." There is more here than a bill of rights to all collectively; they vest in each distributively. And this because the divine Author of all alike has made assignment to each of its habitat and home. It was not accident, it was not physical necessity, it was not their own whim, it was not the injustice or violence of others that decided where any race should dwell, or when. It was Providence. It was a divine Sovereignty, wise and good, using all these and overruling them. To none of all the mob of mythological gods, superior or inferior, to none of their tutelary genii or demons, had Paul's hearers ever ascribed this kindly office. Alike they held any true doctrine of providence in abhorrence. Providence with them was simply human foresight, and that never determined the times or the bounds of their habitation. With whatever else they associated any design, it was never with this. Even Aristotle's notion of final cause never included it. The apostle preached in this regard "new doctrine." He had learned it from David in the 115th Psalm: "The heaven, even the heavens, are the Lord's; but the earth hath he given to the children of men." He had learned it from Moses in Deuteronomy, "Remember the days of old . . . when the Most High divided to the nations their inheritance, when he separated the sons of Adam, he set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel." In the original apportionment he had the seed that should serve him, and provision for them, in his eye. Nearly a thousand years before that song of Moses after the second law, when the dispersion of men occurred in the days of that son o Shem, whose name was Peleg, or Division, "for in his days was the earth divided," this was true; and nearly two centuries earlier also, when there "went forth of the ark three sons of Noah, and of them was the whole earth overspread." At the feet of Gamaliel, if not in younger years, Paul had become familiar with all this, and the divine purpose in it. No Greek scholar was so learned, no sage so acute in tracing the causes of things, as to know as much. Those before him might remember that the founders of the very schools they represented that day came from the East, from Samos in Asia, from Cyprus in the farther Mediterranean; that their own race had been—since Homer and the siege of Troy—not fixed, but movable; that all the Hellenic tribes had been time and again displaced in their early abodes; that cities founded by them, Eolic, Ionic, Dorian, lined the eastern shore of the Hellespont, famous cities, for whose freedom their fathers struggled with the might of Persia; that Greek colonies had spread in Africa, in Italy, in Spain, in Gaul. But that God governed this they understood not. Whatever else they knew or did not know of Attican communities long since consolidated into their own Athens, or of the time, place, or manner of the emigration of the planters of these to Greece, or of the relations to the Pelasgi who held the soil before, or of that great Aryan mother-race which the modern study of languages has discovered, and its migrations west, north, east, and south; "this babbler" whom they had encountered in the colonnades of the valley below could tell them of a register of nations older than any of their books and a divinely guided history of their distribution of which they had never heard: "this setter forth of strange gods" could show them a wisdom and goodness in the true God of which they had never dreamed. Of Javan or Kittim, their own progenitor, descendant of Japheth, son of Noah, they were ignorant. Of the three great historic roots of mankind after the flood, Shem, Ham, Japheth, the stable, the passionate, the progressive—of their establishment in Asia, Africa, and Europe respectively—of the formation of race-characteristics afterward—of the fruits of migration and environment, of geographic and climatic conditions, food, and methods of life, and modifications of physique and mental development resulting as guided by Him who determined the times and the bounds of men's habitations, they had not so much as conceived. That Providence colors the mental scenery as well as the skin; that the appointed environment of all of us—individuals and bodies of men—brings out in relief one element of our common human nature and represses another as God pleases; that Greece in part made Greeks, land, and sea, and changeful sky, just as Judea made Jews, and in part the history of each with its men and institutions made each, all under God; that distant Ethiopians and unknown inhabitants of the land of Sinim, and unimagined ancestors of our own aborigines, whether on this or some other continent then pursuing game, were under the same law; that both physical and mental conditions are only influences, divinely ordered or allowed, and mind is free, and man is responsible master of the situation still; what knew they of this? The Stoic sunk out of sight the natural conditions of existence and the varied shaping of men in his passion for iron, universal law: nothing can be other than it is; there are no individuals; the physical forces of the universe grind us all out as they must. The Epicurean made the individual supreme. The one held to necessity and fate, blind, cold, and hard. The other held to chance. The one had no room for providence. The other battled against all belief in it as the deadliest foe of mankind. The one believed in gods, so-called, who could not care for man; the other in gods who would not, whose happiness would be disturbed by the troubles of government and benevolence, "a society of Epicurean philosophers," one has well called them, living in exclusive contemplation of their own perfection and bliss, but utterly regardless of the world. But Paul preached to both, the grand and loving purpose of the one Father of all, clasping all in its mighty and tender arms. That purpose was too high and noble for polytheists such as they were to appreciate or comprehend. It distributed men into races, but did not separate the race. It militated in naught against their common parentage, but grew out of it. It was part of the one plan of the one Father. The same personal agency that made the world and made all men, and made all of one blood, placed them. It gave them whatever advantages of position they enjoyed or might come to enjoy anywhere on all the face of the earth; it laid upon them whatever chastening of disadvantage for ends beyond advantage or disadvantage themselves. National prosperity and national lack, like individual, he had appointed for results relating to character. For these, time and place were fixed. "He increaseth the nations, and destroyeth them: he enlargeth the nations, and straiteneth them again."

This new "doctrine" of the Creator's distribution of races I have called a bill of rights. It is one with the twice-given commission in Genesis, "Replenish the earth." These both conveyed territorial rights, inalienable, equal, divine. It struck at the roots of all caste founded on landed monopoly, as it has chiefly been, the caste of the manor and the plantation, of the lord and the slaveholder, of "those who lay field to field till there is no place, that they may be placed alone in the midst of the earth." It set the will and holiness of God, as well as the need of man, against invasion and trespass. The primeval intent manifestly was that each and every stock should peaceably expand as fast and as far as it could usefully therefor occupy the soil. None are to be dispossessed by the coveting of any and turned out to waste and perish. The earth unoccupied is for any and all. But its benefits are to remain in the hands of those whose peaceful industry secured them. Warlike invasions and wresting of territory, like those the fathers of these Greeks and ours gloried in, are audacious sins against the Most High. The selfishness that interferes with the right development of any anywhere strikes the bar of the eternal plan. Nothing but a benevolent divine promise, nothing but an express divine command—Go in and possess the land, I will drive them out from before thee—like that which came to Israel touching Canaan through Moses, can ever authorize one people to displace another. He would not give Israel the land of Esau, or that of Moab, "not so much as a foot-breadth." Only he who "set all the borders of the earth," the original sovereign Owner of the whole globe, can thus alienate any portion of it, or deprive those to whom it belongs of its fruits. Three races stand out in history as the victims of atrocious wrong on the part of the Anglo-Saxon race, and atrocious sin against the ordinances of heaven, the savages from whom in many cases American soil has been violently or fraudulently alienated, the Chinese whose land was forced open with awful demoralization and blood, the Africans whom English slave-making cupidity brought to our shores and American cupidity robbed and spoiled for two hundred years. The logic of missions, which is the logic of godliness and benevolence, enforces the truths Paul taught, as the logic of selfish greed, their opposite, leads men to resist and outrage them. These truths include the most insignificant divisions of mankind as well as those that rise to the rank of true nations—fragments and remains of races as well as whole peoples, and these in foreign climes as well as where they were born. There are hunters and pioneers, west of us, who can not see in their madness for furs and lands and gold, that their Maker hath determined the country of the Black Hills to the Sioux as the bounds of their habitation; there are business men and employees toward the Pacific who can not understand that God hath given home and rights in California to some Chinese; there are politicians and lovers of gain all over the disturbed and wretched South who will not realize that to all Freedmen the Divine Constitution as well as the Constitution of the United States, and at an incalculably earlier day, secured the title to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

It must be added here that the integrity of this great principle is not impaired by any departures of men from it, by any assaults, any attempts to overthrow it. The eternal plan comprehends in itself all violations of the benevolent partition of the earth by our heavenly Father. There is piety in resisting and repairing these—where it can be—and restoring equity and well-being to the oppressed and wronged; there is more piety in carrying out—where this can not be—that good purpose of Heaven toward them which still and ever stands. Man writes cruelty and fraud over the face of history, but underneath, as in ancient palimpsests, there is to be found written the gracious word and true testament of God. His loving design does not consist in, does not always sanction the agencies it seems to use—does not sanction at all those it overrules and bends and thwarts to bring about its eventual accomplishment. Hath not the potter power over the clay? Nor will any one be staggered at this, or ask, Why doth he yet find fault, for who hath resisted his will? who has ever seen how the perfidy and infamous sin of Judas in betraying Christ was within the jurisdiction of the government against which it was leveled, and was swept into the service of the atonement made for sinners by Him who, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, was taken, and by wicked hands was crucified and slain.

The third proposition affirms the end of the divine plan to have been the production of godly character in all the races, however placed.

God's aim here is far above the common good of men, temporally and for the earth, that is, their religious well-being, each and all—not land-ownership with its benefits, but piety; not a just share in the plantations and prairies and placers, but that they may become themselves just men and sons of God. The human family was for the sake of his Church in his counsels, and that before the foundation of the world. His end is not character alone, but the highest possible character. Man's right to be, and to be at any time as and where he is, no more comes from Him than it leads up to Him. Our supremest, most royal right is to find him. All rights lead to right; all right to the Infinitely Righteous. Will in us is power, and can use all powers of body and other powers of mind; can use also those of other bodies of matter and of other minds. But such power, that once began, must have originated in power. Uniformity, which some would substitute for it—and for God—is but the index of power. Succession in time is naught without relation to power. Existence itself points to power, in the last analysis to God's power, to explain itself. We can understand each other; we can understand, in measure, the world. But what takes mind to understand must have taken mind to be as it is and as it is understood; must have taken mind to cause to be at all. Wherever we see plan, we must needs think Him who planned. The relation between causes and any form of good, derived from our environment, is the exponent, if not of goodness, of forethought. Pain also that begets virtue is the exponent of both.

> "There is no tree that rears its crest,
> No fern or flower that cleaves the sod,
> No bird that sings above its nest,
> But tries to speak the name of God,
> And dies when it has done its best."

No man, no race is beyond or below some portions and aspects of this wide argument. There is no speech nor language where their voice is not heard. Their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world. Were this not so, then there were no superstition, not even an altar to any unknown God. God made men of one blood to people the earth, that they should together seek him. The intent is all-comprehensive and emphatic. Otherwise, providential Wisdom does not move along the same lines as creative Wisdom. Otherwise, he caused the races for a fit and worthy end, and abandoned it as soon as he had caused them. The equality with which Paul started in the first proposition strikes through to the last. It is the very unity of God's sublime and constant end. Without this the multitude whom no man can number could never be gathered from all nations and kindreds and peoples and tongues. For high ends no Greek doubted that his own race existed. But never till he heard Paul had he learned how high, and that all others existed for ends as high. From none can these be concealed if they have a mind to seek for them. The pure in heart shall see Him. He that loveth is born of him, and knoweth him. He that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him. But this is more than merely to reach any degree of knowledge, more than merely to know at all. Without much of this God himself may be found to salvation. We are not held to higher conceptions of him than are possible in our circumstances, than we can compass within the times appointed and the bounds of our habitation The notion that different minds have different conceptions of Deity has so much of truth in it as this: it holds in non-essential attributes, while all can know him as he essentially is; but his plan goes farther than this—that all shall defer to, love, and obey him. No perfect idea of the Godhead or of duty is indispensable to this. The devout Cornelius, when he first meets an apostle at Cæsarea, the sainted John upon Patmos, when in vision, his fellow-servant, one of his brethren the prophets, showed him wondrous things, were ready to offer to creatures the worship that belongs to the Most High alone. But we must know that he is, and must have a heart for him. This universal possibility of piety is for all places where men house themselves. It is for all junctures of their history, for all the times appointed for their changes of habitation. In any age, in any clime, the external world is enough for piety; the internal world is enough. Both require a God, as well as point out one. Changes of human situation work no change in moral obligation, dependence, want. These, if a man legitimately, ingenuously feels them, cry out for the Heavenly Father. If, as one of the notions of the day runs, an ethical and spiritual nature, even in germ, came to man only in the long and slow evolution of ages, then for this He determined the times before appointed. But man, as man, no more lacks this nature in any far past, than he lacks disclosures of his glorious Author within the determined bounds of his habitation in any remote corner of the world.

The fourth proposition affirms the natural advantages of all the races in place and time for becoming assimilated to God.

We are discovering that upon a single small island of the sea all the sciences can be substantially learned and illustrated; and all the religious virtues could be as well. On Penikese some of the organic species can not be found, but the prayer of the silent naturalist could go up to the Infinite One whose beautiful and thoughtful plan he explored and taught with filial love. In the solitudes of Selkirk's place of exile the human waif might find no fellow-man, but an Enoch could have walked with God. To be alone with nature is to be alone with Him. Anywhere the invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead, that they may be without excuse. Everywhere in times past he suffered all nations to walk in their own ways; nevertheless, he left not himself without witness, in that he did good, and gave us rain from heaven and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness. Nowhere is the soul obliged by aught but guilt to cry vainly, Oh! that I knew where I might find Him, that I might come even to his seat. In every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted with him. The oriental mind is occidentalized in the course of historic migration; the occidental mind orients itself again in the West; but whether it shall turn to the Sun of Righteousness, something more radical than such changes must decide. Place and time make no man a worshiper; nor can he be prevented from being one when these shall cease —when the heaven is departed as a scroll that is rolled together, and every mountain and island are moved out of their places. But to every individual his peculiar relations in the world, his occupations, his objects of study, his physical status, the things most familiar to him are fitted to supply peculiar proofs, suggestions, reminders of the Author of the Universe, of the forethought, of the infinite resource, of the inappreciable fullness and quickness of love, of the instant and invariable preference for righteous character, which are His alone—and so it is with races. The intent that all should seek assimilation to Him is written openly upon their capacity, their opportunities, their motives to do so. He is not so far from any as sin, either barbarous or civilized, puts him. Not so far as guilty fear and shame put him. Not so far as even ignorance and stupidity put him. He is far only from wickedness. And not so far even from that in the most brutal selfishness without the proud pale of civilization, in the most refined and exquisite iniquity within it, as that cruel metaphysics which calls itself physics nowadays would argue, which may possibly allow the shadow of his personality to fall where mere crude matter began millions of ages ago—never having come nigh since to make man, give him his daily bread, deliver his Son for our redemption, or raise Him for our justification. That he was equally near to Greek and to Jew, Paul did not here allege; but that each has his advantages from the divine nearness. Is there some mystic sense in which he is actually nearer to each and all since the atoning death of Christ? I know not. But this I know, that He is more sensibly near when Jew and Greek seek him; that the Desire of all nations could not be in the world, and through Him coming to the Father, not be easier; that as there are special and before unimagined developments of divine character in the Gospel, so there are special possibilities of godly human character because of it; that there are none so aside from the world's best progress but that they may be members of Christ's body, "fitly joined together and compacted" with those far more advanced; that his making himself of no reputation and coming in the humblest and meanest of human conditions in his time were emblematic, and somehow now—blessed be his name!—he touches all lowliest conditions; that uncouth, exaggerated, distorted, unseemly expressions of the religious faculties, if they be sincere and real, are surely prehensile and fasten on him; that any thing that is in godliness he will see—that every thing that burns with that flame—ever so obstructed and feeble—he will recognize. The bruised reed he will not break, the smoking flax he will not quench. There is a system of grace in the world, and infinite motives for its being proclaimed to every child of Adam, and infinite adaptabilities to those to whom civilization can not adapt itself, that are felt when civilization can not make itself felt, and go where it can not go. The rudeness of the non-Caucasian races places them no farther from truth and inspiration and pardon in God's plan than refinement places the Anglo-Saxon. His people are compassionately near to the unevangelized, and growing nearer every day, and Father, Son, and Holy Ghost through them. If not interrupted when he came to the resurrection and the judgment, Paul would have gone on to show this, and, with all fervor and love, rising with the might of his argument, bring it home to his hearers' hearts.

The fifth proposition affirms the liability of all men, under this kind and equitable plan, to an utter failure in respect to the ends of their creation and God's providence over them.

It lay in that courtesy and skill which—in the theology of Paul's address—set out with recognizing the Athenian carefulness in religion, and closed with a religious quotation from certain of their own poets, not to make this liability prominent or positive. It drops into an intermediate clause between his last two declarations, touching God's way with the nations—equally connected with both, not specially with either—or, if so, with the last, and is put hypothetically. "If haply they might grope after him, and find him." The figure is that of a blind man seeking an object by the first and rudest of the senses in the dark. In the circumstances, he could not have made it stronger or more striking. The bare possibility of success stands, in his meaning, for well-nigh universal failure, if men are left to themselves. Intellect is the groping faculty in the soul, but the moral and spiritual nature is the finding-power in religion. In other words, the intellect finds, respectively, the intellect of God, the heart must find his heart, the will his will. But all may fail. In changing here to a hypothetical form of speech, the apostle recognizes the religious ignorance of nature, and the wide, uniform failure of man's spiritual search. It is possible, in seeking the true God, to find a false one. It is possible to find none. It is the fool of Caucasian stock, and every other, who has said in his heart, No God. It is the wicked everywhere who say, We desire not a knowledge of thy ways. Israel itself falls so low as to protest to the prophets, Get ye out of the way, turn aside out of the path, cause the Holy One of Israel to cease from before us. Descendants of generations of scholars and artists, the lives of these cultured and progressive sons of Japheth were as densely sinful as those of any of the most stagnant children of Shem, or the most sensuous offspring of Ham. Dynamic or mechanical, their philosophies were as packed with errors, absurdities, falsities, suicidal inconsistencies of belief, as ever were rough creeds, taught by medicine-men of our wilds, as ever crystallized in the books of Confucius or Mencius, as ever were handed down by centuries of barbarism to centuries of slavery. They deified every thing that man could put to his use, just as moderns make it the criterion and supreme element of Deity, that he promote the enjoyment of man. A Stoic poet, referred to by Paul, conceived all life as beginning in the sun. Jupiter himself shared his honors with fruits and wine and all earthly utilities. Man's relation to man was his chief one. The gods exist, as men do, for the sake of their relations. Even to the better teachers of earlier Greece, the stars were eternal and immutable as the gods. And these people wallowed in the filth of idolatry. They ignored immortality, and therefore responsibility and penalty for sin. "What a distance," says Heeren, "between the Jupiter of Phidias and an Indian idol." But dropping the element of beauty, which is not intuitively divine, and which streamed into the mind of a Greek at every pore, the Indian of the East or the Indian of the West has been no more an idolater than he, no more prone to make God visible in somewhat of man's device, or serve him with men's hands, as though he needed any thing. The peculiar perversions of the religious sentiments in the three races are shocking—they are more than grotesque and disgusting—they are horrible. But the red man's superstitions, the African's fetish, the Chinaman's joss-house should move no wonder, when we remember how our apostle's eye rested on a world that by wisdom knew not God; how the richest culture of science and the noblest acumen of philosophy had already combined, and combine again now, to expel the true God from so much as thought. The low surf of savageism has no sound of that Blessed Name in its sullen wash; but ah! the topmost waves of our enlightenment dash angrily against the proof of his being and the supports of his throne. The new elaborate comparative study of religions, and the new exhaustive analysis of primitive culture in faiths and worships, both sustain Paul's propositions at large, and the parenthesis bosomed in them. They show that it is possible for man to reach the root-truths of theism under gross, offensive forms of superstition, that their elements are within the grasp of all, and that few have so worked them out or been so touched by them as to achieve thereby a character of purity and piety. In some tongues it is difficult so much as to convey them. The peculiar and uttermost ruin that can come upon the religious capacities, what is like it? But one sin, one error, accounts for all after ones. These are easy after that. The darkness of human story is here and there tinted, and even lustrous with celestial light, but, for the most part, the recorded statement to the Romans obtains, "When they knew God, they glorified him not as God." Nay, more, the special, extraordinary facilities of the Gospel fail with men.

THEREFORE—it is the inference that follows—THEREFORE, our missions to the three races. It is not a mere logical proposition—it is a work, and a body of living, on-going facts. All the races must have the Bible, the Law of Jehovah, the Gospel of Christ the Son. So Paul was in Athens now on a missionary journey. He had come to help these misled Greeks seek and find "the unknown God." This Cilician tent-maker was there to show them how Japheth should enter the tents of Shem; this pupil of the Scribes, to bestow upon them the law that came by Moses, and the grace and truth that came by Christ. The faith of Palestine was here to cleanse Greek culture and save Greek souls. Stoicism and Epicureanism cured no political or moral corruption. God in Christ must reconcile the world unto himself. So complete and mighty are Paul's premises that, if we had no Gospel, we should be perfectly bound to help all races become assimilated to Infinite Holiness. In that case, in place of this Association, for example, we must have something else, not to evangelize, but to theologize and moralize men; to rescue them from the filth of their polytheism, and save them from their characteristic sins. We should be bound to send the truth, and men and women with it. Missions would still be our duty. To redeem, would have no meaning but to cleanse the befouled religiousness of men, to lift up their capacity for faith, to unite worship and righteousness in their thought and life, to fasten their highest love on the Highest, and bind them to their supreme service and end would still mean the same. Nothing Paul said that day or would have gone on to say, but our Indians, Freedmen, Mongolians need and can know. Nothing it is not easy for them to learn by heart and live by, if they are groping after God. We must SEND THEM THE GOSPEL. The logic of our missions is simply the logic of the blessed divine purpose. What is due to that alone is no less than all we are doing; it is vastly more. All the civilizing, schooling, training in the arts and humanities, which will help accomplish this, is our simple and elementary duty. Very significant it is that this Association—whose first object is to preach the Gospel to them—has led the way so clearly and nobly in all these. The offspring of Ham are here in our land, and here now for this, and for nothing beyond this, that they may seek the Lord, and we are here to lead them to seek him, and to help them to find him.

From the multitude of subordinate and auxiliary considerations crowding upon my thoughts, that support this inevitable and irrefragable conclusion, I select two for a closing word.

I. Christian symmetry and consistency in our missionary work at large.

Shall the Gospel be borne from this land to non-Caucasian races in the ends of the earth, and shall they the bounds of whose habitation and the times appointed coincide with our own be omitted? If so, why? What Christian hand can refuse to bear, what Christian lips to speak to them—if it be only possible—the message of eternal life?

II. The emergency of the hour. It is a dark one for the three races. It seems the very crisis of fate. But the denser the darkness, the more are we bound to give them the light. The great argument is before you. It is one and all divine. But the incitements that press the same way are many. Every conversion to Christ among these people is one of one kind. Every outrage upon them is one of another. Each time an Indian is corrupted or defrauded, each instance of the brutal abuse of Chinese, each assassination of a freedman, brings home to us our duty afresh. Whippings, burnings, hangings, shootings, they pile the applications of the argument heaven-high! These wards of the nation are here by allotment for our Christian work for them, and we are here for that.

In respect to one class of them, besides moral wrongs, we have made great civic mistakes. We should have punished the enemies of union and liberty; we should have protected completely the lawful and equal rights of the Freedmen. This ought we to have done, and not to leave the other undone. There has been a series of compound fractures in the setting of the Southern bone. But the South must now be all regenerated by Christian truth and love. What else can take the blueness out of these present wounds? Liberty is mischievous without law; law is worthless without moral principle; moral principle is weak without the fear of God; the fear of God is lifeless without the love of Christ. We are doing more for the Freedmen in converting than in freeing them; more for the ex-masters in leading them to renounce sin than in forcing them to give up slaveholding. We did not shirk that duty, we can not this. And having taken up this work, the churches of this land can not lay it down. Having put their hand to this plow of spiritual reconstruction, they can not so much as look back.

Least of all, can the Congregational churches, representatives of the purest and highest Christian freedom. We were allowed of God to be put in trust of this chiefly for the injured and the oppressed. A dozen years ago, at the anniversary of another missionary society, I said of "the apostasy of the South," civil and religious, that but one thing could cure it—"the Puritan faith, which kept our freedom vigorous and uncorrupt." That is more manifest to-day. It will be incalculably more so after a dozen years more of Ku-Klux and White Leagues. Make the Freedman an intelligent and consistent Christian, after the pattern of our Puritan fathers, and he can not be oppressed; make his old master one, and he can not oppress him. So of all the alien races in our land, we have in our hands a sovereign remedy for their ills. Freely we have received, and freely we must give.

Are the bloody and hideous outrages of the hour many? When Death and Hades give up the dead that are in them, sent unshrived out of the world during the dark and covert régime of slavery, shall we not rather say few? Are the obstacles to our duty stubborn, bitter, perilous? Think of what we overcame in the Rebellion through God. Shall iron now break the Northern iron and the steel? Shall not the new miseries of those we save confirm the Christian judgment and warm the Christian heart? No better place than this for these questions, this city where, a dozen years since, loyal and devoted Iowa began to organize her volunteers, one tenth of her whole numbers—religiously paying her tithe in Mosaic proportion—to put down that lesser rebellion, the strength of which was in this greater one against God, and justice, and love, that rages still. The weapons of our warfare now are not carnal, but shall they not be mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds? The peculiar Christian experience and Christian spirit in which this work was born are yet in our churches. The grace of giving to it more and more abounds. The shining though unobtrusive grace of martyrdom still savors the life, the labors, the death of many a laborer. The crowning gift of the Spirit is bestowed upon our toils. We may have to vary our methods, reshape and perfect our policy. We have done it before. The oldest and most stable of our missionary societies has made radical changes, as wisdom dictated. An organization so flexible as this, so peculiarly close to the churches, so pre-eminently made for Christian exigencies, may be relied on to mould itself to the exact needs of the hour. We may change our processes—advance will require it—but we must only enlarge our resources and our scope. We can not relax in our great task for Christ and his down-trodden ones. We are to carry it on till

> "People and realms of every tongue > Dwell on His love with sweetest song."

We are to carry it on till for the suffering and perishing souls of the alien races in this land the blessed Redeemer shall see of the travail of His soul, and shall be satisfied.

Incorporated January 30, 1849.

ART. I. This Society shall be called "THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION."

ART. II. The object of this Association shall be to conduct Christian missionary and educational operations, and diffuse a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures in our own and other countries which are destitute of them, or which present open and urgent fields of effort.

ART. III. Any person of evangelical sentiments,* who professes faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, who is not a slaveholder, or in the practice of other immoralities, and who contributes to the funds, may become a member of the Society; and by the payment of thirty dollars, a life member; provided, that children and others who have not professed their faith, may be constituted life members without the privilege of voting.

ART. IV. This Society shall meet annually, in the month of September, October, or November, for the election of officers and the transaction of other business, at such time and place as shall be designated by the Executive Committee.

ART. V. The annual meeting shall be constituted of the regular officers and members of the Society at the time of such meeting, and of delegates from churches, local missionary societies, and other coöperating bodies—each body being entitled to one representative.

ART. VI. The officers of the Society shall be a President, Vice-Presidents, a Recording Secretary, Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, two Auditors, and an Executive Committee of not less than twelve, of which the Corresponding Secretaries shall be advisory, and the Treasurer ex-officio, members.

ART. VII. To the Executive Committee shall belong the collecting and disbursing of funds; the appointing, counseling, sustaining, and dismissing (for just and sufficient reasons) missionaries and agents; the selection of missionary fields; and, in general, the transaction of all such business as usually appertains to the executive committees of missionary and other benevolent societies; the Committee to exercise no ecclesiastical jurisdiction over the missionaries; and its doings to be subject always to the revision of the annual meeting, which shall, by a reference mutually chosen, always entertain the complaints of any aggrieved agent or missionary; and the decision of such reference shall be final.

The Executive Committee shall have authority to fill all vacancies occurring among the officers between the regular annual meetings; to apply, if they see fit, to any State Legislature for acts of incorporation; to fix the compensation, where any is given, of all officers, agents, missionaries, or others in the employment of the Society; to make provision, if any, for disabled missionaries, and for the widows and children of such as are deceased; and to call, in all parts of the country, at their discretion, special and general conventions of the friends of missions, with a view to the diffusion of the missionary spirit, and the general and vigorous promotion of the missionary work.

Five members of the Committee shall constitute a quorum for transacting business.

ART. VIII. This Society, in collecting funds, in appointing officers, agents, and missionaries, and in selecting fields of labor, and conducting the missionary work, will endeavor particularly to discountenance slavery, by refusing to receive the known fruits of unrequited labor, or to welcome to its employment those who hold their fellow-beings as slaves.

ART. IX. Missionary bodies, churches, or individuals, agreeing to the principles of this Society, and wishing to appoint and sustain missionaries of their own, shall be entitled to do so through the agency of the Executive Committee, on terms mutually agreed upon.

ART. X. No amendment shall be made in this Constitution without the concurrence of two thirds of the members present at a regular annual meeting; nor unless the proposed amendment has been submitted to a previous meeting, or to the Executive Committee in season to be published by them (as it shall be their duty to do, if so submitted,) in the regular official notification of the meeting.

* By evangelical sentiments we understand, among others, a belief in the guilty and lost condition of all men without a Saviour; the Supreme Deity, Incarnation, and Atoning Sacrifice of Jesus Christ, the only Saviour of the world; the necessity of regeneration by the Holy Spirit, repentance, faith, and holy obedience, in order to salvation; the immortality of the soul; and the retributions of the judgment in the eternal punishment of the wicked, and salvation of the righteous.

Resolved, That the Executive Committee be requested to search for some suitable place in Central Africa, where a mission, to be manned by colored missionaries, may be established at an early day.

After prayer by Rev. Mr. Grout, the Committee on RELIGIOUS WORK of the Association reported through its chairman, Rev. T. K. Fessenden, of Ct.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON RELIGIOUS WORK.

The Committee to whom was referred that part of the Report which relates to the religious work of the Association, beg leave respectfully to report, that they find it full of encouragement and instruction.

The year's history has been characterized by the strengthening of existing, rather than the formation of new, organizations. Three new churches have been founded in the Southern States, making 56 in all These, planted mostly at central and influential points, are the divinely-appointed and life-giving fountains from which are to flow streams to make glad the South. Over 48 missionaries, white and colored, have been sustained. To them the Holy Spirit has, during the past year, signally given the seal of Divine approbation in numerous and powerful revivals of religion, adding 675, or 1.6, to their membership, and making a total of 4,222 church members.

While in many cases these churches are seriously crippled by the want of suitable houses of worship, they are in this respect improving. There has been shown a commendable spirit of Christian liberality in this work, and in the support of their ministers. We invite especial attention to the interesting sketch given of the laying of the corner stone of the new edifice of the church at Golding's Grove, the only remaining representative of the Dorchester Midway Congregational Church, transplanted originally from New England.

During the past year, the Rev. Mr. Claflin, a white missionary, has retired from his field of labor in Western Africa, and in his place has gone back the Rev. Barnabas Root—a native African. He was brought to this country in early life by one of our missionaries and is a man of fine abilities, education and promise. He purposes to devote his life to Christian mission work. Is not this event alike typical and prophetic, and full of inspiration and hope to the friends of Africa? Does it not foretell a day at no distant future when the promising youth now converted in our churches and trained in our schools, are to bear the standard of the cross in Central Africa, where all is now darkness, cruelty and spiritual death? Are not the graduates of Hampton, Fisk, Atlanta, Talladega, and other schools, to build up in the heart of Africa, Christian churches, normal schools and a Christian civilization? This is the earnest purpose already often uttered by them, and this, we believe, is to be soon and fully carried out. We, therefore, ask of the friends of the colored race, and of strickenAfrica, to aid this Association in its peculiar and cheering work, by their confidence, their contributions and their prayers.

Remarks were made upon this report by Rev. Mr. Fessenden of Farmington, and Rev. Mr. Harding of Longmeadow. Rev. Mr. Howard of Chicago offered a resolution, which was afterwards amended and adopted as follows:

Whereas, we gratefully recognize the endeavors of the Government of Egypt to abolish the traffic in human beings, and the hearty and effective co-operation of the people of Great Britain to promote the same end, therefore,

Resolved, That a Committee of this body be appointed to memorialize the Government of the United States, and urge it to exercise its influence to encourage and sustain the Khedive of Egypt in all efforts to suppress the slave trade in Africa.

Resolved, That Hon. E. S. Tobey of Boston, Rev. Cyrus Hamlin, D.D. of Constantinople, Rev. Edward Hawes of New Haven, Rev. Theodore D. Woolsey, D.D. of New Haven, and Rev. George Whipple of New York, constitute this Committee.

Voted to refer this resolution to the following Committee: Secretary Strieby, Rev. Mr. Howard and Rev. Cyrus Hamlin, D. D.

After remarks by Rev. W. H. Bidwell, D. D., the Association adjourned till 2 o'clock, P. M.

Thursday, P. M., October 28th.

The Association met, and was opened with prayer by Rev. Mr. Ives of Maine.

The Committee on AMERICAN INDIANS reported through its chairman, Rev. Wm. S. Palmer.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE INDIANS.

Your Committee find in all the experience of the American Missionary Association among the Red men, during the past year, fresh proof of the excellence of President Grant's Indian Policy. Wherever Agents and Farmers appointed by the Secretaries of this Association are at work, there is gratifying evidence of advancing civilization, improvement in home life, and growing appreciation of "Whatsoever things are pure, lovely and of good report." In the deepening interest of hundreds in their personal possession of houses and lands, and in the industry with which they are coming to care for their own property, there is precious promise of future good.

The success of the past year in this branch of the Association's work, proves afresh that the chief difficulty in christianizing the Indian is farless in himself than in his persistent oppressors. Taught iniquity and violence by those claiming to be his superiors, no wonder if he has proved an apt scholar. Still our "marching orders" read, "Preach the Gospel to every creature." Nor have missions to the Indians proved unfruitful. Other Christian nations may share with America the work of evangelizing Africa and the Orient; but none will help us reclaim these primitive owners of our own broad domain.

Your Committee grieve that this Association cannot expend $20,000 instead of $2,000 per annum in this branch of their work. Our most intense conviction is that a few years more of the humane, not to say Christian, treatment the Red man has recently enjoyed, will save the race from ruin; while return to the former policy must issue in its inevitable extermination. God save this Association from any responsibility for such a crime! God save our Republic from complicity with such Christless barbarism!

Hon. A. B. Meacham addressed the Association.

The Committee on the CHINESE IN AMERICA reported through Rev. A. P. Marvin.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON THE CHINESE IN AMERICA.

The Committee to whom was referred that part of the Annual Report which relates to the work of the American Missionary Association among the Chinese in California, report that

The present aspects of the work are most encouraging. It is believed that there are now not less than one hundred thousand Chinese in our country. Though living for the most part, on our western border, they are gradually working towards the interior and the east. Those who have come are but pioneers of a great host who will follow in future years. They are here, on our hands, and in the wise providence of God, this Association has been called to engage in the effort to enlighten and save them. Taking occasion from their desire to learn our language, our workers in this interesting field of labor, under the direction of Rev. Mr. Pond, the Superintendent, have found a way to lodge Christian truth in their minds, and this truth is already producing blessed results.

Other missionary boards are engaged in a great work in China itself, translating the Bible into the Chinese tongue, and preaching the Gospel as fast as they can learn the language But here, in our field, we find Chinese by tens of thousands, eager to learn our language, and in the process, they learn of Christ and him crucified. Already quite a number have come under the influence of our workers. They have become interested in the truth as it is in Jesus. Some give evidence of thorough conversion. Very few pastors, even in our larger congregations, have results to show, during the past year, equal to those reported by Mr. Pond. It is believed that about seventy have been converted, of whom more than thirty were led to Christ during the last year. These converts are gathered into the "Congregational Association of the Chinese," and as they become established in Christian character, are received into churches where they reside. And they give evidence of sincerity, since they have to endure opposition, reproach, and even persecution, while renouncing their ancestral religion, and becoming the soldiers of the cross.

When we remember the fact that the Chinese expect to return to their native land, we see how every convert may become a missionary of the cross. Thus the work done here will not only secure the salvation of those who are converted to Christ, but awakens the hope that we may be able to reach thousands and millions in China, and thus make that nation really what it is now vainly styled, the Celestial Empire.

We, therefore, not only rejoice in the fact that so many have been converted, but especially in the demonstration that the Gospel comes to the Chinese as to all other sinners, awakening their consciences, and then meeting their wants as immortal beings, in the gift of a Saviour.

These people, so intelligent, ingenious and enterprising, but, at the same time, apparently so bereft of a moral sense; these people who have sometimes been classified as a sort of human rats, with their keen and glittering eyes, are proved to have the same moral nature as ourselves. They are convinced of sin, of righteousness, and of a judgment to come. They feel the need of Christ, and they joyfully receive him as their Lord.

We most cordially commend this work to the churches. The field is open and inviting. The converts are cordially co-operating with our missionaries; and the results give promise of a great harvest in the not distant future. The love that never faileth meets a response in the hearts of the Chinese converts; the beginning of its work in this field was timely; it has already begun to overcome opposition, and its results will be immortal.

Remarks were made by Rev. H. M. Parsons.

At 3 o'clock, the business of the Association was suspended while the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered. Rev. Cyrus Hamlin, D. D. of Constantinople, and Rev. Lewis Grout of Vermont, officiating.

When business was resumed, the Committee on FINANCE reported through its chairman, Rev. A. C. Denison.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

Your Committee, after an examination of the financial affairs of the American Missionary Association, are happy to bear testimony to the business sagacity and fidelity with which they have been conducted.

In common with all the friends of the Association, they deeply regret its large indebtedness, which, under the circumstances, seems to have been unavoidable. It is a great satisfaction, however, to know that this is largely overbalanced by assets in the form of real estate, legacies as yet unpaid, and stocks and bonds. Besides lands and buildings of the value of more than $200,000 donated to it for educational purposes, and with the implied understanding that they shall be held and used by it for such purposes, the Association holds lands in a prosperous section of the North-West, not finding a ready sale just now, but which will, it is confidently believed, considerably advance in value. It is, also, the recipient of legacies amounting to more than $67,000, some of which are not yet due, and the payment of others already due, has been delayed, by the difficulty of settling estates in the present condition of business, but there is no reason to apprehend any considerable diminution of the above amount. It also holds a considerable amount of stocks and bonds, which in the judgment of the ablest financial advisers, ought not to be sacrificed at their present depreciated prices.

It is to be borne in mind that none of the above property was bought for speculation or investment, but received by donations and bequests, to be held and used as the best interests of the Association should require. The above assets as they shall become available will much more than cancel the entire debt, imposing for its payment, no additional burden upon the constituents of the Association. The larger part of the debt, is so situated that it can for the present conveniently remain. A part of it, however, the best interests of the society require should be immediately provided for—and it is earnestly hoped its friends will at once devise liberal things to meet it.

On account of reduced receipts, the expenses of collection and administration the past year have been larger than we could wish, but with the contemplated reduction of about $5,000 in collection and administration expenses, it is believed this per centage will be considerably reduced—especially as greatly increased receipts are hoped for.

In conclusion we would say, that in our opinion the Society was never more worthy of the confidence and generous support of its friends than at present, or its necessities more urgent, and we trust that during the coming year every lover of his race, his country and his God, will come up to the magnitude of the great occasion in the exercise of that whole hearted, large handed Christian charity which "never faileth."

Remarks were made by Rev. Mr. Denison, Dea. Benedict of Waterbury, Hon. Benjamin Douglass of Middletown, Rev. Mr. Willcox of Stamford, Mr. Richardson of Boston, Rev. H. M. Parsons and Rev. A. P. Marvin.

Thursday evening, October 28th.

This Association met in the South Congregational Church, Rev. Horace Winslow of Willimantic in the chair. Prayer was offered by Rev. Chas. W. Bullard of Hartford. A paper was read by Rev. C. L. Woodworth of Boston, on the "Duty of the North to the South."

The Committee on "EDUCATIONAL WORK AMONG THE FREEDMEN" reported through its chairman. Rev. Mr. Scott.

EDUCATIONAL WORK AMONG THE FREEDMEN.

The Committee to whom was referred the subject of educational work among the Freedmen, desire to report; that this work is of the utmost importance, and should be carried on vigorously in view of the great interests at stake, and the objects to be reached. It is gratifying to note the strong desire on the part of the Freedmen for an education, and to mark their intellectual improvement through the agency of the schools fostered by the American Missionary Association. It is impossible to detail the many interesting facts laid before us, but we take great pleasure in stating that the schools for the Freedmen are meeting with more favor, as their aim and success are more clearly seen, from the white inhabitants, who, in many instances, say that in view of the position and power of the former slaves—better educational advantages must be given them, that they may the sooner and easier be taught their duties as citizens.

We are decidedly of the opinion that the work of this Association in educating men to be preachers and teachers, and to fill important positions in the community, is necessary not only for the elevation of the colored people, but for the improvement of the poor whites who are so strangely, though indirectly, influenced by the condition of the Freedmen.

It is important to press the educational work of the Association more vigorously than before in view of the persistent and earnest efforts of the Roman Catholics, and the pernicious influence of corrupt political leaders, that the colored people may be able to think and act independently and rightly, and not be relegated by Jesuists and demagogues to a condition worse far than their former slavery.

We are heartily of the belief that Africa, especially Western Africa, can best be reached by way of the Southern States. The men who are equipped for service in the schools of the American Missionary Association seem most clearly to be the chosen instruments to carry the gospel to Ethiopia, which is stretching out her hands to God. God has, indeed, opened a great door and effectual f us in the South, through which we can pass with our money and regeneratin agencies to Africa, and though there are difficulties in the way, the work shoul attract us all the more—as Ephesus drew Paul by reason of the many adver saries. The colored men of the United States show the characteristics which be long to their brethren in Africa. They have the same physical peculiarities and temperaments, and are so constituted as to live in warm countries where white men would die. They have traits which commend them to the confidence and hearts of their brethren in that dark land, and when, properly educated, by reason of their sympathy and power of adapting themselves easily to the mode of life in Africa, are better able to understand the needs and appreciate the feelings of the people there than the white men who go forth to labor among the African tribes.

We heartily commend the policy of the American Missionary Association which works at the present with a look into the future, and is desirous of laying permanent foundations for the evangelization and education of the African race in this and in other lands, and we trust that the educational work will not be crippled by any lack of funds to sustain the schools which are doing such good and needed service.

We also raise the query whether it may not be desirable for the Association to take some advantage in the near future, of the great interest manifested by the Khedive of Egypt, in opening the regions of Central Africa to civilization by the way of the Nile and the railway already surveyed to Khartoum, and his friendliness to Americans and their methods of industrial enterprise, as for instance, the establishment, if it should be found possible, of an industrial plan at some point on the Nile, in communication with the new lines of travel, and the fresh and rapid influx of commercial and agricultural enterprise, which, in connection with moral forces, promises such a wonderful future for Central Africa.

Remarks were made by Rev. Mr. Scott, Rev. Dr. Hamlin, Rev. Lewis Grout, and Rev. Wm. E. Park.

Voted, that the Reports of the several committees be adopted and submitted to the Executive Committee for publication.

Voted, that the Resolution of Rev. Mr. Howard, relative to memorializing the U. S. Government, be adopted.

The following Resolution of thanks was adopted by a rising vote:

Resolved, That this Association returns grateful acknowledgments to the Committee of Arrangements and to the households of the North and South Congregational, and sister churches, for their generous hospitality and their cordial and ample provision of every requisite for the personal comfort of members in attendance upon this Anniversary.

After singing the Doxology, the Association adjourned sine die.

Attest,
WALTER S. ALEXANDER, Secretary.

REPORT

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The Twenty-ninth Anniversary of the American Missionary Association calls us together. During the year the shadow of death has fallen upon its President and two of its missionaries, and the financial embarrassment which rests upon the country, cripples its treasury, but yet it enjoys tokens of good from the Head of the church—the God of the poor.

The Hon. Wm. A. Buckingham was elected President of the Association at the last annual meeting, but ere a third of the year had passed, he was called to his reward. We come to-day, not merely to mourn with Connecticut the death of a former Governor, nor, with the nation, of a Senator, but to bear our tribute with them to the memory of a man who was endowed with a purity, integrity and energy of character that bore him through an honorable and successful business life; that rendered him active and zealous as a member of the church, with enlarged sympathies for all forms of Christian effort, at home and abroad; that prompted him to hazard his own private fortune for his country, in aiding Connecticut to send out her volunteers in the dark days of the opening rebellion—a noble example, that exerted a decided influence on other States, and most opportunely strengthened the hands of the Government; that carried him through political life, in a period of unusual temptation, without the shadow of a taint on his integrity—personal or public; and that finally brought him to the close of life with a well-grounded hope of immortality through our Lord Jesus Christ.

The American Missionary Association, as it entered upon its work among the Freedmen, began to feel the influence of his earnest and practical sympathy. Some of the most encouraging words that were uttered to us by men in his influential position, fell from his lips, and some of the largest individual contributions that came to us as the war closed, were from him.

When the death of the late venerated Dr. Kirk left vacant the presidency of this Association, and Gov. Buckingham was with perfect unanimity called to fill the place, the Executive Officers of the Association felt much gratification in the election of a President so courteous, energetic and influential in personal character, and so well skilled as a presiding officer. His term of service was very brief, but the Association rejoices in the privilege of enrolling his name on the list of its presiding officers.

Rev. Aaron Rowe, formerly of Benton Harbor, Mich., then a chaplain in the army in Texas, entered the service of the Association at the close of the war. He taught a school and organized a church in Corpus Christi, Texas, and, after doing a good work there for seven years, was transferred to Savannah, Ga., where he was eminently successful in organizing mission churches in the vicinity of that city. His memory will be long and affectionately cherished by the people among whom he labored. He died, July 19, 1875, after a brief illness, in quiet resignation to the call of the Master.

Rev. Allen C. Ellis, after graduating from college in 1873, received a call the same month from the college church in Adrian, Mich., to which he went as pastor, having been previously ordained as elder, by the Ohio Methodist Conference. His pastorate here was brief, owing to his impaired health. He accepted a call from the A. M. A. to take charge of its mission work in Chattanooga, Tenn. Here for nearly a year he labored earnestly. But his health was not restored, and after a journey to Florida, he returned to East Tenn., where he soon died. A short time before the close of life he was able to say, "for fifteen months I have had perfect peace, am fully resigned and all is right."

Sixty-one Life members are reported as having died.

GENERAL SURVEY.

FIELD WORK.

This year has been characterized by the enlarging and strengthening of the churches already organized, rather than by the formation of new ones. Two new churches have been organized, and the corner stones laid for three houses of worship. Ingatherings of souls are reported in many of our churches among the Freedmen, and revivals of special interest in Montgomery, Memphis and Raleigh. These revivals have benefited other churches as well as ours. Many of the converts have joined the colored churches where their parents and friends belong. Conversions are also reported by our missionaries among the Chinese, the Indians, and in Jamaica.

There have been added to the churches on profession of faith 631, and 114 by letter. Looked at in its spiritual aspects the year has been one of growth and of blessing.

The educational work has felt the drawback of the hard times at the North, and still more in the South. Some of the more advanced pupils have been compelled to relinquish further study. Many a father who meant to educate his son, is compelled to call him back from school to aid in the struggle to keep the family from starving, and many a young man who has set his heart on winning an education for himself is driven from the school to the fields to earn a subsistence. The Freedmen's Bank has been, in some cases, the vortex that swallowed up the savings hoarded by both parents and young men, to meet the cost of education. But aside from this hindrance, the condition of the schools has been gratifying—the pupils have made satisfactory progress, the examinations have been well attended, and the impression on the minds of the white race has been deepened and extended, that the colored people are capable of culture in the higher ranges of study. The colored people themselves have been encouraged by these results.

One of the most gratifying facts connected with our schools is that so large a number of the pupils are already engaged as teachers. From careful estimates it is computed that more than 60,000 scholars were taught last year in the schools of our former pupils; and this number will be constantly increasing.

One of the noticeable events of the year was the holding of a Conference with some of our older missionaries and teachers, in Atlanta, Ga. There was a free and frank exchange of views as to the condition of the colored people and our work among them. The brighter side of the picture was not overlooked, but the darker and sadder aspect was also considered. A brief synopsis of these discussions was published in the "American Missionary" and elsewhere. In a few localities in the South, the colored people were stirred up to no small degree of excitement by the publication of the severe strictures made at the meeting, on the peculiar vices of the negro, but it is believed that the ultimate effect will be salutary by awakening the conscience in regard to those vices. In the Conference the facts were also brought out fully in regard to the poverty of the people, compelling the pupils in our schools, in some instances, to break off their studies. It was recommended, therefore, that, for the present, the Association should confine its college courses to a few institutions—which will, this year, be carried out.

The Chinese work on the Pacific coast has been prosperous. The contributions of the churches in California have been largely increased over last year, and the direct results of Christian labor among the Chinese have never been more fruitful. Some friends of the A. M. A. had expressed the belief that it should abandon this field and concentrate its funds on the Freedmen. This called forth from Rev. W. C. Pond, the Superintendent of that work, an earnest and forcible remonstrance, which was published in the October number of the "Missionary," and is reproduced, in an abridged form, in the body of this report. It deserves a careful consideration. The Committee believe this field should not be abandoned.

The Indians under the care of our agents have made marked progress in industry, the cultivation of the soil, the improvement of their homes and apparel, in their appreciation of schools, and, to some extent, in the acceptance of gospel truth. It needs but time and the continued application of the methods embodied in the President's Indian Policy to effect the most salutary and radical changes. But the administrators of that Policy are bitterly, and, as we believe, most unjustly assailed, and we know not what may be the fate of the Policy itself, but we believe that unless something like that, in its substantial features, can be persistently and faithfully carried out, the alternative will be the extermination of the Indians. Will Christian America—if America is Christian and not barbarian—permit that result? Divine justice exacted a million of lives as the penalty for slavery. A similar penalty may be demanded for the wrongs of the Indians. The Indian does not die unresistingly. It has cost the United States, in these late years, a million of dollars, and at least ten lives for every Indian killed in battle.

In the Foreign field, the most marked event has been the ordination of Rev. Barnabas Root, and his return as a Missionary to West Africa, the land of his birth. He was brought to this country, in early life, by one of our missionaries; he was furnished with a good education—academic and theological; and in his studies he achieved for himself the reputation of an excellent scholar and speaker. If God shall spare his life and health we shall hope for great results from his labors as a translator and preacher of the word. Rev. Mr. Claflin and wife have returned to this country from Africa and have tendered their resignations—which have been accepted. The Jamaica Mission has been carried forward, during the year, on the economical basis recommended by the last annual meeting. This year it is hoped that a still further reduction of expenses may be effected without serious injury to the mission. We are happy to report that the faithful labors of the missionaries have been attended by the gracious influences of the Divine Spirit. Rev. Mr. Wilson has been compelled by ill-health to return to this country and offer his resignation, and it has been accepted. No other foreign missions are now under the care of the Association.

The Jubilee Singers are once more in Great Britain. Their arrival there in the latter part of May gave them a hearing at some of the Anniversary Meetings, but the season for the most profitable concerts had passed, and hence the pecuniary results of their summer labors have not been large. But the Singers were able to render a very acceptable service of song in the revival meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and this was highly appreciated by these honored servants of God and by British Christians. As the concert season has now fairly begun we anticipate the most gratifying fruits from their efforts.

The Freedmen's Missions Aid Society of Great Britain still continues its zealous coöperation with us, in efforts to prepare the Freedmen as laborers for the redemption of Africa. Rev. O. H. White, D. D. of New Haven, Ct., is now Secretary of the Society, nominated by the Executive Committee of the Association. His judicious and faithful labors give promise of success.

Rev. E. M. Cravath, who has so efficiently managed the affairs of the Association in the South, as Field Secretary, has resigned that position that he may accept the office of President of Fisk University. He was identified with the founding of that institution, and has been warmly interested in its prospects and in the success of the Jubilee Singers, and now, as the University is about to enter upon an enlarged career of usefulness, he is fitly chosen as its presiding officer. He is at present with the Jubilee Singers in Great Britain.

Rev. James Powell has been appointed our Western District Secretary, in the room of Rev. W. W. Patton, D. D. whose resignation was made at the last annual meeting. Mr. Powell is earnest in his work and is warmly received by our friends in the West. The generous grant, by a liberal citizen of Chicago, of office-rent free for five years, together with some other changes, will make a material reduction in the expenses of that office.

The American Bible Society continues to lay us and the people for whom we labor, under great obligations for its generous and liberal grants of Bibles and Testaments. The Committee desires to make this public tender of its thanks for this valuable contribution to its work.

DETAILED SURVEY.

THE SOUTH.

CHURCH WORK.

LOCATION AND FELLOWSHIP OF THE CHURCHES.

The fifty-six churches under the care of the Association in the South are distributed from Hampton, in Eastern Virginia, to Goliad in Texas. But they are not without fellowship. Most of them are located in connection with our schools, and the teachers and pupils afford a social element of great value. But besides this, four ecclesiastical Associations or Conferences have been formed. The first one organized was the South-Western Conference, embracing the churches in Louisiana; then in order, the Central South Conference, including the churches in Tennessee and Western Georgia; the Congregational Conference of Texas, with the churches in that State; the Association of Christian Churches and Ministers of Kentucky. There are a number of churches in North Carolina, South Carolina and Eastern Georgia awaiting organization.

The only meeting of these bodies reported to us this year is that of the Central South Conference. Its minutes and business are thus referred to in the "American Missionary":

> "No neater pamphlet has been laid on our table for some time than that whose title page reads: 'Minutes of the Fourth Annual Meeting of the Central South Conference, held in Selma, Ala., Nov. 10, 11, 12, 1874,' and on examining the minutes, we find their brevity and business-like arrangement fully justifying the favorable impression made by the exterior."

The proceedings consisted of devotional exercises, narratives of the state of religion, the discussion of important topics relating to the religious and educational work in the South, and the examination and licensure of four persons as preachers of the Gospel.

Meagre salaries and the distances which separate the members of these ecclesiastical bodies, render their meetings less frequent and full than in the North. This separation and this fellowship are thus referred to by one of the members of the Central South Conference:

"Western home missionaries often boast of their large parishes; here is one in the South with headquarters at Montgomery, whose nearest Congregational neighbor on the West, is fifty miles away; on the North, ninety; on the East, one hundred and seventy-five; and on the South, about twenty-four thousand, since traveling in that direction would sweep the circle around to Canada, where I believe there are some Congregational churches; none between so far as I know. I am thankful this parish is no larger; if it were one man could not successfully work it. I pity the western missionaries if they have a larger field than this. From here to the Gulf it is only one hundred and fifty miles, and I do not allow myself to feel any great responsibility beyond that. I hope one day to see my nearest Southern neighbor, and make some fair division of the vast territory that lies between us. Perhaps the matter will be adjusted by the formation of a church at Mobile in connection with our noble school there, of which I hear very flattering reports.

Some of us are beginning to feel that it was a far-sighted wisdom that led the A. M. A. to plant schools and churches at these eight or ten strategic points in the State. They are beginning to be our great centres from which to propagate the "new religion;" they are our Jerusalem, Alexandria, Antioch and Rome. The plan is Apostolic, and is sure in the end to bear abundant fruit. Our churches, though so far apart, are not shivering with the chill of isolation and fear. There is a real brotherhood among them. Church as well as Christian fellowship is taking root. Our last Conference was full of interest. If it lacked the age and wisdom of the "Hartford South," in Connecticut, with which I used to meet, the deficiency was supplied by means open to us."

Revivals and Ingatherings.

Some of the churches report revivals of marked character and most gratifying results.

Of the revival and ingathering in Montgomery, Mrs. Andrews, wife of the pastor, writes as follows:

"Mr. G——, a Northern revivalist, laboring among the white people, had been preaching effectively to that class for two weeks, when the crumbs thus falling from the master's table began to nourish the hearts of those whom it would not do to invite from the galleries to the mercy-seat. Mr. G—— preached in our chapel once, and many came to hear him. At the close of the service nearly every one in the house knelt, thus expressing desire for greater nearness to the Saviour. So favorable an indication of the presence of the Spirit was improved at once. Many meetings were held, and many visits were made from house to house. I never realized before how sweet a privilege it is to carry the Gospel message. Rev. and Mrs. Pope, of the Selma mission, were sent for. They came to help us, and the result of our united labor has been such that there is no doubt that the Lord sent them to us.

All who have labored among this people, know that they are naturally religious, a tendency frequently ruinous to their Christianity, so in our visits from house to house, we were warmly welcomed. Mrs. Pope's and my visits were mostly among the women and girls. We gave them tracts, read the Bible, and sometimes listened to a wonderful account from a Baptist or Methodist sister, of when she "came through," a common expression among them for conversion. One who had had an unusual experience, said: "Dat mornin when I went to de baptism, I tell ye I didn't walk here; dat I didn't; I tell ye I didn't walk here;" a plain case to those who are acquainted with the peculiar emotional characteristics of the race. Many of them were from the day school and from my Sunday-school class.

Mr. and Mrs. Pope must return to their home on Monday, and Mr. Andrews is left with the remainder of the work, which promises still greater blessings. Last night many of the elderly people were interested. I will write you further next month, and ask you to pray for us."

Mrs. Andrews subsequently sends the following interesting particulars of the further history and results of the revival:

"A letter, last month, told you of a gracious visitation of the Spirit among us, long expected and prayed for, which promised an increased harvest of blessing. The 'hovering over' and the actual presence of the Spirit has been very marked in its extent, as the whole city has been moved. Like the rays from the light-house tower, the gospel truth seemed to spread in all directions from the point where the missionaries have been working until hearts miles away were reached. A very old lady, creeping with her cane up the back steps of our Home one morning, said she had come to talk about her soul, that she had served Satan all her life, but had determined by the help of the good Lord to give him the balance of her days. Boys from ten to twelve years, from the day and Sabbath-school, rose in the meetings to express their determination to serve the Lord 'while they were young,' and some of them, now within the fold of the church, are bright examples of Christian activity.

"Neighborhood prayer-meetings, and visitations made in the outskirts of the city by two theological students from Talladega, who came to our aid with Rev. H. E. Brown of that place, were characterized by unwonted solemnity and earnest seeking, resulting in a number of conversions.

"We rejoice in the reception of thirty-three into our church, while many have joined various other churches in the city. The shower seems to be over, but there is left us the moistened atmosphere so conducive to steady growth."

The revival in Memphis was characterized by its rapid development and progress and its quiet and satisfactory methods. Prof. Steele, of the Le Moyne Institute, thus describes its earlier stages:

"We are having a wonderful blessing in our work. We began holding daily meetings the last of last week in the school, and have had them since, some of the time three a day; one early in the morning, one in the afternoon and one in the evening. Nearly seventy of our dear students have, in these few days, found Christ a Saviour. Over eighty in all have professed Christ, mostly in the last three days, and the interest is great. None of us ever knew or saw such a blessed time before. God's spirit has filled our school, and yet the work goes quietly on, and with little excitement."

The further particulars are thus given by Prof. Steele:

"We are rejoicing over the wonders God's Spirit has worked among us during the past week. "Who is like unto thee, O Lord, among the gods? who is like thee, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders?" Since last Monday over one hundred and twenty conversions have taken place in our student's meetings. Full one hundred of these are our own students, the remainder are those brought in by the pupils for the express purpose of their conversion. After the meetings of the first four days of the week, not more than fifteen of our pupils, were unconverted. The question then arose; what is there now to do? "Go out into the highways," was suggested. Our students did go—and working earnestly the entire city became interested; our meetings, for a time, two and three a day, were thronged with anxious inquirers, extra meetings were started in many of the churches, and the fire continues to spread.

"You may be sure we have a happy school now, all our students brought to Jesus! Our hearts have waited and ached and expected this time of blessing the whole year, yet we had hardly dared hope for such a wonderful baptism.

"But in the light of the past few days God's design in giving all at once so great a blessing seems plain. Superstition, ignorance and old-time customs in the churches, and among the people, have thrown such a veil, such a cloud of mystery, around the act of conversion, the simple accepting of salvation through the death of Christ, that living witnesses were needed to break the cloud and let in the light of truth—so the witnesses have been given, and the testimony is convincing. All the conversions among our students were quiet and consistent with the character and faith of the lowly Jesus. At first some of the old time Christians were disposed to make light of the work, but generally the ministers have encouraged it, accepted the converts as members, and are earnestly trying to persuade their people that the quiet, the Bible way of coming to Jesus is the best: so in many ways the leaven is working and Christ is being honored and his kingdom built up. On Sunday sixteen converts united with our church and there are others yet to come in. The church is much encouraged.

The interest in the city is increasing. Last night in one of the several churches where meetings are being held I am told that over one hundred and thirty arose for prayers. Our students are working nobly. We need your prayers."

The revival in Raleigh, N. C., was also rapid in its progress and wide-spread in its influence.

Rev. Mr. Marts writes thus of the beginnings:

"God is blessing us in our protracted effort. His Spirit is poured out upon us and sinners are crying out, "What shall we do to be saved?" Six have been hopefully converted; some of these are of our most promising pupils; others, relatives of members. Last night twenty were upon their knees asking for mercy and salvation; Many more were serious whom we hope to see coming to Christ. The house did not afford seats for all who came. We are waiting and praying for a great blessing."

Under subsequent dates, Mr. Marts gives additional details of this interesting work of grace.

September 6, 1875.

"Our good work, of which I advised you last week, still goes on, and with increasing power. Thirty-five have been, up to this time, as we trust, hopefully converted, and the number seeking the Saviour is large and every day augmenting. The indications are that the work has not yet reached its climax.

"There has not been such an awakening among the colored population of Raleigh, they say, for several years. Our house is filled to overflowing every night. Three boys were found lying on the ground in the inclosure last night, earnestly pleading for mercy. One of them had treated the meetings with great levity (he is a bright intelligent lad, too,) until he himself was convicted and laid weeping at the foot of the Cross. One of the most beautiful features of the revival is the coming of little children, among the rest, to seek the blessing. They are the first to be blessed. The dear Saviour does not keep them knocking long: Yet they evince great sorrow first, and then great joy. Some seven or eight, from nine to twelve years of age, were among the converts yesterday. Yesterday was our greatest day. God's Spirit seemed to be present in greater power than at any previous time, which made it a day long to be remembered by the twenty-five who, during the day and night became the trophies of His grace. But this was not the only triumph of the Redeemer yesterday. Some of the young men for whom we have been earnestly praying came to the foot of the Cross. Two of them and two small boys were among the converts, while many of the young men are still praying for the blessing or are at the point of yielding.

"There is a disposition on the part of the converts to doubt, at first, the evidence of conversion, rather than to be easily satisfied. This to me is an encouraging feature. One of the most marked examples illustrative of this was that of a young lady, who upon conversing with her, told me that she had been upon the point of confessing Jesus once or twice, but was not fully enough convinced of her acceptance to do so. Upon inquiring into her state of mind, she gave the best evidence of conversion, but was only convinced on the following day after much reading of her Bible and prayer.

"We have a six o'clock A. M. prayer meeting, which is well attended: the very air, almost, seems surcharged with the incense of prayer, and at morning, at evening, and at night, ascend the mingled cries and entreaties of awakened sinners, and the glad notes and ascriptions of praise of the pardoned. It is difficult often to get penitents away from the church, both at morning and at night, in some cases. They seem to think that they cannot go without the blessing.

September 9th, 1875.

"Our work continues to prosper. God is blessing us in the conversion of more precious souls. The number of converts aggregates about sixty, up to this time; while there are not less than seventy-five who are anxious seekers after the blessing. We hope to see them, too, rejoicing in a Saviour found. The order is pretty good. With a vigorous hand I check the first indications of boisterousness, which is usually on the part of the older Christians from other churches. They become offended sometimes, but order and as much quiet as possible I am determined to have at any cost, for "God is not the author of confusion." We are now using both buildings, the church and the lower room of the school building. Both houses are filled at the night meetings.

"Of course denominationalism will trouble us some, but if the work goes on, as I hope it will, there will be enough for all to have a share. Then we trust, too, that the work will go to the other churches and continue until there is a great blessing poured on the city. Many of the brethren from other churches have worked very faithfully with us; for this I am thankful indeed; but they, I am sorry to say, some times do not co-operate with me in having order and quiet.

September 15th, 1875.

"Our work still goes on with much interest. The whole number of converts up to this morning, as far as I have been able to ascertain, is about seventy-two. Many are still seeking, and new ones are constantly coming, though in smaller numbers. We have good order now, and pleasant meetings.

"I have received into the church since the revival commenced, twenty-two persons. We shall receive two others to-night, and perhaps more. Several more have expressed a desire to join us, but not just now. Many of the converts have fathers, mothers, sisters and brothers in the other churches, and denominationalism is very strong here. But thanks be to God, Christ is getting most of our Sabbath-school and many others outside, wherever they may go as to church membership. Some of the whites have attended our meetings. Two of them—a woman and a girl—were converted last week, and will probably join us."

The church at Tougaloo, Miss., enjoyed a "harvest-day" at its communion in May. Rev. L. A. Darling gives this sketch of the joyful occasion:

"Sunday, May 2d, will long be remembered with gratitude by those who participated with us in its joyous scenes. The morning dawned bright and clear, and was gladdened by the singing of birds in the beautiful groves by which we are surrounded. At our usual hour of service, an earnest discourse was listened to with marked attention.

"But it was the afternoon service which filled our hearts with joy; it was indeed a harvest season. We gathered in the fruits of months of patient and faithful labor. Thirteen of our students united with the church on profession of their faith. Four had joined our band a few weeks previous, and two of our converts united with their church at home. One more will join us at our next communion season. He was prepared to come with the others but thought it best to wait until he returned home and then join his own people; but when he saw the others brought in and he left alone, his heart was sad and he expressed a desire to unite with us next Sabbath. Thus twenty souls have been brought from "darkness to light" during these few months, and many more are just "outside the gate."

The colored church at Golding's Grove, Ga., is the legitimate heir to the history and glory of the old Congregational church of Midway, Liberty County, whose origin dates back to 1630, when the parent church in Dorchester, Mass., was organized in Plymouth, England, and in May of the same year, landed in America. Its subsequent colonizing from Dorchester to Windsor, Ct., then to South Carolina and finally to Midway, Ga., is given in an interesting pamphlet written by Rev. C. L. Woodworth, and republished in the September number of the "American Missionary."

Rev. Floyd Snelson, the colored pastor of the colored portion of the church—the only part now left—gives the following encouraging statements concerning its growth, as indicated by the additions at a recent communion:

"Our religious work has been very encouraging. Its influence is spreading very rapidly, and the people, especially the young, are coming in from all quarters. At the communion before the last we received 18, eleven converts and seven by letter: at our last, we received 22, twenty converts and two by letter. Most of these forty persons are young men and women; our church now numbers nearly 160 members. This blessed ingathering has not been done without work. For several months I have labored and prayed for it day and night, my wife going with me from house to house. Our Sunday school numbers about a hundred who attend regularly. Some of the girls have to walk seven miles."

Ingatherings of members are also reported in Selma and Mobile, Ala., and in Camp Nelson, Ky. Of this latter place, Rev. John G. Fee writes:

"You will remember that near the close of our late war, there were gathered into Camp Nelson, Ky., many thousands of colored soldiers; and that these were followed by some three thousand women and children.

"For the shelter of these women and children, the Government erected quite a number of cottages, and some larger buildings as hospital-wards and school-rooms. In these, schools were for a time sustained, and chiefly by the American Missionary Association. At the close of the war some of these buildings were bought by friends, and three of the larger reserved for school and church purposes. The church and school yet live.

"At a recent revival there, thirty-nine persons professed conversion to Christ as their Saviour from sin; and seven who had been dismissed, were reclaimed. Almost every young man in the community is now a member of the one church of the place, and living a joyful and peaceful life. The people realize that the gospel is a power for good."

Additions were made last winter to the mission churches in the vicinity of Savannah, Ga.; but the sudden death of Rev. Mr. Rowe, pastor of the church in Savannah, on whom devolved the care of these churches, left them without the needful supervision. Some time unavoidably elapsed before Mr. Rowe's place could be filled, and in this interval, these infant churches passed through some trials which weakened them in numbers and in spiritual strength. Rev. R. F. Markham succeeds Mr. Rowe, and we hope his labors will be blessed to the renewal of prosperity in this promising portion of the field.

Undue excitement is sometimes introduced, from outside, into the revival meetings in our churches. This is kindly but promptly repressed. The following is an amusing account of the defences sometimes made for these demonstrations. The writer is a lady teacher who was in charge, in the temporary absence of the pastor

"After an absence of four months I am again in my pleasant school-room. Having been left without a pastor most of that time, the flock had become scattered. The Sunday after my return, two colored ministers of other denominations came and commenced a "big meeting." Outsiders came in determined on having a noisy meeting. By Tuesday evening so great was the excitement and confusion that it was necessary for the safety of the house as well as for the honor of God to do something to quiet the people. The colored ministers being kindly asked if they could not keep the people in order, were offended, and left saying they could not work in any other way. Our minister now returned and the meetings were continued until the next Monday evening—twelve persons professed conversion.

"Though we had much proof of the presence of the Lord with us, yet some are dissatisfied because they wanted the other leaders and the tumult. One of the ministers in trying to prove that I was wrong in my teaching, said: "The Bible says, 'You must not tilt the cup,' and that means you must not make what you don't feel, but when you has feelins you must let 'em out."

"Being told that was not Bible, he said he knew he could find it, and would write and tell where it was. In further proof that it is right to have such confusion, many talking at once, while others were singing and jumping, he said: "The Bible says, 'Touch one string and all the bells ring'" When told that the Bible did not say that, he said: "I suppose you'll say next that the Bible don't say nothin' about gold and silver slippers in Heaven?" As many were listening, and he was so sure of finding all these passages, I told him if he would let me know where they are I would give him fifty dollars. He pretended to read one of them to the people where he spent the night."

"The greater part of the colored ministers in the country are just as ignorant as this one. I am sad when I think of the heathenism there is in this land of Bibles, because so many cannot read."

Our colored churches are poor, as might be expected, but they are ready to give of such things as they have. The subjoined lively sketch of a local conference in one of the mission churches near Talladega, shows the impromptu plans of the people for supporting the ministry:

"We went out thirteen miles with mules and a lumber wagon. It was a pleasant ride. We reached the Alabama Furnace just in time for the afternoon meeting."

"There is a new church—a cosy, pleasant one, built by the people and our students last summer. Most of the meeting was taken up with the question: "How shall our young colored ministers live?" There isn't much money in the county. They are ready to give their time to the work. How shall they be supported? One said: "If I raise little, I will give a little." From one and another the replies came: "I can give a chicken;" and "I, some corn;" and "I, a bushel of potatoes;" and "I can bring one egg, if I can't any more;" and "I will pull fodder for the minister's cow; and if he hasn't any cow, I will give him shucks to help him buy one." One said, "Let us do this once a month;" and from another part of the house came the quick reply, "but the minister must eat more than once a month; let us do it every week." One suggested giving all the eggs one hen should lay; and that one row of potatoes be the Lord's potatoes.

This meeting met my ideal of the Missionary Herald Meetings, when the natives gave rice, etc., for the Gospel. The Mission church at Alabama Furnace was organized six months ago, and since that time their contributions in money have averaged one dollar a piece for each member for the ministry."

CHURCH BUILDING.

No new church edifices have been completed during the year. The corner stones of three buildings have been laid with interesting ceremonies. The completion of these is a most pressing necessity in each case.

Of the laying of the corner-stone of the new building in Savannah, Ga., we have the following account:

"The announcement in the MORNING NEWS of yesterday that the corner-stone of the new chapel of the colored Congregational Church, would be laid with appropriate ceremonies, at three o'clock in the afternoon, attracted to that point quite a large crowd of colored people.

"The exercises were, prayer by Rev. A. Rowe; singing; reading of the Scriptures by Rev. J. A. Shaw, colored; prayer by Rev. C. O. Fisher, colored; singing; and an address by Rev. H. M. Turner, colored. The address occupied about an hour in its delivery and was listened to with thoughtful attention. After the address there was singing, and then the contents of the corner-stone were duly announced. The box in which the articles were deposited was then placed in position, and the corner stone was lowered into its place by Rev. F. Snelson. The exercises were closed with prayer by Rev. H. L. Simpson; singing; and the benediction by Rev. Mr. Keaton."

The death of Rev. Mr. Rowe, the pastor, arrested for a time the progress of the work. The church is obliged to worship in the chapel of Beach Institute which is now rented to the city for a public school. The inconvenience of such occupancy is a serious drawback to the growth of the church. Under the new pastor, Rev. Mr. Markham, the people will renew their efforts and we hope our friends will give us the means to assist them.

The church at Golding's Grove, Ga., laid the corner-stone of its new house of worship about the same time with that in Savannah. We have these particulars of the ceremonies:

LAYING OF A CORNER STONE.

"Agreeably to appointment the Second Dorchester Midway Congregational Church, of Liberty, Ga., laid the corner stone of their new church edifice with appropriate ceremonies.

The following was the order of service:

Singing. "Builder of mighty worlds on worlds,
How poor the house must be, etc., etc."

"Reading of Scripture by Rev. A. Rowe, of Savannah, Ga. Prayer by Rev. H. F. Hyde of Rockville, Conn.

Singing, "See what a living stone,
The builders did refuse, etc."

"Remarks by the Pastor, Rev. F. Snelson, and addresses by Rev. E. M. Cravath, Field Sec. A. M. A., New York, and Rev. Lewis Grout, District Sec. A. M. A., Vt.

"Placing corner stone by Rev. E. M. Cravath. Prayer by Rev. Lewis Grout. Singing Doxology. Benediction by Pastor.

"The building under which this stone is placed is 50x60, and very nicely arranged. The frame is nearly completed. The covering will be put on as soon as the means can be obtained.

"This building is being erected to accommodate that Congregational element that originally came from Dorchester, England, about the first of 1630. This church has been gathered together within the last twelve months by Rev. F. Snelson, of Andersonville, Ga."

The pastor makes this statement as to the needs of the church:

"This body of Christians has no house of worship. They are meeting in the school building that is not sufficient to accommodate half of them. Many each Sabbath have to remain outside, cannot as much as get within the door. We have started a building 50 x 60 feet, very nicely arranged, which will meet our necessity; we have the frame up."

At Athens, Ala., the walls of a new house of worship are erected. The people are cheerful in doing their utmost; building as they can raise the money. They greatly need their house, and they greatly need the help to complete it. The house is of brick, 26 by 40 feet in dimensions, and estimated to cost $2,500. The Association has rendered some aid and earnestly asks for the means of doing more.

Miss Wells, the teacher, to whom our work in Athens, both educational and religious, owes so much, writes thus of the ceremony of laying the corner-stone:

"The corner-stone of our new church edifice was laid to-day in the presence of a large and appreciative audience, to most of whom it was a new experience, and during the entire ceremony of nearly two hours, there was perfect quiet and reverent attention.

"The very interesting address of Rev. H. E. Brown held the great audience spell-bound. The honor of laying the stone was conferred on the writer. This, doubtless, greatly astonished those good old brethren who came in the kindness of their hearts to help lay the corner-stone, as they knew it was a "big thing," and would need a "heap" of lifting.

"The work here has been pushed vigorously with the help and instruction Mr. Brown has given the workmen. By his sagacious business management, with his own mechanical genius and devotion to the interests of the A. M. A, and its Southern work, he has saved much expense, and we shall have a very neat little church at much less cost than under any other management that I know."

The perplexities and self-denials of churches and ministers securing houses of worship are illustrated in the facts given below, by Rev. J. F. Galloway of Hamilton, Miss.

"On the night of the 21st of Dec., some one set Mary's Academy on fire and burnt it all up, seats, charts and all. I have been in terrible suspense since the burning, feeling as if I ought to be teaching, so I could be making something for my needy family, and I was not able to build another house. The colored people were not able. We have got the walls (log walls) of another, and got the roof on, but are not able to get the lumber to finish.

"I have spent some of my time working and encouraging the colored people to work on the school house here, and some of the time working on the church, and not doing much at either, because we are so poor. We expect to have another working Saturday to finish getting the sills, corner posts, plates, sleepers, etc., for the church. Then we have nearly $28 raised to buy lumber for the church. My little adopted boy of nine raised about $2, and my little girl of four years $2, by selling their missionary-hen's eggs. Two other children of six and eight years, who had no hens, gathered each a mess of turnip greens, asked their father to sell them, and got a nickel each for the church. You see we have some true hearts if we are poor."

The church in Atlanta, Ga., worshipping in the chapel of Storrs school-house, have secured an eligible lot for a church building. They have raised some funds towards the building of a house of worship and the Association has pledged a little assistance. The hard times and the want of a pastor hinder the progress of this useful band of believers. They need help in the support of a pastor and to enable them to go forward in the erection of their house of worship.

CHURCHES FORMED.

Rev. H. E. Brown gives this item respecting the formation of the church at Childersburg, Ala. It adds another to the circle of mission churches in the vicinity of Talladega that are supplied with preaching by theological students of Talladega College.

"A Congregational Church of eleven adult members was formed at Childersburg, Ala., Oct. 25. Several of the members of the new church are preparing to attend school; two, at least, will study for the ministry.

"Nearly every person of influence in Childersburg has, in one way or another, indicated his faith in the new organization."

At a later date, Mr. Brown describes a meeting held there, and some interesting visits among the people in that vicinity:

"We held a two days' meeting last Saturday and Sunday at Childersburg, 20 miles below, on the Railroad, where there is a new house and new church. On Friday night I met a few people there, with eight of our theological students. Thirty square miles of rather thinly settled forests and plantations and a village, were divided into nine districts. One of us and one or more citizens were assigned to each district.

"On Friday we visited each in the district assigned to him. We reported progress at night. It would have done you good to hear the reports. The house was pretty well filled. The people were so much interested in the reports that I allowed them to go on telling of what they had seen and heard, instead of the sermon. Grey headed men and women had promised that day to serve the Lord, and had knelt in prayer at their own homes, who had never prayed before. One committee found several persons who seemed anxious to begin a new life. Every committee had made unexpected progress. One of the citizens, a member of our church, hired his brother to work in his place so he could spend the whole day visiting. His wife, also, somehow managed to leave home to canvass nearly all day. He reported that it was the best day of his life; he had not supposed sinners would listen so anxiously."

Mr. Brown mentions the formation of another of these mission churches:

"A Congregational Church of nine members, all adults, was formed at Anniston, twenty-five miles from Talladega, May 23d. Anniston is a furnace town built within two years. It already contains several fine brick buildings and an excellent furnace. About 150 colored men are employed there in burning coal and making pig iron. The iron company gave a lot on the main street of the town, and furnished the lumber and nails for the meeting house. There is no other meeting house and, I believe, no other church organization in the place."

Of this general plan for spreading the gospel in the vicinity of Talladega, we have this brief and satisfactory statement:

"During last summer's vacation, with the aid of five theological students from Talladega College, the writer built three meeting houses, formed three churches, and held a series of union revival meetings in which eighty persons were hopefully converted. No leading man, white or black, openly opposed the work. The best men of every denomination, color and party, aided at every place. An influential man has sent an offer of a hundred dollars and a lot for a white church. Another has offered to secure the influence of all his fellow planters in favor of a new church.

"We established churches, not for sectarian purposes, not to tear down others, but for Christ, and as a help to all that is good in all churches.

"Five Congregational churches in all have been formed within twenty-five miles of Talladega. A house has been built for each church, worth from four to six hundred dollars.

"In no case has the American Missionary Association expended for house and lot more than $212, except what was paid to theological students for mission work."

THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS.

Seventy theological students have been connected with our institutions during the year. Some of these are pastors of churches, but feel their need of more Biblical instruction. Thus Rev. Mr. Lord of Emerson Institute, Mobile, Ala. writes:

"Fourteen colored ministers, some of them pastors of large churches in this city and in other places, have come into the Theological class, and have studied with a zeal and enthusiasm I was not prepared to expect."

The efforts of these ministers and of other students to acquire theological knowledge are looked upon with much favor by some of the white ministers in the South. As an instance we have learned that at a Theological Institute held at Talladega College for the benefit of the colored ministers in the vicinity and theological students of the institution, addresses were made in the evenings by the pastors of the white churches of that city. These exercises were continued for two weeks, just before Christmas. The Institute was very favorably noticed by the Talladega press, and somewhat full reports of the lectures are published. We are informed that the white ministers were very cordial, and that two or three of them were present every night.

Most of these theological students are poor and their struggles and self-denials to secure the coveted knowledge are among the most touching facts connected with our work. We make room for one sketch. It is given by a teacher and relates to a student of Talladega College:

"He walked fourteen miles every day to come to school, and came till his shoes wore out. Then he stopped and went to work. He is a circuit preacher. He has five churches. Each member has agreed to pay him twenty-five cents. Sometimes he has meal in his house to eat—sometimes molasses. He says he is going to take a wagon and go out and collect his salary—take his pay in chickens, flour, etc. A few days ago a pastor in the East sent down a book to be given to some young minister. I told him he might keep it, and take it home for his own. The new, pleased, grateful expression on his face will not soon be forgotten!

"He is a very earnest student! He comes to school as long as he has anything to eat, and then stays out and works. To-day he was not in the class. When I reported his absence to our pastor, he said he had a law-suit about the crop he had made this year. None of his witnesses came, all the witnesses on the other man's side came, so he was adjudged $11 for his corn. He had expected $50. All his cotton is lost too! Now he must leave school. What a pity! This ex-slave has preached. He has the test of experience. He wants to make the most of himself in this his first and last chance to study. He had just moved his family to Talladega, and rented a room that he might become a member of the theological class."

The faithful labors of these student-preachers may be illustrated by a sketch furnished by a professor of Straight University, New Orleans:

"Mr. G., one of our theological students, interests me greatly. He is evidently a pure African, has only an infant's knowledge of books, but seems to be possessed of much native sense and great force of character. A little over a year ago, I believe, he went out into the marshes near the marine hospital, in order "not to disturb anybody," bought a lot of ground, with his own money, and put up a little church. By degrees he has gathered a small congregation (lately largely increased by a defection from another church, originating in loss of public confidence in its minister.) There was at first no side-walk to his building, but he visited the authorities in person, and secured the construction of a plank walk. A little Sunday-school has been organized, and aided by one of our college students, he is pushing that to success. His building has become too small for his congregation. The people are poor, and he now hopes to obtain some assistance from other sources."

SUNDAY SCHOOLS—TEMPERANCE REFORM.

Aside from the church-work, there is much done by the churches, the theological and other students in promoting Sabbath-schools and in Temperance reform.

Rev. G. S. Pope of Selma, Ala., gives this picture of the usual Sabbath day's work. Sunday-School labors, in the church and out of it, make no inconsiderable part of the whole:

"This morning at 9.30 one hundred and eighty-nine of us gathered in the Sabbath-school. No class is taught except by a member of our own church. One hour and a half is spent in Sunday-school, and no one seemingly gets tired. At 2 o'clock I preached four miles from the city. At 3 o'clock eight of our church members were teaching in four mission Sunday-schools, the nearest one about a mile distant, the farthest six miles. Two others of our Sunday-school, young converts who expect to unite with us at our next communion, are teaching in one of those mission schools. At the same hour another of our members had gathered a few old people together in a very destitute part of the city, and was reading the Bible to them. At eight o'clock we gathered in our little church for our regular preaching service."

Rev. Mr. Lord of Emerson Institute tells us of the Sabbath-school labors of the pupils of that school:

"The determination of almost all the older scholars, is to teach and elevate their people. Fifteen of the advanced scholars gathered schools for themselves last summer, teaching Sabbath-school in each case. They taught 350 scholars, and brought back with them, in the fall, a number whom they had inspired with a desire to learn. I have been at much pains to inquire and I find the unanimous testimony of the people in the places where these scholars taught, to their earnestness and pure influence. Teachers and scholars are teaching in all the Sabbath-schools in the city. The teachers at the Institute teach and really have a directing influence in Sabbath-schools, of over 3000 scholars. Four of our scholars are superintendents of some of the largest Sabbath-schools."

New Orleans is not famous for Sunday observance, yet Prof. Adams gives this account of the Sabbath-school under his care in that city:

"I am glad to write you a letter from our Sunday-school, in which we have no begging to do and no complaints to make. Since January 1st, we have raised $36.50, which has supplied us with music and other things necessary for the school. The number of scholars has been about one hundred and twenty-five, with an average attendance of eighty-five. This is not a large number for so large a city, but you must remember that we do not live in a Puritan city, where children cry to go to Sunday-school before they are fairly out of their cradles—but in this Frenchy New Orleans—where Sunday is the "maddest, merriest day" of all the week—a day into which parades, processions, excursions, and all kinds of sports and amusements are crowded with a reckless disregard of its sacred character."

The following extract from a letter of Mrs. Pope, from Selma, Ala., will illustrate the good results of Temperance Bands that are formed in connection with our schools.

"Our temperance society is pushing its work, and we are about inaugurating a crusade, to the extent that we are going to hold meetings in each of the colored churches to arouse the people upon this question. And now let me tell you of a ray of light from this lamp.

"A young man who joined our temperance society and also our church, two years ago, has been for the past year teaching in Newbern. He asked us to write a pledge, and we also gave him some tracts and papers, and he started a temperance society in connection with his school, which I think has accomplished much good.

"One of his scholars, Bennie ——, had signed the pledge and become a strong temperance boy. One day he was bitten by a poisonous snake, and the doctor of course prescribed a dram of whiskey. 'But,' said Bennie, 'I can't drink that, I've joined the temperance society,' and no persuasion or threat, or even the fear of death, could induce him to drink the prescribed dose; whereupon the doctor prepared something else which proved to be all that was needed to meet the emergency. That boy is what I call a hero, or at least he has in him the stuff that heroes are made of.

"Another encouraging incident has lately come to our notice. D—— M——, a boy about thirteen years old signed the pledge just before Christmas. His father is a drinking man and always calculates to have a regular spree at Christmas, and his mother has always been in the habit of making egg-nog for the holiday drink, as is the almost universal custom here. D—— went home from the temperance meeting full of an earnest purpose, and after much argument and persuasion obtained from his father a premise that he would not drink at all during Christmas, and his mother promised not to make any egg-nog. Mrs. M—— herself told of this, and said she, 'I did not expect his father would keep his promise, but I reckon he did, and its been a happy Christmas with us, and lately he's brought his money home more than he used to.'"

THE HAMPTON NORMAL INSTITUTE.

COMMENCEMENT DAY—DISTINGUISHED VISITORS AND INTERESTING EXERCISES—THE WORK OF THE SCHOOL—ITS AIMS, METHODS AND FINANCIAL SITUATION—AN APPEAL FOR AID.

[Correspondence of the Evening Post]

HAMPTON, VA., June 11, 1875.

The annual Commencement exercises of the Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute were attended this year by a goodly number of its Northern and Southern friends, among whom may be mentioned the Rev. Phillips Brooks and his brother; the Rev. E. E. Hale, and Mrs. James Lodge, of Boston; the Rev. Dr. Gale, of Lee, Mass.; Wellington Smith, of Berkshire, Mass.; Captain Kinney, of Hartford, Conn.; the Rev. William Taylor, D. D., and Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Brace, of New York; the Rev. Dr. Adams, of Hampton, Va.; Judge Hughes, of the United States District Court; Colonel Benjamin S. Ewell, President of William and Mary College; Major Crocker, superintendent of the schools of Portsmouth, Va.; General Page, superintendent of the schools of Norfolk, Va., and a large number of the leading citizens of Norfolk and Portsmouth.

The Commencement exercises began at 9 A. M. Thursday, June 10th, with recitations and examinations. The proficiency of the students was very satisfactorily shown. Those who listened to the examination will testify that, though lacking that power of clear and ready expression which (especially on abstract subjects) is one of the latest fruits of culture, the students showed no lack of sound mental ability.

After an intermission from twelve till half-past one, during which a lunch was served to over a hundred guests, at the Principal's residence, came the rhetorical exercises of the graduating class, held in the new chapel, Virginia Hall. These exercises, consisting of original compositions and recitations, were relieved by many songs from the "Hampton Singers," who, at home, supported by the ringing chorus of their schoolmates, are heard to greater advantage than elsewhere. Both essays and recitations were received with marked favor by the audience, and the elocutionary training of the speakers was highly commended. The greatest interest was excited by an essay on "Old Time Music," by Joseph B. Towe, himself one of the Hampton Singers. This essay, illustrated by the choir, who threw in their wild choruses showing the peculiar musical agencies referred to by the speaker, elicited enthusiastic applause, and called forth from the Rev. Dr. Taylor a request that it be printed, as will probably soon be done.

Perhaps nothing in the course of the day was more significant than the reception of the valedictory address—"The Black Man as a Voter and Citizen"—by John W. Collins, a free-born native of Maryland. While pointing out the faults and deficiencies of his own race, he made a frank, manly and forcible statement of the distrust of Southern whites among the negro voters, its confirmed character, and its dangerous political influence, which was listened to by the Southerners present in a spirit apparently of equal candor, as appeared from the remarks afterwards made by several of them.

These exercises over, the Rev. George Whipple, Secretary of the American Missionary Association and President of the Board of Trustees, presented the diplomas to the graduating class, after an earnest and touching address.

Speeches were then made by Rev. E. E. Hale, Rev. Dr. Taylor, Rev. Wm. Gale, D. D., Rev. J. W. Harding, Rev. J. M. Jones, historian of the Life of Gen. Lee, Colonel Benjamin S. Ewell, Judge Hughes, Major Crocker and Rev. Dr. Adams.

Mr. Harding's remarks contained the only note of warning during the day. He pointed to the days when the efforts of Massachusetts were directed to the enlightenment of her Indian population, when the Scriptures were translated into their language, and twenty-seven Indian Churches had been gathered on soil whence the race has now entirely disappeared. This failure he held up as a beacon, that the students might see that none such should follow this enterprise.

Major Crocker's speech was also note-worthy. It was the day, he said, when his fellow-citizens were adorning with flowers and moistening with tears the graves of their fallen champions, and he should have been with them but for his desire to be present at the exercises here. After expressing his great satisfaction at what he had seen and heard, he spoke particularly of the good sense and sound principles of the students' essays, telling them that if such were their true sentiments there was no difference between him and them, but they were all brothers. During the delivery of these essays a dove had been flying about the hall and looking down curiously from the rafters. This dove, he said, had carried his mind back to the deluge of blood which so lately had swept over the land, covering even the mountain-tops. If, now, a dove were sent forth by anxious statesmen, to look for signs of the subsiding waters, here, if at any spot, she would find the dry land that might afford rest for her foot. Here, he believed, was to be found the happy solution of the questions that now embarrass us.

The usual evening prayers closed the exercises of the day. The Rev. Phillips Brooks asked the divine blessing on all assembled, and they dispersed after a day of unusual enjoyment, and one full of pleasant incidents suggestive of the closer union and stronger fraternity of the North and South.

A few words of what this school has already accomplished: More than one hundred and fifty young men and women, who have enjoyed a complete or partial course of study at Hampton, have already been engaged in teaching at the South, and ten thousand children have been under their instruction, some of them with marked success. It is frequently said by those interested in education, "The students of Hampton are the only good teachers we can get. They are willing to work, and they know how to go about it; we have tried others, but they are the only ones we find of any use." This, of course, in its negative part is unjust to many worthy graduates of other institutions, but it shows the reputation of the Hampton students, and the practical correctness of the plan on which they are trained. Thirty-nine new educators have just been sent out to join the number previously in the field. Some have already engaged schools and will go to work in a few days.

The school will in a short time be able to accommodate three hundred and fifty scholars, and not less than seventy-five will graduate yearly, nearly all of whom will be employed in the service of the state as teachers at fair salaries. The school is out of debt and its large buildings are completed; but it needs an endowment of half a million dollars, one-third of which may be considered as already secured by the Congressional land scrip. The question of negro civilization must be settled by such institutions, and it is for the North to say whether Hampton shall be placed on a firm basis and thoroughly equipped for the work it has to do.

FISK UNIVERSITY.

HOWARD CHAPEL BEAUTIFULLY AND ELABORATELY DECORATED—EXAMINATIONS, ESSAYS, DECLAMATIONS, ADDRESSES AND ORATIONS.

[From the Republican Banner.]

The closing exercises of this institution began with the Baccalaureate of Sunday afternoon. Tuesday, the examination of classes was begun and continued from 9:30 till 12:30.

The rhetorical exercises were held in the Chapel, which was gotten up in the most beautiful manner for the occasion. Festoons of evergreens hung over the stand and the front end of the Chapel; baskets of flowers, among which most exquisite roses predominated, were suspended on either side the stand, while the gas jets were almost hidden by bunches of cedars. On the walls, toward the doors, were photographs of the Jubilee Singers of this year and last, and of the leaders of the troupe, Prof. Geo. L. White and Prof. Theo. F. Seward. On the wall back of the stand an immense National flag was stretched in graceful folds across the end of the building. In the centre and underneath the flag hung an elegant oil painting of Wm. Wilberforce, in a costly and elaborate frame at the bottom of which was the following statement: "Presented to the Jubilee Singers for Fisk University by friends in England, at Kingston-on-Hull, the birthplace of William Wilberforce." The painting, a most masterly work of art, arriving just in time to grace the closing exercises, cost the people of Hull £50 or $256. It will form one of the attractive features of the commencement exercises.

All the rhetorical Exercises of the Institution, thus far, exhibit careful teachers' work. The reading of the young women has been distinct, while the gesticulation of the young men has been free and appropriate. The exercises of last night fully evinced the ability of the performers to write clearly and deliver their thoughts forcibly.

After the literary Exercises were over, an address was delivered by Rev. Levi B. Wilson, D. D., of Kansas; subject, Sentiment and Faith in Life. His address abounded in eloquent passages and noble thoughts, and was listened to with great attention throughout.

ADDRESSES BY HON. JOHN M. LANGSTON AND OTHERS—GRADUATION OF THE FIRST COLLEGIATE CLASS.

The exercises of the graduating class of the University were held yesterday morning at 10 o'clock. An hour before the time the audience began to file into the chapel, until the capacious chamber was filled to its utmost capacity.

†Absent with Jubilee Singers.

The choir rendered in fine style, "Night Shades no longer." Rev. George Whipple, of New York, led in prayer. A quintette sang, "Sweet Convent Bells," and the graduates were then introduced and accomplished the following programme:

Elements of True Manhood—James Dallas Burrus, Nashville.

The Hundredth Year—John Houston Burrus, Nashville.

Finis Opus Coronat—Virginia Ella Walker, Nashville.

The ability displayed in the productions of the graduating class was fully up to the standard of college graduates. They evinced a capacity of research and a facility of expression which proved that hard study had wrought its legitimate results—accurate culture.

One of the senior class, America W. Robinson, is absent with the Jubilee Singers, and will receive her diploma as soon as she shall have brought up her back studies.

HON. JOHN M. LANGSTON, LL.D.,

was then introduced. He said that "Time and God bring us all things," and with that proposition as his key note, he gave a hurried sketch of the past ten years, adding that the colored race was marching up, and that its way lay through the schools. He paid an eloquent tribute to the American Missionary Association—the foster mother of Fisk University—as represented by Rev. George Whipple, in such cordial words as called forth hearty applause. He urged the young people to overcome the difficulties of their situation, and educate themselves into independent, self-reliant, progressive, aggressive men and women. He expressed his satisfaction in the exercises of the day, and bade the University God speed.

After a beautiful song, "The Hills Resound with Song," by the choir, spoke a few words. He said that the University finished its first decade and graduated its first college class, making this a marked day in the history of the institution, and gave each of the graduates a college diploma.

PROF. A. K. SPENCE

The choir rendered a selection.

REV. E. M. CRAVATH,

to whom, in connection with two or three others the University owes its existence, was introduced and spoke a few congratulatory and encouraging words. In his remarks he mentioned feelingly the sacrifices of the heroic mother of the two young men who graduated, who said that her three sons had successively worn a single pair of pantaloons, which she had turned and patched for the emergency. He urged all the workers to consecrate themselves anew to this work.

REV. GEORGE WHIPPLE,

Senior Secretary of the American Missionary Association, added a few words, showing the progress of public sentiment in behalf of the colored man, contrasting the present with the time, within his own remembrance, when in the most favored seminaries of learning in the land, even the discussion of the subject of slavery was prohibited. He urged the graduates to seek their own happiness by promoting the happiness of others.

The choir then sang a hymn, which had been written for the occasion by Prof. A. K. Spence, Principal of the Institution. The benediction was pronounced by Rev. N. G. Merry.

After the exercises were over, the friends of the Institution joined together in the commencement dinner. In the evening a social reunion was held, when the friends and pupils met to spend an hour in exchanging parting words.

Thus closed the most interesting and successful commencement exercises in the history of the University. The interest swelled higher and higher each day, culminating on commencement day with the graduation of the college class.

BEREA COLLEGE, KENTUCKY.

BY PROF. E. H. FAIRCHILD.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES—LARGE ATTENDANCE OF BOTH WHITE AND COLORED PEOPLE—INTERESTING EXERCISES—BEREA'S PROSPECTS NEVER MORE HOPEFUL.

The exercises were preceded by the anniversary of the Phi Delta Society on Friday evening; the Baccalaureate sermon of Prof. Fairchild, Sunday morning, on the "Harmony of Philosophy and Christianity"; the Missionary sermon, Sunday evening, by Rev. J. E. Roy of Chicago, on "Our Father's Business"; examinations Monday and Tuesday; and an able address on the "Dangers of our Country," by Peter H. Clark of Cincinnati, Tuesday evening.

It was anticipated that we should have a small audience on Wednesday. A circus at Richmond would draw the rabble, the court in session would detain the lawyers and many business men, the farmers were rushing into wheat harvest, and the small-pox panic, which had scattered many of the students, was still rife in the mountains. But it was a magnificent day, and at 8 o'clock in the morning the country people were coming in, and at 10 about twelve hundred were gathered under the arbor in the college grove, attentively listening to the essays and orations of the young ladies and gentlemen. At no other place can be seen such an illustration of the college motto, "God hath made of one blood all nations of men," as here, in the centre of Kentucky.

Of the nineteen performers, twelve were white and seven colored, six were entering college, and three were graduating. All did well, and some very finely. Immediately at the close, a Professor of Madison Female Seminary took the hand of the President and said: "I congratulate you on the success of your entertainment;" which expressed the thought of all. One thing is constantly manifest at these commencements: Berea College has a mission, and its spirit pervades the faculty, students and trustees. No favorable opportunity is neglected to "make its great commission known." If liberty, equality and fraternity do not embrace the whole human family, Berea will not be at fault.

At 2 P. M. the President made his annual statement. The whole number of students has been 271, about three-fifths males and nearly one-half white. When the school was fullest there were two more white than colored. The whole expenses of a young lady for a year, including board, tuition, room furnished, fuel and lights, are $100, in advance. A part of this may generally be paid by work; and an industrious young man may defray half his expenses by labor.

The address of Rev. J. E. Roy that followed, riveted the attention of the whole audience. We felt prouder of our great and growing country, and more earnest to seek laborers for the harvest as he displayed his magnificent map and expatiated on the prospects, the powers, the dangers and hopes of the nation.

Rev. E. M. Cravath followed in his happiest mood, and Peter H. Clark with his wisest advice. It was a happy and profitable day, and the crowd went away delighted with Berea.

At the meeting of the trustees it was resolved to make vigorous efforts to liquidate the debt and complete the endowment. The faculty will spend the summer vacation in the interest of the college, both in this State and at the North. The prospects of Berea were never more hopeful.

THE EXAMINATION AND ANNIVERSARY EXERCISES.

The examination exercises of the Atlanta (colored) University, began on the 21st instant, and closed on the 23d

* Absent during the year. † Served part of the year.

Messrs. J. W. Glenn, H. H. Jones and Col. Mark Johnson, of the Board of Visitors appointed by Gov. Smith, were present during the examination exercises, and expressed themselves surprised at the proficiency of the scholars and the discipline maintained.

Specially commendable was the quiet, orderly deportment of the students, and their prompt obedience to the slightest command of their teachers. Wonderful indeed was the examination of the class in Latin, who had been studying it for six months. One noticeable fact was that the pure Ethiopian was the best drilled, repeating literally, while those of lighter grades exhibited more individuality, and less of imitative qualities. The examinations proved that the teachers were fitted for their calling.

THE ANNIVERSARY EXERCISES

came off yesterday at Friendship (colored) Baptist Church, on Mitchell street.

In addition to the Board of Visitors, we noticed present Prof. G. J. Orr, State School Commissioner, Col. N. J. Hammond, Lieut. R. J. Lowry, and others.

The certificates were presented to the graduates by Prof. Chase.

HON. A. T. AKERMAN'S ADDRESS.

The annual address was delivered by Hon. A. T. Akerman. He said that all reflections on the former polity of the State was in bad taste and in bad morals. If the light of the nineteenth century did not prevail in the eighteenth century, why blame the eighteenth? Let us act now according to the light of the present. Education as now guaranteed in the organic law, "shall be forever free to all the children of the State." The present system in force is as efficient as our poverty will admit. Thinking men all agree in the general polity. Educating the children at the expense of the State is no new thing in Georgia. Seventy-five years ago Georgia established the State University, and it is now one of the precious jewels of the State. Every argument made in favor of advanced education is increased ten fold when applied to elementary education. The Atlanta University is the complement of the general school system. It is yet new and experimental. The capacity of the pupils is not a matter of doubt. But a tree is known by its fruits—its latter as well as its early fruits. The University will be known by the demeanor, bearing and history of the students.

Commencement orators often tell students that everything is within their grasp. This is all arrant trash. He would not advise them to be orators, poets, historians, governors or presidents. On the contrary, he would advise them to prepare others to become useful and upright common people. Those who rise to eminent places do not determine it in early life. The father who destines his child in infancy to be President will have a son that will not rise above a fool. Strive to acquire wealth. Property is valuable because of its effect upon character, being an anchorage to it. Colored people are too prone to spend their earnings. Education does not impart mind; it can only improve it. It brings no immunity from work, but dignifies and ennobles it. He urged upon them as important elements of success, personal integrity, cheerfulness, frugality and industry.

Col. Akerman spoke about an hour and a half, and his remarks were well received.

We rejoice in being able to report that the effort to deprive the Atlanta University of the State appropriation of $8,000, utterly failed. When the proposition came before the Legislature for action, there was but one vote in favor of withdrawing the grant. We accept this decision as evidence of the wise and just purpose of the people of Georgia to educate the colored citizens of the State.

TALLADEGA COLLEGE.

BY REV. G. STANLEY POPE.

A CAREFUL AND SATISFACTORY EXAMINATION.

Allow me to give you a few impressions of my own concerning the examinations in Talladega College, which closed yesterday. I have been careful to divide my time between the different branches examined, so my personal observation embraces every department.

Monday, June 28, was occupied in the examination of the primary and intermediate departments. In these departments, the text book had been kept before the pupil more than seems wise to me, but the examinations proved the thoroughness of the work that had been done, and showed that the foundation had been laid for hard study, and close application.

Tuesday and Wednesday were occupied in the examinations of classes in the preparatory, normal and theological departments. In branches where it was possible, the pupils were given topics and required to present their thoughts upon them. In other branches questions were written upon slips of paper which the pupil drew.

About forty among the more advanced students had been obliged to leave their studies to teach. Some who had been absent two or three months, came back and were examined with their classes. Although so many of the most advanced students were absent, the examinations in these departments were very satisfactory.

I never have attended an examination in any college, where, I think, the results were more commendatory to both instructors and pupils.

In the music, and in the literary exercises Wednesday night, one could not fail to see merit and careful preparation. The exercises of the Young People's Literary Society were very enjoyable, and those parts which were their own production, the orations, essays, and discussions, were especially so, showing clearness both in thought and manner of presentation.

Talladega College.

The eighth annual session of this Institution came to a close on the 30th day of June. We were not so fortunate as to be able to attend during the entire examination; but from what we saw, and have learned from many of our best citizens who did attend, we have no hesitation in saying that Talladega College is not only one of the most successfully conducted of the many institutions of learning established in the South by Northern Philanthropists, but is, in every feature that constitutes a good school, the equal of any school of its grade in the State.

As we have before had occasion to say, and as it is admitted by all unprejudiced men of this community, who know any thing about the school, the good that it has done, and is doing, among the colored people of this section is almost incalculable. It is gradually breaking down the opinion that the colored people are not susceptible of being educated—an opinion once entertained by almost every Southerner.

In other words, it is fast making friends for the cause of popular education and a thorough system of free public schools—the greatest of Alabama's needs.

The American Missionary Association, under whose auspices this Institution was established and is being conducted, have every reason to be encouraged and to continue their good work here. The time will soon come when the success of their schools will create a more liberal public sentiment relative to the education of the colored people, and stimulate our people to establish and support a system of free schools second to none in the United States. Such a result is worth struggling for, and the success of Talladega College and others like it will win it.

TOUGALOO UNIVERSITY—ANNUAL VISIT OF THE COMMITTEE.

The law requires an annual visit of a committee of at least three persons to this Institution, whose duty it is to examine the pupils and to report. The committee, this year, embraced F. A. Wolfe, Esq., Superintendent of Education of Hinds County; Dr. W. C. Crane, of St. Andrew's Church, Jackson, and Prof. Minor, of the Secretary of State's office.

Your reporter, who accompanied the committee by special invitation, was gratified to witness the evident proficiency that the pupils, in their various departments, had attained during so short a period. The committee, after listening to the recitations, would frequently propound questions to the students. In most instances, they were met with satisfactory answers, showing that the education imparted is not mere surface polish, but that the student is so drilled that he knows and can give the reason for his conclusions. Dr. Crane, at the close of the examination, expressed the gratification of the committee in witnessing the advancement of the institution, and spoke words of encouragement to the pupils, the principal and assistants, and was apparently much gratified to see the perfect discipline which held the vast number in the most admirable subjection, without the least noise or apparent efforts on the part of the teachers. The best and most experienced of our teachers outside of this institution would doubtless profit by a visit to Tougaloo when it shall be in full blast next fall.

Mention of the female department should not be omitted. The females, like the males, are permitted to liquidate a portion of their expenses by performing the labors necessary to keep up the domestic department, embracing cooking, laundry and other appropriate service.

The Superintendent of Education of Hinds County informs us that he is continually receiving applications from other counties for teachers who have received their training at Tougaloo, but that he is unable to reply, not having enough teachers for his own county. And right here it may be proper to state, that in no instance have the teachers sent out from this school done discredit to themselves, or in any case failed to give entire satisfaction to the patrons. One paramount feature in the instruction imparted, is

THE SABBATH SCHOOL.

In this the pupil is regularly trained, so that whether he be a professor or not he can conduct and carry on the exercises of this important means of intellectual and moral training in the most approved and rational manner.

THE FARM

of 500 acres gives employment to those who desire to liquidate one-half of their expenses for tuition and board, by laboring two hours daily, (except Saturdays, when they work four and a half hours,) thus reducing their expenses from about $12 per month to $5. This affords for the table an excellent supply of vegetables. The training of the pupils in this department is regarded of the greatest importance. They are taught, when they undertake a piece of work, no matter how simple, to execute it to the best advantage, not to rush headlong into it and do it in a manner that will require doing over again.

BY PROF. J. A. ADAMS.

A MOST SUCCESSFUL CLOSING EXHIBITION—OVERWORKED TEACHERS—A BOARDING HALL NEEDED.

Our summer term closed with one of the most successful exhibitions we have ever given. An unusually large audience was present, and listened with marked attention throughout. The original pieces especially elicited much praise. They showed an ability which promises much for the future. Our annual examinations and commencement exercises were held in February.

Four young ladies graduated from the Normal department, making the second class of graduates from that department.

We have been greatly hindered during the year by want of sufficient laborers. Mr. Louis A. Bell, law professor, died just at the beginning of the school year. In November, Dr Thompson was called to the presidency of Alcorn University. This left two departments and the Central Church unprovided for. Besides, the acting President and four teachers did not return; only one was sent to fill the vacant places. We stood aghast at first, but the order to economize had gone abroad, and we bowed to the inevitable, spread ourselves over as much work as the hours of the day would allow and kept things running. Finally, Miss Parmelee, so well and favorably known, came to our relief, which enabled us to dispense with student teaching, an experiment which cost us much patronage.

The Law department was placed in the hands of members of the city bar, under whose supervision so much interest has been excited that the students have earnestly requested that the instruction should continue through the last months. The Theological department, numbering fifteen students, was instructed at odd hours by the college professors. This class embraces men of all denominations, most of whom already have churches or are preaching. They are honest, earnest, faithful students, and ought to do much to reform the "present style" of religion. Our boarding house is not large, and was soon filled to overflowing. Secretary Cravath partly promised us a new three-story building next year, but with your present embarrassments we fear that this will be an impossibility.

We copy a few words about the "busy workers" in Charleston:

Little noise has been heard from us in Charleston; but if we have not buzzed it is not because we have not been busy bees. School furnishes a great deal of employment for time, outside of the regular school hours. When boys and girls have all departed, leaving the halls of learning to vacant silence, in the Home next door, the teachers sit bending over books, papers and pens, or cogitating new plans. Our principal, with his double duties of school and church, works sometimes to the verge of danger. Our teachers are faithful followers of his example.

During this long season of short days we have had to dovetail our duties in the nicest manner, in order to fit them into the allotted time.

It is natural that after the long fast many hasten eagerly to the feast. Thus was it after the war when a people long deprived of mental food were bidden to come and take, "without money and without price." Now this keen appetite is gone. Now colored boys and girls do not love learning more ardently than do white boys and girls; but the former, as much as the latter, must be entreated and impelled to seek their own good. None can do more than to dig diligently into the often hard human soil, and drop in some tears also as the seed is dropped, raising prayer with hope, to Him who has bidden, "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand."

Brewer Normal School, Greenwood, S. C.

Teacher, Mr. J. D. Backenstose, Geneva, N. Y.
Number of pupils, 17 (Normal, 6); number in Sabbath-school, 30.

Much good has resulted from the enthusiastic efforts of Mr. B., the Principal. The school would have been larger, but for the poverty of the people. Those attending have made a great advance during the year, and ten of them will soon be prepared to enter upon the work of teaching.

Normal School, Andersonville, Ga.

From the lack of funds, we were compelled to discontinue the work at this station, and no school has been held, except one taught by a student-teacher during a few months in the summer.

Storrs School, Atlanta, Ga.

Principal, Miss Amy Williams, Livonia Sta., N. Y.; Assistants, Miss Mary Beach, Perrysburg, Ohio; Miss Lizzie Stevenson, Bellefontaine, Ohio; Miss Nellie J. Howe, Post Mills, Vt.; Miss Anna Baker, Oberlin, Ohio; Miss Amelia Ferris, Oneida, Ill.; Matron, Miss Lizzie Stevenson, Bellefontaine, Ohio.
Number of pupils, 440 (Normal, 4); number in Sabbath-school, 280.

As during the previous year, the Association furnished the building, and nominated the teachers, who were paid by the School Board. The school has been full to overflowing, and even more would have been in attendance, if larger accommodations could have been furnished.

Lewis High School, Macon, Ga.

Principal, Miss M. E. Sands, Saco, Me.; Assistants, Miss A Lynch, Ballston, N. Y.; Miss Addelyn Gerrish, Leetonia, Ohio.
Number of pupils, 272; number in Sabbath-school, 150.

Co-operation with the city has been less successful at this point than at other stations, yet the Association furnished the school building, and nominated three of the teachers, the remainder being from the South.

Beach Institute, Savannah, Ga.

During the past year, this building has been rented to the city for the use of the public schools.

Graded School, St. Augustine, Florida.

Teachers, Mrs. Isadore Hamlin, St. Augustine, Fla.; Miss Alice M. Kearney, St. Augustine, Fla.
Number of pupils, 127.

Very efficient work has been done at this school under the direction of Mrs. Hamlin, who resigned at the close of the year. The school has lost an interested and benevolent friend in the death of Dr. Bronson.

Trinity School, Athens, Ala.

Principal, Miss M. F. Wells, Ann Arbor, Mich.; Assistant, Miss Abby Fay, Prairie Depot, Ohio.

Number of pupils, 411 (Normal, 158); number in Sabbath-school, 300.

In reviewing two years, Mr. Lord has given us an encouraging report of the fruitfulness of this field.

In these two years more than fifty young men and women have begun the Christian life, not from impulse, but by coming to respect, love and finally choose, that life. Over five hundred scholars have been under the influences of school life, and almost all have come to despise the old way of living, and really have an honorable ambition. I never knew a more noble sentiment than has grown up among our older scholars during the past year.

The white people have shown a remarkable amount of kindly feeling, especially the pastor and people of the First Presbyterian Church. We have even been offered assistance by Southern white teachers, in teaching in a new Sabbath-school. When we recall all these encouragements—the spirit of progress and improvement which has already begun to work as a little leaven, we cannot but forget our discouragements in enthusiasm and earnest endeavor.

Swayne School, Montgomery, Ala.

Principal, Mr. J. M. McPherron, Montgomery, Ala.; Assistants, Mrs. J. M. McPherron, Montgomery, Ala.; Miss Mary Ashley, Northboro, Mass.; Miss C. E. Hulsart, Imlay City, Mich.; Miss Helen M. Leonard, New Bedford, Mass.; Miss M. A. Perry, Holden, Mass.; Matron, Mrs. G. W. Andrews, Collinsville, Ct.

Number of pupils, 472; number in Sabbath-school, 160.

Mr. McPherron writes:

The school attendance of the past year has not been quite as full as in some former years. This is partly owing to hard times. But most of those who have been in school during the year have made very much better progress in their studies than in any previous year. Some who were doing well in their studies were compelled to leave school to teach, because if they did not begin at once they would lose the opportunity of earning any money during the year, which they could by no means afford. One very encouraging fact, in the history of the year, has been the conversion of many of our best scholars.

During the week of examinations, a committee of gentlemen, composed principally of residents of the city, visited the school. They seemed much pleased and as much surprised. Some of them were fully of the opinion that the colored people were incapable of an education. One of these said he was glad to have that idea exploded. Judge Bibb declared that the school belied the common impression that the negro could not receive a thorough education. Capt. Bush (city superintendent), said the school had never before made as good progress. A reporter for the "Chicago Tribune," remarked that he never saw scholars who had been in school for the same length of time do better. He was especially pleased with recitations in algebra and grammar. These are some of the more encouraging aspects of the work. Of course, there are discouragements. Perhaps the greatest of these is the difficulty of keeping scholars in school for a sufficient length of time.

Burrell School, Selma, Ala.

Principal, Mr. J. N. Messer, Parnassus, Penn., Assistants, Miss Sarah C. Williams, Lafayette, Ohio; Miss Sarah L. Emerson, Hallowell, Me.; Miss Mary E. Wilcox, Madison, Ohio; Miss Mary Miller, Fostoria, Ohio; Miss Emily E. Hersey, Bennington, N.H.; Miss C. A. Benton, New Haven, Conn.; Matron, Miss Sarah L. Emerson, Hallowell, Me.

Number of pupils, 399 (Normal, 14); number in Sabbath-school, 450.

Of the prosperity of this school, the Principal says:

You will be gratified to hear that there has been uniform progress throughout the year in all of the following particulars: In increased zeal and study; more regular attendance, more cleanliness of person and clothing; and a greater regard for morality and religion. The most discouraging feature of the work is the irregularity of attendance. The colored population is more transient than the white. Children come to school a few days and never come again, and when they are looked for, it is found that they have moved away. We have had enrolled during the present school year four hundred pupils, while the average is just two hundred. This is a very poor showing; but when we consider the condition of the people it is easily explained. The colored people are very poor; many of them taxed to the utmost to get some thing to eat. So when they can find work for any of their children, the temptation to take them from school is very great.

Burrell School Reform Society is still a vigorous organization; the meetings are well attended usually. I think it is doing good. Many of the larger school boys are very much interested in the temperance work.

Howard School, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Principal, Mr. B. F. Koons, Oberlin, Ohio; Assistants, Miss Emma Fairfield, Mansfield, Ohio; Miss C. M. Blood, Lyme, N.H.; Miss Julia A. Johnson, Cleveland, Ohio; Miss Adella Royce,* Oberlin, Ohio; Miss Mary H. Scott, Waukegan, Ill.

Number of pupils, 468, (Normal, 8); number in Sabbath-school, 125.

We receive from the Principal the following information:

"Our year has been one of pleasant, and, I trust, of faithful work. We have done all we could reasonably hope to accomplish, and we feel that great advancement has been made by many of our pupils, both intellectually and morally. We have been visited by other workers, and have received many words of cheer and encouragement from them. Our Sabbath-school is in a flourishing condition."

Le Moyne Normal and Commercial School, Memphis, Tenn.

Principal, Prof. A. J. Steele, Whitewater, Wis.; Assistants, Miss E. M. Barnes, Bakersfield, Vt.; Miss Amelia F. Clapp, Kirtland, Ohio; Miss S. A. Stevens, St. Johnsbury, Vt.; Miss S. Ida Allen, Leetonia, Ohio; Miss S. A. Allan, Geneseo, Ill.; Matron, Miss E. M. Barnes, Bakersfield, Vt.

Number of pupils, 300, (Normal, 140); number in Sabbath-school, 80.

From the Memphis Appeal.

The closing exercises of Le Moyne Normal School, ushered in by an excellent sermon, by Rev. David Walk, of the Linden Street Christian Church, last Sunday, have been of an interesting and creditable character throughout—creditable both to instructors and pupils. Too much praise cannot be bestowed upon those, who, without remuneration sufficient to provide the plain necessities of life, left pleasant homes for the purpose of doing the work that is being done by the teachers of this institution, in educating the colored people to a degree of usefulness, at least to their own race, they would hardly attain by any other means.

On Tuesday and Wednesday the different classes were examined. Those in algebra, history, physiology, grammar, arithmetic, geography, gave evidences of thoroughness hardly looked for, the examination proving highly satisfactory. On Tuesday night the exercises of the junior classes took place, and were of a very interesting character. They consisted of recitations and essays. Every one was pleased with the exercises, they showing careful training, and intelligence and appreciation on the part of those engaged.

*Resigned.

Last night the exercises of the senior class, the closing exercises of the term, were listened to by a crowded house. The essays read showed thought and some ability in composition.

Throughout, the exercises, as well as the work of the whole year, have been full of promise and encouragement. Never have pupils been more kindly and carefully guided and taught. It is well known that the discipline and spirit worked up by Mr. Steele and his helpers are well worthy the approval and imitation of our educators. Many of the students of the normal department, we learn, go to the country to teach during the vacation months, with the expectation of being able to continue their studies in the fall; thus the influence of this institution is not only a blessing to the colored people of this community, but it reaches to other communities by the influence exerted through the teachers sent out.

Some of them already exhibit much tact in teaching. Each year we get some pupils from a distance of seventy, eighty and ninety miles, and a number of our students are out teaching now.

"We have reorganized our Sabbath-school in the new A. M. E. Church with renewed prospects for good. The teachers are nearly all from our school. We meet once a week as a Bible Class and Teacher's Meeting, which is well attended."

STUDENT-TEACHERS.

We have already, in the General Survey, mentioned the gratifying fact that more than sixty thousand pupils were taught by our former students. It remains to give some details showing their zeal and usefulness.

A teacher in Atlanta writes:

The first Sabbath evening of the school year is given to reports from those who have been teaching during the three months' summer vacation.

One young man reported twenty-nine conversions of children under fifteen years of age from his day and Sabbath-school. This young man was so apparently unpromising that even his teachers could never encourage him to anything higher than "toting brick." Yet he has plodded on at his books, a marvel of patience, battling with stupidity, poverty and ridicule, till he has now closed his second term of school teaching. As he told his simple story in his broken way, his black face radiant as he spoke of his love for the souls he had led to Jesus, I felt truly it is "not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit saith the Lord of Hosts."

Many of our students are genuine missionaries, leaving comfortable homes in pleasant cities, where they might spend a restful vacation, to go to some plantation miles from the railroad and postoffice, to teach such schools as are found only in the benighted South. Others sacrifice the profits of a good trade, receiving often a mere pittance from the poor parents whose children they are lifting into the light. Their delight in returning to our Christian family and enjoying its intelligence and culture, marks their self-denial in shutting themselves up to a people of extreme poverty and ignorance, being often compelled to listen to a minister, and labor under a Sunday-school superintendent, who cannot read.

The Southern Workman frequently publishes letters from the Hampton students who are engaged in teaching. We copy a few items:

Ackrel E. White writes, "Since the 17th of Nov., which was the time I left your school, I have been located in a very hilly and rocky country—among the Blue Ridge mountains.

"I have now on the roll of my day school thirty-nine scholars, and after Christmas I expect to have more. I am happy to say that I have a large Sunday-school of both old and young; and I think much good can be done in Sunday-school, for the children and their parents all come out, and the old people are very anxious to learn to read the Bible. I have those read that can read, and then I explain to them the best I can. I am sorry to say that I have but a very few that can read the Bible, but those that cannot read are very anxious to hear it read."

George W. Cole writes from Tappahannock, Va.: "I have a large school, and it works me day and night. I have also quite a large Sunday school, which is doing well. I have white as well as colored. They mix in the classes and all enjoy their lessons together. We are having quite a nice time in day and Sunday-school too. The County Superintendent was out to see me last Tuesday. He was well pleased, and complimented the school by saying it was the best in the county. When he first put me to work he said he would not allow me full wages, but he says now that I am welcome to full rates."

A teacher in Wilmington furnishes this illustration of the good outcome to an unpromising scholar:

In one case, a very fair knowledge of the common branches had been obtained, to little purpose apparently, as there was no desire to use it, in meeting the great need of teachers. In course of events, and after no little hesitation, the young man was led to take a school in the country—and now seems entirely absorbed in his work. In a recent visit to the city, he was able to tell us not only of his success and happiness in the public schools, but also of a pleasant Sabbath gathering for which he gladly received books and papers.

A teacher in Athens, Ala., gives this cheering information:

A goodly company of our best students, young men and women of rare promise, re giving themselves to the work of teaching, with a devotion, a spirit of consecration, that is a silent but powerful rebuke to all luke warm, faithless ones, who do not rise to the grand privilege of doing all possible good with their rich dower of talent, learning and accomplishment.

From all quarters come words of cheer from our student-teachers. Though they are met by many difficulties, and have hard battles to fight, yet they are full of courage, and their enthusiasm is an inspiration to us, in the work of preparing more laborers for the Master's vineyard.

The demand for our students as teachers is thus spoken of by a teacher in Mississippi:

Our graduates are eagerly sought for by the most intelligent county superintendents, and preferred to even Northern teachers, because they can adapt themselves more readily to the wants of the people. A few years of such labor will accomplish more for the regeneration of the South than could ever be accomplished by legislation.

CHINESE IN AMERICA.

Superintendent.

REV. WM. C. POND, San Francisco, Cal.

Advisory Committee.

Rev. Geo. Mooar, D.D.; Rev. Jos. Rowell,; Rev. J. W. Hough, D.D.; Rev. E. P. Baker,; Hon. Sam'l. Cross,; Hon. E. D. Sawyer,; W. K. Rowell, Esq.; John A. Snook, Esq.

An abstract of the article by Rev. W. C. Pond, giving a connected view of the reasons for continuing the work of the Association among the Chinese, is here presented. It forms a good introduction to the brief but encouraging details which follow:

The American Missionary Association was among the pioneers in missionary service among the Chinese immigrants to California. As early as 1852, Rev. S. V. Blakeslee, under the auspices of this society, undertook to reach and save these heathen strangers, on a plan substantially the same as that which in later years is proving its wisdom, by its great success. That is, he proposed to teach them English instead of requiring their teachers to learn Chinese. The times were not ripe for the effort then; or, for some other reason, the enterprise was abandoned.

In 1870, Gen. C. H. Howard, at that time the Western Secretary of the Association, visited California, to inquire in relation to a resumption of the work laid down sixteen or seventeen years before. The result was that several schools were established, most of which are continued in operation, on a somewhat modified system, to this day. We will not consume space in sketching, even in the briefest manner, the history of these schools, but will pass at once, to a question of immediate and practical interest.

"I. Is this work needed? We have in America more than 100,000 Chinese; of whom it is safe to say that 80,000 are to be found on the Pacific slope. This is the vanguard of an army whose reserves amount to 400,000,000. It is coming to our shores at the rate of about fifteen hundred every month: the average for the last three years being sixteen thousand per annum. It is an army of busy, enterprising, persistent people, who hold what they get, and get what they can, not only of money, but of place and power. It is an army which, having its base in San Francisco, pushes its inroads to all parts of the land; and, whether welcome or unwelcome, will get a footing, and will make its way everywhere. It is an army of heathen, selfish, cruel, corrupt and corrupting. How can it be a question with any Christian, or with any thoughtful lover of his country, whether these strangers need to be, or ought to be, educated in our ideas, and brought to the knowledge and love of Christ.

"But is the special work of this Association needed? Suppose that we should retire from the field, will not others come to the rescue? Doubtless, God will find instrumentalities, even though we decline to do our part. Our work does not come in as a rival or competitor with other missions: and so far as it has yet been extended, it is a clear addition to the amount of effort made, and of results secured. All the missions, Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist, as well as our own, need greatly to increase their labors, if more is done than to teach the bare surface of the mass of heathenism brought within our reach. We might double our work in this city without trenching on that of any other mission. We might quadruple it in the State at large, if the funds could be provided to sustain it. The field is large, is open, is inviting. The harvest is precious. It must be reaped.

"II. What is our work in its methods and aims? There is nothing in the externals of it, imposing. We have had no funds to expend in the erection of large buildings, or the gathering together of complicated machinery. We begin by establishing an evening school which we invite the Chinese to attend, for the purpose of learning the English language.

"The purpose of these schools is, first, to bring the Chinese within our reach. They desire to learn English, but, at first, do not wish to learn about Christ. They will run the risk of the latter, for the sake of the former. We are honest with them, and fulfil the implied pledges of our invitation, by giving them the very best instruction in English, that we can afford. But from the beginning we speak to them of Jesus. It is scarcely possible that one should have been in our schools a week, without learning something about the Saviour, and hearing that he himself is invited to accept the great salvation.

"We earnestly desire to retain them in the school, till they have learned to read the Bible, easily and intelligently, in our tongue. The Scriptures in Chinese are not as useful among the common people of China, as we had at first supposed them to be. The number who can read in their own tongue, is comparatively small: and of those who can pronounce the characters, very few comprehend the ideas which they represent. Reading as taught in the primary schools in China is mechanical and almost meaningless. Among those of our converts who can read in Chinese, the majority would turn from their Chinese Bible to our English one, to learn what they had been reading about. So that we are specially cheered as we observe a constantly increasing steadiness in the attendance of our pupils, and a larger and larger proportion of them who advance to the point where they can read and appreciate and commit to memory such passages of the Bible as we bring to their attention. This is the most that we undertake in the educational direction. A few of our pupils do a little in geography and arithmetic, but except in the cases of those who have been selected as missionary helpers, we take the ground that their study of the higher branches of an English education must be pursued, if at all, at their own expense. For the end for which our schools exist, is not the training of the intellect, but the saving of the soul. Their leading idea is not the education, but the conversion of the pupils. We sustain them, in order that through them we may preach the gospel. And the gospel is preached through these instrumentalities more efficiently, I am fully convinced, than it could be in any other way. The Christian teacher is brought into personal contact with the pupils, so that, often, warm personal friendship springs up, and they listen with sincere respect and ready faith to whatever testimony may be borne respecting Jesus. The hymns, some of which are sung at every session, are surcharged with gospel. In connection with each school, a portion of one or two evenings every week, is devoted to special devotional exercises, in addition to those which belong to the regular routine. And as soon as any pupil has yielded himself to the love and service of Christ, the school affords him just the right field for Christian work, and a good opportunity for practical Christian training.

"III. This preaching of the gospel has not been without effect. I doubt whether any evangelistic labor in connection with our churches, has yielded larger results, in proportion to the funds employed, and the breadth which we have been permitted to give to the work. Last month four hundred and eighty-three Chinese attended our schools During the last eleven months (since the commencement of the present fiscal year of the Association), at least sixteen hundred and eighty-four have attended for longer or shorter periods—long enough, every one of them, to have heard something about Jesus, and to have understood that kindness was shown them for Jesus' sake. The average attendance, last month, was three hundred and six. There is reason to believe that nearly seventy have been converted in connection with our efforts, of whom more than thirty were led to believe during the last year. Scarcely a month has passed without bringing tidings of dark souls brought to this life-giving light. Thirty-eight have been baptized. These converts have united in the organization of 'The Congregational Association of Christian Chinese,' the members of which are pledged to love one another, and to watch over, care for and help one another. New members are received to this Association with great carefulness, and on substantially the same terms on which we receive members to our churches. But they remain in the Association under instruction and test-work and training, about six months before they are recommended for baptism and reception to the church. Our Chinese converts have in almost every instance proved themselves to be true-hearted, steady, hard working, giving and growing Christians. Among them are several whom I should be glad to take at once as missionary helpers, if the funds could be provided for their support. More and more thoroughly am I convinced that this is the true plan for conducting the work: as the Apostles found it in their days: as the American Board finds it in foreign lands in our day: to call into service those who know in their own experience what it is to come out of heathen darkness into the light and love and life of Christ.

"It is impossible that the Congregational Churches of California, few as they are, and very feeble, as all but two or three of them are, with the great and manifold pioneer work which God has given them to do: it is impossible, I say, that they should carry unaided this Chinese mission. With about three thousand members, these churches raised and expended, last year, in Christian work, $135,366. They will do as much, or more, this year. They have increased the amount raised in California, for this cause (outside the contributions of the Chinese themselves), from $190 in 1873–4, to more than $1700 in 1874–5. Their gifts for it will increase. But they cannot do it all."

REPORTS OF SCHOOL WORK AMONG THE CHINESE.

We copy below, extracts from some letters—mainly written by Gee Gam, the faithful Chinese convert—giving the methods of work and the encouraging results; together with glimpses of persecution.

Gee Gam thus describes some of his modes of securing attention to Bible truth:

"During my ten days' visit at the school in Sacramento, I entertained the scholars as follows; 1st. I assisted the instructor in teaching the scholars to read in their reader from 6½ P. M. to 8 P. M. I then gave them some arithmetic exercises on the black board. I first show them an example and then set some new figures on the board and asked the most advanced boy to do it, while others could look on and learned by his motions. 2nd. I gave them some geography lessons from the Map of the World and also told them about the two motions of the earth and their rate of speed—the size of the earth and its distance from the sun and moon. I also told them about the idea which many of our countrymen have been relating in regard to it. 3rd. I gave them a few miscellaneous sentences on the board as follows, 'He endeavored to bribe the judge.' 'He was arrested for forgery.' 'He was imprisoned for perjury.' 'The judge will certainly convict him.' 'He is now a convict,' &c.

"The reason why I gave them such sentences was, because there is not a Chinese in America who does not want to learn the language of the courts. There, I made and used these sentences to procure their most careful attention, and obtain their audience for the Bible lesson which I intended to read and explain before them. This lesson commenced from 9 to 9½ o'clock, and then I closed the school with a prayer.

"The first evening in Stockton I invited the scholars to remain for some Bible lessons after we got through teaching at 9 o'clock, but they all said that they had to go. I found none of them were to remain, so I was quite disappointed at the time. I went back to my lodging place, kept thinking what was the best way to gain their attention. Finally the thought came to my mind, I told it to the teacher of the school. So the next evening we shortened the lessons and got through teaching at 8 o'clock. I then distributed the Bibles among them and told them to look at the place which I had marked. Then I went on reading and explaining to them about the five thousand that were fed with the five loaves and two fishes, and the twelve baskets which they took up. They were so astonished and so delighted to hear more of Jesus' power, but I found my time was rather short, so I told them about the seven loaves and a few little fishes which satisfied the hunger of the four thousand.

"After I got through my Bible stories, I gave them some experiences similar to those which I gave in Sacramento. I continued with them from seven to ten every evening. One of the most advanced scholars asked me in Sunday-school as soon as he saw me, he said thus: 'Please find those places for me of which you spoke, for I love to read them?' What a great joy I felt within my heart when he told me this. I could do nothing but keep thanking in my heart the Lord, and also asked for more of His holy spirit upon the boy."

Another letter mentions the case of a Chinaman who threatened to kill his own brother for being a Christian, but who was afterwards converted himself:

"I forgot to mention in my last report about the boy who united with our Chinese Christian Association from Oakland. He was Gaw Moy's brother. His intentions were to come to California to make money and convert his brother back to heathenism, and to take his life if he would not recant, and would surely have done so; but God's plan was contrary to that which he had in his mind. When he arrived in San Francisco, his brother took him for his assistant at Mr. N. P. Cole's family; while he was there he hated his brother, and even made many threats to kill him, and said that he did not want a Christian brother. About nine months after his arrival, he began to go to school for a few months. I then got him a place to work at the new primary department at the Golden Gate Academy. He then came to our evening school in Oakland. Two weeks ago he said this to me: 'I was so sorry because I used to hate my brother and wanted to kill him. I now love the same Jesus as my brother loves. I am willing to serve the same Saviour he has been serving. I wanted to be one of the members of your Christian Association.' I was then so astonished and so overjoyed to hear of his conversion, and at once welcome him as a new brother of our Congregational Association of Christian Chinese."

Rev. Mr. Pond reports conversions, with an instance of persecution:

"Our work has moved on with increasing interest. On the 4th inst. three of our pupils who for six months or more have given evidence of conversion, were baptized and received to Bethany church. One other was to have been received, but his older brother having learned of it, and finding that neither persuasions nor threats would deter him, bound him and locked him up, till the hour was past. The dear boy sent word that he had 'Christ in his heart, all the same.' None of these things move him, and we hope that before next communion, his brother may somehow be persuaded to withdraw his opposition. During March four conversions were reported. Several have already cheered our hearts in the present month. God's Spirit reveals himself so constantly working with us, that it is impossible not to become enthusiastic and joyful."

Gee Gam furnishes some interesting experiences as given by Chinese converts:

"Ten of our Oakland scholars have decided to serve Christ and have united with our Christian Association during the revival meeting there.

"Some of these boys have been attending our schools and meetings a year and a half, some a year, some six months and some three months, but they had not decided to give up everything to follow Christ until week before last.

"Most all of them were formerly scorners of Christianity. Last Saturday we held a meeting by ourselves, and most all of them told their experiences. One of them said 'a year ago, I was not only a gambler, but also an enemy of Christ and of those who believe in His name. I used to tell people not to attend these meetings nor the schools. I was one of those who came to argue with you Christians last year at the time when you held that great argument. I was then carrying a pistol and dagger, and I was angry enough to kill all of you with them; but I was sorry afterward and my conscience troubled me ever since for accusing you without any cause.' Then he expressed his thanks to the friends who led him to our school and thanked God for his new heart.

"Another has been believing in Jesus for some months, and has given up every thing to serve Christ except one thing, and that was the worship of ancestors; for he said that he was the only child of his mother, and it would surely break her heart if she knew that he had forsaken the worship of his forefathers, and he also said that it would be dishonorable to give it up. But this stumbling-block was finally removed by the Holy Spirit of God and he is now a sincere Christian. Another was whipped by his brother because he believes in the Lord Jesus and he has joined our Christian Association."

THE INDIANS.

The favorable reports of labors among the Indians have already been alluded to. We present some details, showing that wherever efficient labor has been performed among them, whether directed towards the improvement of their physical condition, their education, or their spiritual life, success has attended it. The friends of the Indian have every reason to be encouraged in the continuance of labor in their behalf.

RED LAKE AGENCY, MINNESOTA.

R. M. Pratt, Agent.

Rev. Francis Spees and Wife, Missionaries.

Isabelle L. Allen, Teacher.

The Agent at Red Lake reports that the Indians are all very friendly, and appear to be well satisfied with what is being done and proposed to be done for them. Rev. Francis Spees still continues his labors as pastor of the little church, and general missionary. The church now numbers seventeen, and Mr. Spees writes encouragingly of the progress they are making in the Divine life. The church building, greatly to the disappointment of the people, is still delayed. The Association has not been able to supply the funds to go on with the work. A day school with some thirty-five pupils has been maintained.

Agent Pratt says:

"There seems to be a growing desire for larger and better farms, and many are doing well, and deserve credit for their industry and perseverance in clearing up new land to enlarge their gardens, the more so, as I have told them I have no funds to pay them for such labor, but that their remuneration would come from the crops raised. I have endeavored to impress upon them the necessity of their helping themselves."

Rev. Mr. Spees writes:

"Our Sabbath exercises consist of a preaching service in the Chippewa language in the forenoon, a Bible study in the afternoon, conducted by the Agent, and an evening service led by Dr. Allen, who reads a sermon. We have a Wednesday evening prayer-meeting, and a prayer and conference meeting preparatory to the Communion. Our church members are for the most part making progress in the Divine life. I am sometimes amused at the child-like simplicity of faith, just budding into existence. For instance, last evening Little Deer came to our prayer-meeting, and after meeting, he said: 'My wife and I were off cutting poles to hang our corn on, and as we have no team, we had to back them home. I had six poles and she four. We became very tired and stopped to rest. I proposed that we have a season of prayer, so I knelt and prayed, and to my surprise, my load was very much lighter the rest of the way home.'

"There has not been a drunken Indian at Red Lake since last payment, to my knowledge. Several Indian women, members of our church, yesterday expressed a joy that they had started in this good way, and said that they 'remember God every day.' One of the men who has been sick lately, said to me one Sabbath when I had been reading to him from the Testament. 'I am not afraid to die. Sometimes I almost wish to go, there is so much of trouble in this world.' Yesterday a Cass Lake woman, who is a sister of the old Christian Indian Baptist, sent to me an urgent request to come and tell her all about the religion that her brother had received, saying, 'I want to know all about it too. I am sick; I may not live a great while, and I am in earnest to hear about the right way.' God will bring hundreds of these people to himself, if we enter upon the work as though we mean to succeed. The work must go forward; it will go forward!"

LAKE SUPERIOR AGENCY, WISCONSIN.

Dr. I. L. Mahan, Agent.

This Agency is composed of seven different reserves, separated by hundreds of miles. The headquarters have been moved from Bayfield to Red Cliff that the Agent may superintend more directly the work of the Indians at this place. Besides the Odanah Mission School, in charge of the Presbyterians, there have been five day schools taught during the year, with six teachers and two hundred and seventeen pupils. Two night schools with three teachers and forty-seven pupils were maintained during the winter months. The Agent has sent us a report full of good things, showing the readiness of the Indians to work, and their desire to make themselves homes. We can only make brief extracts:

"Bad River Bands.—These have steadily advanced in all steps towards civilization, notwithstanding many drawbacks, and the determined stand taken by most of the chiefs against self-advancement and support. The chiefs have rendered no assistance whatever, in fact they have discouraged the young men upon all occasions, even requesting the Agent to withdraw the employees, etc. The young men have kept steadily onward, taking the advice of, and frequently consulting with, the Agent, farmer, teacher and missionaries. The result is an increased demand for horses, cattle, and the comforts of a home. The Agent's recommendation that allotments of eighty acres of land be made to those prepared to receive patents was granted, and allotments to one hundred and sixty-one individuals were made, and the boundary lines surveyed and blazed; the chiefs took decided steps against the movement, but the young men came forward, gave evidence of having made improvements, and received their certificates.

"The product of Indian labor on this reserve for the last twelve months is estimated to be over $100 for each man, woman and child on the reserve. This is the result of Indian labor as practiced by the few who work. What might it not be if all did what they could! Twelve Indians have learned to read during the year, and seven have learned trades. Eighteen additions have been made to the little church of the Presbyterian mission, fifteen during the last six months. This is but a partial result of the year's operations, but does it not look well? Does it not speak in thundering tones that will not be mistaken, in favor of carrying the Bible in one hand, and Christian civilization labor in the other, while the prayers and labors of a few devoted missionaries heat the iron, and strike while it is hot?

"Red Cliff Bands.—They have generally supported themselves and families. They work as white people, and the majority have taken a noble stand for self-support. The Agent moved on this reserve to thoroughly test the question what can be done with it. . . . The Indians worked manfully; about four times the usual amount was planted. The season has been unusually dry (no rain for the six weeks ending Aug. 5th), the potato bugs have been destructive in the extreme, saying nothing of the cut and other worms; and yet the estimated crop for this year will be four thousand bushels of potatoes, fifty bushels of turnips, fifty bushels of beans, twenty-five bushels of peas, ten bushels of onions, ten tons of hay cut, twenty-five tons of sugar harvested. They have built fifteen boats and over three miles of fence, cut fifty-two thousand staves, and made one thousand fish barrels. They have caught over one hundred and fifty tons of fish, fifty tons being caught during the cold winter months, and sold to parties for shipment South and West. Over half of these Indians have been engaged outside of the reserve in logging camps, cutting wood and other civilized occupations. Many of them have accumulated property in houses and lots, horses, cattle, etc., and have given the best of evidence that they are now ready for citizenship.

"Fon Du Lac Bands.—I visited the sugar camps where I found men, women and children just as active in their several assigned duties, as one would wish to see in a well-regulated manufactory. Each one had his part to perform, and he did it with a will, not slow or lazy, as some would have us think, but with a spirit and determination to 'make sugar while the sap is down,' worthy of imitation by some who profess a greater civilization. While on the reserve, I inspected a wagon road cut out this winter by the Indians; it is seven miles long, running from their village to the 'Northern Pacific Junction.' I walked over it, and a better winter road cannot be found in the Northwest. This they did at their own expense, that is, doing the work and boarding themselves, and all for the privilege of having a civilized way of getting to town with potatoes, sugar, etc. This visit, and what I witnessed during it, has caused me to think more favorably of Indian civilization than ever, especially as it relates to the Fon Du Lac Bands.

"Lac Court D' Oreilles Bands.—These Indians certainly deserve attention from the Government. They are willing to work, and have some good farming lands. I know of no better material for a philanthropic and benevolent Government to work upon. It has been estimated that three hundred and sixty-four have been brought directly under the civilizing influence of the farmer and teacher, and that eighty families are now actually engaged in agricultural pursuits. It is very plain to be seen that the last two month's work has given new life to Indian civilization on this reserve. More care has been taken of their places. They have worked harder and seem more contented than ever before. We have had many more calls for houses, stoves, and household furniture than ever before, and all from the fact that the Indians have a claim upon a local habitation. I think I have never met a people who so universally appreciate a home as my Indians do. Now if they love their rude and miserably uncomfortable lodges, how much more will they love and appreciate a comfortable house with such home comforts as can be procured at small expense! This, in my opinion, is one of the chief ways of reaching the Indian heart, and causing him to turn from his roving life.

"The fires of midsummer that swept over the Northwest, extended to their Reservation, and fears were entertained that their houses on the Lake shore would be burned. The flames were stayed, however, through the combined efforts of every man, woman and child that could lift a hand. The fires were fought for two weeks, during which time many gardens were entirely destroyed. Potatoes just large enough to eat were scorched and burned till their growth was entirely destroyed. It being too late to replant, many will be entirely without them during the coming winter. They have had an unusually good year in sugar and rice, perhaps twice the quantity of those articles having been harvested this year. Those having gardens near the Lake shore have unusually good ones. I never ate better potatoes anywhere than these Indians furnished me on this visit. The lots and gardens have been fenced with the lumber I sent them last year. I observed neatness and cleanliness where two years ago I found filth and vermin. Many who wore long hair have abandoned this superstitious custom, and now wear their hair short. I am satisfied the Indians are trying to do the best that they can, under the circumstances, to make their homes comfortable. They expected nothing from the Department this year, and when informed of the object of my visit, and that the Government was mindful of their condition and wants, their joy and happiness were unbounded."

GREEN BAY AGENCY, WISCONSIN.

Jos. C. Bridgman, Agent.

J. W. Stryker, Mrs. H. E. Stryker, Teachers.

W. W. Wheeler, Farmer.

This Agency includes Oneidas, Stockbridge-Munsees and Menomonees. One hundred and thirty-eight of the Stockbridge Indians last November enrolled themselves as desirous of becoming citizens, under the Act of Congress of Feb. 6th, 1871, were paid their per capita share of the tribal funds, severed their tribal relation, and became true and loyal citizens of the United States. They are reported as in nearly every instance doing well. Both the Agent and the Farmer write very favorably of the progress of these Indians in education, and in agricultural and home-life.

The Agent in his annual report, says:

"We can see a marked improvement in our scholars the past year. The young men and women who have attended our evening schools manifest an encouraging desire to learn. Our missionary work presents some encouraging aspects. We have received about twenty-five into church membership during the year. Sabbath-school, before morning service is well attended. We think there is some improvement in the manners and habits of the people; they dress better and have more self-respect. In agriculture we see a decided advance; more acres of grain are planted, and better cultivated; more than double, if not three times the quantity of potatoes raised in former years, will be raised this year. The people are more industrious, and an advance towards a higher state of civilization is perceptible. Intemperance is the great curse of this tribe—and it is to be regretted that there is not a law whereby an Indian found under the influence of liquor, could be arrested and confined until he would tell where the liquor was obtained. This plan would effectually stop the wicked traffic. The head men of this tribe have repeatedly expressed the desire that a boarding-school might be established among them.

"The Menomonees are making obvious improvement in their habits and homes; they are building good houses, tilling their farms with commendable industry, and, as a general thing, are an honest people, quiet, well-disposed, and willing to work.

"About one half of this tribe are Catholics, and the remainder are Pagans, who worship the great spirit, in medicine dances, feasts, etc. A hopeful feature is, that having interested myself in their welfare, and assured them of my respect for their desire to worship the Good Father of us all, and expressed, at the same time the wish that they would let me tell them of God, as we believe in him, they promise us a hearing. In connection with the farmer, whose whole heart goes out in earnest prayer to lift up these darkened ones, and an interpreter, we hope to present to them Jesus and His wonderful love, praying that God will glorify Himself in our trying to win souls to Him."

The Farmer adds encouraging statements:

"It is the universal testimony of the white people of the county who knew this tribe twenty-five years ago, that they have made remarkable improvement within that time. Nearly every family lives in a tolerably comfortable log or frame house, and has its little farm cleared up, varying from one to forty acres, and increasing every year. They take pride in making their houses look smooth and neat. There are about twenty yoke of oxen on the reservation, owned by individuals, and a great many steers, besides many pony teams.

"Within a few years there has been a great work done in the way of temperance reform, so that I doubt whether a more temperate community of its size can be found in the State than this. This is partly, no doubt, but only partly, because it has been made dangerous for white men to sell whiskey to the Indians. On the whole, one can but feel, on going over the reservation, and seeing their farms cleared and cultivated, good fences taking the place of brush ones, their neat and substantial frame and log houses, their good stoves and beds and chairs, and even sewing machines, their children as a general thing well clothed and going to school, that certainly the friend of the Indian has no occasion for discouragement, but many incentives to labor on in hope."

FORT BERTHOLD AGENCY, DAKOTA.

We copy from the report of the Agent:

"The past year at the Fort Berthold Agency has been one of trial for the Agent and employees, but of prosperity and encouraging progress for the Indians. The action of Congress reducing the number and salaries of employees after July 1st, 1874, resulted in the loss of some of the most valuable assistants, and seriously crippled the work. We are sorry to state that the reduction of employees and salaries, together with the accidental burning of a large part of the agency buildings on the night of Oct. 12th, 1874, necessitated the discontinuance of the school; hence we can make no report of progress in school work.

"The Indians are all Pagan, and most of them still seek their religious consolation in the usual 'medicine' ceremonies peculiar to the American Indians. It is evident, however, that as they become civilized, and prosper materially, they are losing confidence in the 'medicine dance;' and it seems highly desirable that the doctrines and claims of Christianity be presented to them soon, so that their unsettling beliefs may be replaced by the true religion.

"The work of 'subsistence and civilization' has been the absorbing study and effort of the year, and the results are quite satisfactory. While these people have not had an abundance of food, but have clamored for more, they have not actually suffered from hunger; and they are now in the most healthy and thrifty condition that they have enjoyed for many years. This condition is due to the fact that the Department sent them last fall an unusual quantity of provisions; and, further, to the fact that many of them have taken hold of work, and are raising more crops, and in various ways earning more money than heretofore.

"During the year I have issued them forty-three wagons and thirty-one carts, with harness, and they are thereby enabled to aid themselves greatly. During last winter they cut and banked, for steamboats, nearly one thousand cords of wood, for which they received $4 per cord. This summer they have made and sold to the agency over one hundred tons of hay at $12 per ton. They are now busily engaged in mining coal for winter fuel and in harvesting their corn and potatoes. They have planted about five hundred acres of corn and twenty-five acres of potatoes. The yield of each will be about the average crop; and prospects for the coming winter are quite bright.

"During the year I have issued nineteen cows to such families as promise, and seem determined to take good care of them. Quite a number of the men have learned to milk, and are very proud of their cows. Most of them are raising the calves, with the intention of securing a herd from which, in the future, to provide their own beef.

"The distribution of labor between the sexes is steadily becoming more just and satisfactory. They are steadily improving their dwellings and house furniture. Sickness and disease are decreasing. Individual self-respect and pride are growing. The power of the chief is diminishing, and the idea of individual property and wealth is finding welcome lodgment in their minds. It is still a good ways from the average white man down to the average Arickaree; but I consider civilization, to the point of self-support, by agriculture and stock-raising, possible within a few years, if the present policy is persistently and carefully pursued toward them."

SISSETON AGENCY, DAKOTA.

Rev. M. N. Adams, J. G. Hamilton, Agents.

On this reservation there are six Presbyterian churches with four hundred and seventeen members, worshiping in four churches, and five native pastors, who minister to these churches, and several outposts. These are under the care of the A. B. C. F. M. Four schools have been taught in as many different districts, besides one Manual Labor Boarding-School, and these are sustained by Government, and the teachers selected by the Agent.

Rev. Mr. Adams resigned his commission as Agent the 1st of May, and J. G. Hamilton was appointed to succeed him.

Mr. Adams writes:

"There are two parties here. One is the Christian element, the enlightened and progressive men and women, who have renounced paganism, polygamy, war, feasting and dancing, gambling and horse-racing, vagrancy and plundering, and who have accepted the Gospel of Christ and entered upon a new life. They are deeply interested in the education of their children, and desire the advancement of all their people in their intellectual, social, moral and religious interests, and they earnestly and unitedly ask the sympathy of all Christians, and the aid and protection of the United States Government in their struggles for life and salvation.

"The other is the old pagan party, under the dominion of old chiefs, old warriors in heart, polygamists and heathenish in their practices—feasting, dancing, drumming and gambling, they are opposed to all progress of their people. They are unreconciled to all laws, order and authority restraining, or in any way contravening, their customs and habits. They are always complaining of and revolting against the Government, its officers and agents, however generous, kind, faithful and true to them. This party lies athwart the road to progress, and promptly and unitedly opposes all attempts of the more enlightened and Christian portion of that people to advance in true civilization. They find sympathy and help from squaw-men, old traders, border miscreants, all that class of lawless and corrupt men who throng and loiter around about those Indian reservations, like foul birds in view of the fallen carcass. That there should be friction between these two parties is not strange. It is but the development of the old leaven in the wonder-working of the Gospel of Christ, "the power of God to salvation" among that Dakota people. May the Lord God rebuke the wrong, maintain the right, and save that people, the objects of His eternal love, and of the faithful labors of his own servants."

J. G. Hamilton writes:

"The records of this Agency for the months of July and August show an unusually large amount of work done both by employees and Indians.

The farmer has worked energetically and with marked success, to secure a sufficient quantity of hay to carry the stock on the Reservation through the winter, and prevent the recurrence of last winter's experience, viz: the starving to death of numbers of oxen. In addition to this the harvesting and stacking of grain has gone forward, and though two weeks of continuous rain have damaged the grain somewhat, yet the amount that is good is large. The appearance of grasshoppers during the harvesting season excited considerable alarm among the Indians, but by cutting the grain fields where they alighted, and burning the prairie, and stubble, we succeeded in driving them away without their doing any particular damage. Whether they deposited eggs during their stay here is not yet known.

"The smith reports a busy month in his line of repairs, &c. The carpenter has had his time taken up with the making of doors, and framing of houses, together with keeping up repairs of wagons and other implements belonging to the Indians.

"So far as working is concerned, the Indians during the present summer have done exceedingly well, and the summary of the year's work will show considerable advancement made in agricultural pursuits."

SKOKOMISH AGENCY, WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Edwin Eells, Agent.

Rev. Myron Eells, Missionary.

For six months this year, the Association has sustained a missionary at this Agency, Rev. Myron Eells.

He writes under date of Sept 7, 1875:

"The church was organized June 23, 1874, and now numbers seventeen. The average attendance at Sabbath-school has been eighty, at prayer-meeting twenty-two, at public worship eighty-five. Seventy-three families are under pastoral care. I have been to one or other of the three logging camps each week in company with our interpreter, and have held meetings with the Indians, in which they talk and sing, and of late some have been willing to pray, repeating the words, sentence by sentence, after us. They are like children in this respect, for although they say they pray in their hearts to God, and I think some of them to be Christians, they have to be taught to pray aloud. I taught them some time ago to ask a blessing before eating, and some of them seem quite pleased with it."

At a later date he adds:

"The past month in company with the Agent and the interpreter, I have spent in a trip among the Clallam Indians, who live from thirty to a hundred and fifty miles from here. They belong to the reservation, but are allowed by treaty to live off from it, if they behave themselves, and they much prefer it, as it is the land of their fathers. A little more than a year ago, the Head Chief, Lord Jim, in connection with the larger band of the tribe, bought two hundred and ten acres of land. This land has been divided among those who paid for it, so as to give each a water front. They have begun to clear the land, which is all heavily timbered, and this year have some very good gardens. Having spent nearly all their money for the land, their houses were necessarily very poor, but this year, nearly all have built better ones, which are on one straight street, and some of which are very little different from good American ones.

"They are also anxious for Christian instruction. I think that the moral influence of Christian work among the Indians surrounding them, and their own observations of the effect of intemperance and other evils, have been the means of awakening this desire. They know that there is a Sabbath and Christian instruction at the other reservations surrounding them, and they feel that they are being left behind in the Indian march towards civilization and Christianity. However, as they will not come to the reservation to live, and as no teacher is sent among them, they realize that they must help themselves, and they are trying to do so. About six months ago, their chief with a few others, came to the reservation, and in connection with other business, asked for religious instruction. They were then, they said, accustomed to assemble on the Sabbath, and talk over things as best they knew how. Three months after, about fifty of them, including a number of the tribe from other places came again, and were very anxious to learn some of our Indian religious songs, so that they might sing them on the Sabbath. They did learn a few. On our trip down, I met their chief twenty-five miles this side of his home, and he told me they were accustomed to get together every Sabbath and sing them. About six miles this side, I spent a night at another camp of the same tribe, and was told that the chief, with a few others had come there one Sabbath to sing with them. On arriving at their home, I found them ready to stop work and come to church whenever I could hold service. They are accustomed to use the best house they have for church, having benches, and using a large hand bell to call the people together. On the first Sabbath, about twenty-five others came from within twenty-five miles, and before the second, fifty more had come from within forty miles. They were very attentive. Some of the time we talked in Chinook, a language which the younger Indians of all the tribe understood, and sometimes it was translated into Clallam; but when we spoke in Chinook alone, they would generally remain after service, and talk it over among themselves, so that the old ones should understand what had been said. They are most anxious to learn to sing, that being a peculiarity of the tribe, and I taught them more of our Indian songs. When I spoke to them of the reason of Christ's death, they seemed to be more attentive than when I addressed them on other subjects. I left a number of pictures among them, illustrations of Bible scenes, which they will often look at, and talk about, on the Sabbath.

"About thirty of them took the temperance pledge; forty more of them did so during their visit here three months ago, and about fifty others had previously done so. Among this portion of the tribe, I can learn of but little drinking. Another portion who live near the milling places drink much more. At the last term of court held in their district, eight persons were convicted of selling liquor to them, one of whom retaliated by burning seven Indian houses at Point Discovery, including six or eight hundred dollars worth of property. Our church has a small fund for sick and poor Indians, which was immediately handed over to those suffering the most."

The Agent in his annual report says that the Indians have generally done well, have worked industriously, been steady and sober, attended church regularly, and have been tractable and obedient.

Two new obstacles have arisen. The Indians are no longer allowed to cut the timber of their Reservation; and the language of the statute regarding the sale of liquor to the Indians is so ambiguous that some judges are of the opinion that it does not affect the Indians living off the Reservation.

"Notwithstanding the above, our Indians have done well. The school has been full, average attendance twenty, all the appropriation can support. The scholars have made as much progress as the same average class of white children; they are most of them small, learning to read, write and spell, and the rudiments of arithmetic and geography.

"About two hundred Indians have been living on the reservation the past year. The old men fish and clear land, make canoes, etc. The young men work at logging, cutting wood, or any other labor they can obtain, and are good laborers if any suitable employment is found for them. Their manner of living is much improved. They cook on stoves generally, eat on tables, sitting on chairs, with plates, knives and forks. They dress as white people, and are to a great degree civilized.

"We find the Indians morally weak, easily influenced for good or evil, but not able to withstand much temptation.

"It is now nearly four years since the first steps were taken which resulted in my coming to this place. Upon looking back and reviewing the past, I find much cause for gratitude that the Great Author of all has seen fit to grant so much favor to our efforts here. Where then was a squalid, destitute handful of discouraged Indians, now are triple the number, and all comfortable and apparently contented and happy. The gain that is apparent is so much greater than my most sanguine expectations, that I feel that there is much to encourage us in making future efforts.

"Among the most important of their interests which needs attention, is the provision for their religious instruction. During the first two years of my being here, the apparent and probable future results of missionary work seemed to me so small that I felt it would not warrant me to ask for the support of a missionary here, but the strides they have taken during the last eighteen months have led me to change my opinion. During the year 1873, from June 1st to December 31st, our attendance at Sabbath-school was seventy. During the year 1874, from April 15th till December 31st, the attendance has averaged eighty. These numbers I have from actual count: they show the advance we are making."

THE JAMAICA MISSION.

The Executive Committee have steadily kept in view the question of making this mission self-supporting, or of transferring it to some other organization. Both the missionaries and the churches recognize the importance of action in one or other of these directions. The church at Eliot has already passed under the care of the Presbyterian body in the Island. A missionary meeting was held Aug. 2d, at which the other five churches were represented. This subject was fully discussed. The idea of becoming self-supporting was the most popular one. The five churches prefer to continue in association under the name of the American Mission, seeking the fostering care of the A. M. A., and relying on Divine aid to sustain the cause of God among themselves, and otherwise promote the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom. The assistance of the Association in times past was gratefully acknowledged, and the hope was expressed that the partial withdrawal of support, although, for the present, deeply felt, might be turned to good account in stirring up the churches to nobler efforts for self-support.

It will be seen that the churches have an aggregate of 547 members, and an attendance of 1,393 worshippers. The increased membership during the year has been on profession of faith 49, an average addition of 16 to each ordained missionary. Eleven have united by letter from other churches, making the total additions 60.

The Schools have received £263-13s. from Government. The total number of pupils has been 791 and the average attendance 553.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson resigned their connection with the mission in June last, and are now in this country. Mr Venning is practically laid aside by infirm health. He has been connected with the mission almost from its organization. He may continue to have an oversight of the church at Chesterfield, (Mr. McLaughlin, the teacher of the school, having the principal care,) but he will be able to render little, if any actual labor. Rev. John Thompson is, therefore, the only remaining missionary in active service. He will be assisted by native teachers, some of whom, it is expected, will be ordained during the year, and all of whom will receive their support from the Island.

August 24th, Mr. Thompson writes:—

"I have been much engaged in every part of this mission field, superintending some of the largest and most profitable meetings I have ever known in this land. That at Chesterfield on Lord's day, the 15th inst., was a meeting of unusual interest and importance; when it was my privilege to give the right hand of fellowship, as our custom is, to fifteen persons, who united with that church on profession."

The Jamaica friends of our mission express a good deal of apprehension at the withdrawal of so large a part of our aid. Hon. John Savage, who has ever taken a deep interest in the prosperity of the mission, alluding to the fact that the responsibility of directing these churches will devolve wholly upon the Rev. Mr. Thompson, says, "Fortunately you have connected with your mission a few excellent native young men, who may become valuable assistants to Mr. Thompson." Naming them, and characterizing them as possessing abilities considerably above the average, and as sincere, humble-minded and devoted workers, he expressses the hope that they will become useful and acceptable ministers of the Gospel, to whom the pastoral care of some of the stations may be safely trusted. He adds: "This view of the work of the mission field in Jamaica that contemplates a more extensive use of native agency is fully in accord with the present views of all the religious societies having missions there."

MENDI MISSION, WEST AFRICA.

Stations—Good Hope on Sherbro Island and Avery.
Missionaries—Rev. J. K. Billheimer, Rev. G. P. Claflin, Rev. Barnabas Root, Daniel W. Burton, Robert Kirk, Mrs. Billheimer, Mrs. Claflin, Mrs. M. M. Mair.
Native Assistant at Avery—Samuel Goodman.
Teachers—Elias Tucker, Mrs. Goodman, and other native helpers.

Besides the above named stations, there are several places in neighboring towns in which missionary services are held with more or less regularity, by persons from the mission.

Rev. J. K. Billheimer has been absent from the mission during most of the year. He arrived in New York in January, and is now on his return to Africa. Mrs. Billheimer will remain in the United States until Spring. Mr. and Mrs. Claflin left the mission in February on their return to this country. They have since resigned their connection with the mission. Mrs. Mair has left the mission and returned to her home in Scotland, after many years of faithful and successful labor.

Mr. Root is a native of Africa. He was received into the mission November 1st, 1854, being then about six years of age. With a slight interval, which he spent in this country, he continued in the mission school until early in 1863, when he came again to the United States to study for the ministry. He graduated with honor at Knox College, Galesburg, Ill. in 1870, and from the Congregational Theological Seminary in Chicago in 1873; and engaged for a time in missionary work among the Freedmen of the South. November 5th 1874, at a council called by the Broadway Tabernacle Church, New York, he was examined with the view to his ordination as a missionary to his native land, and was unanimously approved. The ordination exercises took place in the Broadway Tabernacle, November 8th. Rev. Wm. M. Taylor, D. D. preached the sermon from the text, Mark 5 : 19, "Go home to thy friends and tell them how great things the Lord has done to thee, and hath had compassion on thee." Referring to the examination, he said, "I never heard a candidate acquit himself more creditably."

Mr. Burton and Mr. Root sailed from New York, for the mission, November 14th by way of England, where they were joined by Mr. Robert Kirk. They landed in Africa, January 5th, 1875.

There has been no unusual religious interest at the mission during the year. The meetings have been reported as well sustained and the church as being in a healthy condition. A number of persons are reported to have shown a change of life. Invitations continue to flow in from neighboring towns, asking for missionary visitation and service, which the native assistants and church members endeavor to supply, some of them making great sacrifice to do so. We are more than ever convinced that the appeals for missionary labor coming from the people in this part of Africa can only be met by sending forth Christian missionaries and teachers of their own race, educated in this country, who shall go forth prepared intellectually and spiritually to preach the Gospel, establish schools for training missionaries and teachers, and diffuse the blessings of Christian industries and Christian civilizations. There are under training in our Southern institutions young Christians of both sexes, whose hearts, we believe, are devoted to this work, some of whom, we hope, may be prepared to go out before the close of the present year. It must, however, be borne in mind that this field eminently demands workmen that need not to be ashamed. To plant a Gospel of love where hatred and wars have been stimulated by the cupidity of civilized nations, to secure the blessings of Christian industry and Christian civilization in a land cursed by slavery and the slave-trade, to win a degraded people, cursed by these influences to the purity and faith of the Gospel, is a work demanding a master mind and full preparation, and it will not be surprising if but few of those who have so recently come out from the house of bondage shall be speedily prepared for it. Still the providences of God seem more clearly than ever to indicate that upon the colored people thus trained and prepared must we ultimately depend for the missionary laborers of Western and Central Africa.

THE UNFAILING VIRTUE.

"Charity (or Christian love) never faileth."—1 Cor. 13: 8.

FATHERS AND BRETHREN:

As your preacher understands his appointment, it is his duty now to open the word of God for some truth, by the enforcement of which this Christian gathering may be animated in its deliberations. Leaving to some the details of business; to others, the news of the Missions; to others, the plans for the future; to others, appeals upon special aspects of our work, let the duty of the hour be met by a call on your attention to a thought from God,—a thought embodying the principle which underlies all His own undertakings, and which must underlie ours if we are to be workers together with Him. The thought selected is one of Love, of Christian Love.

The particular aspect of it to which I call attention, is found in the First Epistle to the Corinthians, XIII chapter, 8th verse, CHARITY, OR CHRISTIAN LOVE, NEVER FAILETH. And invoking the spirit of the theme to be in both speaker and hearer, I proceed to introduce this particular thought of love as the inspired writer has introduced it into the New Testament. In the course of certain instructions for the attainment of spiritual gifts, the Apostle shows his readers "a more excellent way;" that is, he sets before them the one attainment which is above all others, and possessing which any Christian may become eminent in grace.

Thus pre-eminence is given to love. Faith he does not slight—we could not expect the Apostle Paul to do that—nor hope, but love is crowned the chief. Indeed, not only may Paul be said to crown this Christian grace, but to sing its coronation hymn, for the chapter is an anthem to love, than which nothing can be more appropriate, truthful and beautiful. Here in words that at once charm and impress, he shows that love alone can inspire and purify. Love is the sum of virtue. It fills up the law. The present finds it seeking not its own: the past employs it covering all things: the future enjoys it hoping all things. It never fails. Prophecy, tongues, knowledge itself may fail, but love faileth never, neither in this world, neither in the world to come. Nor was this mere sentiment in a letter, but the very life and soul of the writer's conduct towards his correspondents. Among them, Paul did not behave himself unseemly; sought not his own; was not easily provoked; thought no evil; bore all things; believed all things; hoped all things; endured all things; emphatically, his charity did not fail.

The Apostle, however, is not relating his experience, but describing a virtue for others to practice. Hence, in justice to the text, we must take it in its intent, and examine and enforce it as descriptive of that Christian possession of all others to be earnestly desired. Giving a summary of its features, the sacred writer says, It never faileth.

Let me present a few considerations which may substantiate the Apostle's judgment. In other form, let me give a few answers to the question, "Wherein is love an unfailing virtue?"

I. In the first place, when called upon, love is unfailing in its responses. When asked it never fails to answer like itself,—in love. And this because from its nature it intends to bless. Love is an emotion of good-will, that is, a movement out to bless. If there is a joy to heighten or a woe to lighten, love beats joyously or sadly according to its opportunity. If love can do nothing to carry out its will, it never fails to express regret at that, and regret in the circumstances never fails to satisfy.

It is interesting to watch this unfailing grace at its work. Look at a company of people considering a misfortune,—say a street accident. One is a critic and he reviews the case; another is a philosopher and he explains it; a third is a busybody and he eyes it for capital in tale-bearing; a fourth is a fault-finder and he is all condemnation; the lover of man, forgetful of everything but the ruin and a remedy, is deep in a plan for instant relief. As sure as love is, it comes to the rescue. If it is not, of course there is no effort.

Sometimes, it is supposed, that there may be a genuine love which does not show itself even when there is appeal and opportunity. The thing is naturally impossible; for the essence of love is good-willing (bene volens.) How can there be a still willingness; indeed the words, "still will" are as contradictory as "white black," or "liquid frost." True, there may be a want of felicitous modes of expression, but if love is in a heart there must be some form of willing good, some outgoing of affection towards its object. True, again, one may desire to hide the strength of emotion, but the very effort to hide discloses possession in the lover. In this connection, what can be finer than Shakespeare's delineation of a daughter's hidden yet moving love? See King Lear for the picture. After her faithless sisters had exhausted language in telling of their affection, Cordelia exclaims:

"What shall Cordelia do,
Love and be silent; * * *
* * * * * * *
And yet not so, since I am sure
My love's more richer than my tongue."

And so nothing she says, but everything she does, till her broken-hearted father expires with her devoted body in his arms. Here was love silent as to speech, yet active as life, and strong as death. The difference between Cordelia's love and that of her sisters was shown in her constancy of response to her aged father's need, and their failure to respond even once. The conclusion is irresistible, love they had none, for response they had none. In fact, we always so conclude that a love which fails to put in an appearance when called, has no standing among the virtues,—it is outlawed. This doctrine of genuine love never failing in response, makes clear to us how the divine beneficence is so easily moved. God is love, hence He lives but to respond to dependent and appealing beings. When overpowered by the divine greatness and led to cry: "Lord, what is man that thou art mindful of him," we get instant relief by the counter exclamation, "My God, thou art all love." For God would sooner cease to be, than fail to respond to the humblest appeal. He hears the raven's cry, certainly not the most amiable of birds, but because it has a "cry," He heareth it. And this by an illustrious necessity of His nature, for as sure as He doth live as love, He doth live the Hearer of Prayer, since love's answer "never faileth."

II. Again, this Christian virtue never fails by an untimely exercise; it is never out of fashion; never inopportune; no infant is too young to be loved, no grandsire too old. Over every other grace it has this advantage of timeliness. We may hope when there is no rational ground of hope, owing to a want of ripeness in the time. We may trust out of a time of trust, and fail. But the untimely hour for Christian charity can never come.

When the American Missionary Association began its work, it encountered the usual discouragements of missionary efforts. "The attempt was premature." "Stay until certain political changes occur." "Try some civilizing appliances first, then send the gospel." There was certainly a faintness of faith in its success, even among the good. But there was an irrepressible conflict of love in many Christian hearts, and not waiting till the times would seem propitious, they made the time there was propitious. With a church hesitating in its faith behind them, and a world ridiculing their hope around them, and a foe opposing their efforts before them, but with a mighty love within them they began with the glad tidings to every creature. They heard the advice to let ploughs, and mills, and school books, prepare for the gospel; but these pioneers took the Master's plan and went, first of all, into the densest darkness with the brightest light. Their faith was stigmatized as fanatical, their hope ridiculed as maniacal, but to the credit of human nature, their love for the soul was let alone. While the process of their failure was prophetically elaborated with the skill of a perfect unbelief, their love in the effort was sacred even to the scoffer. No time was a poor time for that. And to this unfailing and infallible movement to bless, and such as it, movements that took the world's most inconvenient time to do the world's uncalled for work, are we indebted for those clusters of churches, colleges, and schools, which shine like spiritual constellations in the darker regions of the South. Every missionary church spire, every college cupola, every school house roof, bears this witness heaven-ward, "Christian Love never faileth." Far be it from us to slight the faith that upheld, and the hope that inspired them. But had they not worked, and worked by love, where had the effort been?

And love's victory is as ready with a refutation of its efforts being too late. "They are past help, they are below an average humanity, and cannot be brought up," was the plea of other objectors. But the loving said, "No, it is never too late for the unfailing virtue." And for evidence that they were right, take the conversion of these same objectors to the faith that is born of right. Witness the scores of testimonies from men of mark, who have been present at the latest efforts to educate and refine the free, and have repented (in a certain sense) and confessed, and testified to their mistake.

Perhaps no Christian enterprise has so many and so striking testimonies to its efficiency, especially in those labors where the worldly-wise prophesied failure, as the American Missionary Association. From the beginning at Berea to the latest examinations at Atlanta, see what a change upon the question of a higher education. And as to the evangelization of the colored people, the most unconcerned travellers come North to tell us that but for this Association's churches, and schools, and what radiates from them, they know not what the vast tracts of this missionary field would do for a word of Christ to perishing souls. This witness is true, and confirms our remark that late or early, on the score of untimeliness, love "never faileth."

III. Let it be remarked further, that this character is earned by love's uniform success in attaining its end.

Without exhausting the causes of failure to achieve, the most prominent to human eyes, are opposition from without, weakness within, and a lack of appreciation. It takes no great length of time, nor stretch of thought, to shew, that however frequently these causes of failure prevail over other human efforts, they do not wrest a victory from the love that "seeketh not her own."

Let us see. Opposition does not make love give way. To resist its motions does not extinguish a good will, for outward force does not reach it and in collision with another will the good can never yield. To give way to evil is a sign of evil in the one who yields. Envy, spite, detraction, in a word, ill-will may hinder and defame, but unless the movement out to bless gives up its character, and becomes an emotion of enmity, its very name indicates its unyielding purpose to will the good against all opposition. Love, therefore, remaining love never faileth. Like the front of St. Helena to the sea, is the breast of the loving to the oppositions of the unloving. There they come wave after wave, leaping up to the "hundred fathom rooted rock," but they leap to submerge it may be, yet eventually to divide themselves and fall to either side. Perhaps, they gather and try again, but it is only to meet with like success, meanwhile the breast of the assaulted bares itself to the next attack. And so long as love reigns, so long does the heart, or the kingdom, or the cause containing it, sustain itself in the face of hostility. "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

And, in like manner, success attends its aggressions. Moving, ever moving to bless, by name and by nature, it cannot but hold on its way. If there is any faltering in its progress, it is by the introduction of unloving means to carry out its ends. And the fact that they cause disaster, establishes the position we assume, that to love in its purity there is no such word as fail. Take the history of the Christian church as a fitting instance. When the holy love that is in her Head has swayed her assembled powers what has withstood her? When for a supposed temporary advantage the meaner forces of sword and sceptre have been employed, the result has been disastrous. Indeed, the church's history, external and internal, agrees with personal experience in this, that the letting down of love has been the letting go of power. Hear the church's cries for a revival of her strength. In substance they are;

"More love to Thee, O, Christ!
More love to Thee."

And when the blessing that crowns all other blessing comes, when after a season of tears and penitential prayer she emerges again into her strength, the evidences of her renewal are heard of in the new song of the newly energized as they save the perishing,

"The love of Christ doth us constrain
To seek the wandering souls of men."

Bitterly do these transient experiences read us the lesson that "our other loves have little life, when Christ's not loved the most of all."

Nor is this transient experience only, it is permanent also. Look over Christendom for the denominations of the church militant who are most efficient in blessing the world. The hierarchies have the numbers, the masonry, and the show, but, as they themselves allow, they have not the zeal nor the power of the inner life. The power is with the pure. And it is worthy of remark, on a night like this, that the purer brotherhoods are most highly blessed in aggressive Christian work. The churches most vigorously prosecuting missionary work, are those who contend most earnestly, and pray most fervently, for purity of communion. Their principle is, love in the membership, even if there must be but a little flock. Ten families with this unfailing grace can do what a thousand churches organized on the national or territorial, or stone-and-lime principle, cannot do. On the field of spiritual conflict one loving life chases a thousand, two put ten thousand to flight. In multiplying the bands of the holy, force fails, display fails, machinery fails, numbers fail, measures fail, love never fails. Take Incarnate Love's word for it. "Without me, ye can do nothing; but with me, ye can do all things." When weak in worldly power, then has the church been strong in the Lord and in the power of His might. Glorying in her own infirmity, the power of Christ has rested on her. Verily, there is a power in godliness. He is anything but a keen observer who does not see a divinity in Christ's remark to the few who began to shew love to the loveless world: "Fear not, little flock, it is my Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom."

But here an inquiry may be raised. Seeing that we often look in vain for success, and at times curtail, and suspend, and abandon enterprises which we are conscious of beginning in love, how can we accept this doctrine that it never fails? Yet, in the face of this objection the remark is repeated; Love never fails of attaining its end. It can no more do so, than God can fail, for He is love, and all that He undertakes He accomplishes. Less cannot be affirmed of those who have His spirit and power. The omnipotence of loving effort can be vindicated as follows. Having the best intention possible, love puts the best means possible into action, and works them out in the best possible manner. All the success that the nature of the case allows, all honorable results from the willing and working of good are inevitably secured. To secure an end by fraud or force, is entirely out of love's intentions. To carry a point by the infringement of any interest which love for all should guard, is not and can never be before it as an end. Hence, there is not a failure of love, but a failure because love is strenuously opposed to unloving means to reach its ends. See this Missionary Association ready to do more than it has done; its love is not exhausted, though its means are. Why, then, to carry out the good intentions of this Association do not the Secretaries forge notes and raise the value of bonds? Because they are too loving, too loyal to love's ends. In such an act, they and love would part company, for stealing, even in the name of benevolence, it cannot away with. That would be doing good at too great a cost. In such a case, love would fail if it failed to forbid. And so we well can see, and with reverence be it spoken, the God of love might save a soul at too great an expense. If souls were saved at the sacrifice of the divine law, or freedom of will, or the principles of honor and right, love would disown the salvation, for love's great aim and effort and end is to move out in good will toward every interest under and over heaven. O! glorious is the thought that all that can be done by infinite benevolence will be done, and it will yet be justified of all in saying: "What more could love have done that it has not done?" If any perish after every lawful appliance, it is not by a failure of love, but by its most loving guardianship of interests dearer than the sinner's life. No, men and brethren, love never faileth in carrying out its ends.

Nor, let it be added here, need we fear that a loving effort will ever fall to the ground totally unappreciated. He, who numbers the hairs of our heads, who sees the sparrows fall, who has set the world's eyes upon the widow's mite, He, for one, will see that nothing like himself appears in vain. And were our knowledge exhaustive, we should find that even on the earth the cup of cold water is never given in utter failure.

It is of interest to stumble now and then upon facts illustrative of the certain victory of this virtue, even in those crises of antagonism where it is thought that love has laid down the crown, and force and passion have the throne. That was an instructive incident in our late war, when there came through our lines at Nashville a bale of cotton from the South, marked "The American Bible Society." No note, no bill of lading, nothing to trace it by, accompanied it. At first, it was looked at with suspicion, perhaps it had explosives concealed in it, perhaps it was a device of the enemy for—men knew not what. But, when it was opened, and found to be harmless, the light that made its coming visible soon dawned. It was remembered, that shortly before, there went through our lines at the same point, a shipment of Bibles, the gift of "The American Bible Society" to the Southern troops. Since war at its wildest did not crush out the love of souls from the Northern heart, war at its wildest did not crush out the appreciation of that love in the Southern heart. Some one owned, in that silent gift, that love had not failed.

Did time permit, the unfailing nature of this virtue might be shown from the defeat of its opposite. When did hate prevail? It has stunned, and betrayed, and maligned, and obliterated; but when came it forth a conqueror? Never. He who is boasting of his resistance of a loving advance, who is exulting in crushing out the light, who is intriguing to let malice have its way, who is only waiting for brute force enough to carry out his intentions, is only boasting of, and scheming out, and waiting for his own defeat, for as sure as he is loveless he is weak, and will miserably fail.

IV. I hasten to remark that love's immortality crowns it as the unfailing virtue. After the life that is measured by years is over, love's life faileth never. Other graces may serve their day, and die with their opportunity to irradiate the soul, but there is no such death to Christian love. Much of our knowledge concerning earthly subjects may not be required in a better world. Faith will be lost in sight, that is, the faith we live by here. Hope will rise into fruition, that is the hope in exercise in the world that now is. But love will exist, that is the love we have here,—and with it will remain all that is worth retaining of our mundane life; for take away the willing and doing of good, and the enjoying of what was ours by the good willing of others, and what is in this life's perishable furnishings that we should care for in the future state? But blessed is the thought that what is loving is never to be lost. The memories of childhood, the pure and lasting friendships, the sweet charities of life, the pardons, the prayers, the benefactions, the holy joys that knew us here, are not to perish. They are to be continued and sublimed, and ever more to be in us and with us in our wanderings through eternity. Nor can this immortal virtue ever be superseded. Nothing better can any spirit, embodied or disembodied, do than love; for nothing better does the Spirit Supreme himself. It is the life of God. He that loveth, lives and moves and has his whole moral being in God. He is born of God, and knoweth God. God dwelleth in him, and he in God, and assuredly that life faileth not.

Here be it said, that love demands immortality for its exercise. It already stretches itself beyond our ordinary life, and has even now a hold of God and of all the good, and nothing can put them asunder.

Men have different faiths of God, and varied hopes of God, but they have only one love of God. Love's nature, source and action all bespeak its immortality.

"We must not doubt, or fear, or dread, that love for life was only given,
And that the calm and sainted dead will meet estranged
and cold in Heaven:
O! Love were poor and vain indeed
Based on so harsh and stern a creed.
If in my heart I now could fear, that risen again we should not know,
What was our Life of life when here, the hearts we loved so much below,
I would arise this very day,
And cast so poor a thing away.
But love is no such soulless clod: living perfected it shall rise,
Transfigured in the light of God and giving glory to the skies:
And that which makes this life so sweet,
Shall render Heaven's joy complete."*

These answers to the inquiry, Wherein is love an unfailing virtue, namely, in its unfailing readiness of response; its seasonableness; its uniform success; and its endless life, justify (we humbly trust) this apostolic judgment that of all Christian graces it should be most earnestly desired, because it "never faileth."

To apply what has been spoken, let it be said, that if there is such potency in this grace, Christians may see wherein some of their enterprises fail. Perhaps I ought not to say "fail" in the same sentence with "Christian," because what is truly Christian, is truly loving, and therefore cannot fail. But using the language of appearance, we do fail in the sense of coming short of what we might do, and what we often expect to do. And we come short in exact proportion as we lack in love. Let fact without and consciousness within bear witness. From the conversion of a continent, to the forgiveness of a wrong, the testimony is the same, if tried in love it succeeds, if tried without love it fails. Faith may be present, removing mountains, hope may be near, clearing the skies; but if the love that going out in its freshness, and reaching the heart to be won, be absent, nothing is done.

And seeing this, a serviceable application of our theme will be the arming of ourselves with the loving mind, so that the spring of wisdom in deliberation, of self-denial in benefaction, of heroism in achievement may never fail. We are about to hear of progress, of further effort at conquest, of various and recurring needs. We need more money, more benefactors, more laborers, more prayer, more interest in the helping of the lowly and the poor. The voice of love calls to us to-night with a peculiarity of nearness never used to any other nation since its first utterance: "Let mine outcasts dwell with Thee. . . . . Be Thou a covert to them, for the extortioner is at an end, the spoiler ceaseth, the oppressors are consumed out of the land." It must be needless to disclaim the thought that our proposal to arm ourselves with a loving mind means that we shall meet this practical duty by merely suffusing our minds with a sentiment. That is not the thought. The plea for love is for the moving affection, the movement out to bless, not the complacent musing kindness which begins and ends in merely wishing well.

The force of love insisted on may be instanced by its effect in a Christian heart, of which your preacher once was cognizant some twenty years ago. After a powerful sermon on Christian consecration in a Western college chapel, (Oberlin,) a student was found one afternoon in the college office, deeply absorbed in a map of the world. Stealing up behind him, a fellow student said, "What are you so engrossed in geography for?" "To tell you the truth," was the quiet reply, "I am looking among these islands of the Pacific, wondering if when I am ready to go Christ will give me one of them to win for Him. And I was in a search through this group, thinking which one it might be, for I would die contented if I might be used to bring back to Him even such a little part as this, of that whole world for which He died."

Herein was the love that is the call of the hour, the inward will merging into the outward act. And nowhere is it more clearly shown to be still a power in devoted human hearts than in missionary life and effort. Often and over again have we heard our brethren who have arisen and left us from Oberlin and Andover, and those select localities where those exiles of love decide their life's work, often have we heard them declare that love alone did move them, love to Christ who died, love to those He died for—but for that they never had vowed to be the living sacrifices they became. This is a night and a place to remind ourselves that such love has not yet fled our earth, and be it now our prayer that we may have a share of it.

And this constrains us to turn our last thought towards Him who being Love incarnate, still leads the way to unfailing triumph. Here is a life that was no failure because it was a life of love. Insulted,

He turned the insult into blessing; the insult is dead, the blessing still lives. His love outlasted the hate of Jerusalem. "Weep not for me," said He, "daughters of Jerusalem, weep for yourselves, for destruction is nearer you than me." The taking of His life was not the taking of His love. "Father forgive them" was his dying cry. Nothing in life nor death could stifle his affection. Arisen from the dead, he said "Go and tell my disciples, and Peter—and Peter, what a resurrection of love was there—that I am arisen." And from His throne of grace and glory what is His word to-night? "Come and love me even as I am loving you. And if ye love me, keep my commandments, one of which is, minister to mine and ye minister to me." Still the same, "Strong Son of God, immortal Love!" Thou never failest. AMEN.

LEGACIES.

Important legacies have been lost to the Association by informality. Care should be taken to give the full name: "THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION." The following form of bequest may be used:

I BEQUEATH to my executor (or executors) the sum of———dollars, in trust, to pay the same in———days after my decease, to the person who, when the same is payable, shall act as Treasurer of the "American Missionary Association," New York City, to be applied under the direction of the Executive Committee of that Association, to its charitable uses and purposes.

The Will should be attested by three witnesses, (in some States three are required—in other States only two,) who should write against their names their places of residence, (if in cities, the street and number.) The following form of attestation will answer for every State in the Union: "Signed, sealed, published, and declared by the said (A. B.) as his last will and Testament, in the presence of us, who, at the request of the said (A. B.) and in his presence, and in the presence of each other, have hereunto subscribed our names as witnesses." In some States it is required that charitable bequests should be made at least two months before the death of the testator.

The appointment of a Corresponding Secretary, in place of the late Rev. George Whipple, D.D., was referred to the Executive Committee.

The Association was then addressed by the President, Hon. E. S. Tobey, it being the first occasion of his occupying the chair.

Announcements for the evening were made; prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Perkins, of Ware, and the meeting adjourned to half-past seven o'clock.

The Association assembled according to adjournment. Rev. E. E. Strong, of Waltham, conducted the devotional exercises.

The annual sermon was preached by the Rev. Nathaniel J. Burton, D.D., of Hartford, Conn., from the text, Psalm 126: 6, "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." The discourse was listened to by a large audience with delighted interest.

THURSDAY, Oct. 26.

The morning session began at 8 o'clock, the President in the chair.

Prayer was offered by Rev. Edward Strong, D.D., of West Roxbury.

The first two hours were devoted to a service, commemorative of Rev. George Whipple, D.D., late senior Secretary of the Association, and Rev. E. P. Smith, President of Howard University, and recently engaged in the service of the Association on an exploring tour in Africa.

Interesting and highly appreciative remarks and reminiscences were made by the Hon. E. S. Tobey, Rev. M. E. Strieby, D.D., Rev. Elnathan Davis, Rev. R. B. Howard, Rev. Leonard S. Parker, Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, Dea. Samuel Holmes, Rev. S. S. Ashley, and Rev. George P. Claflin.

Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, Rev. L. S. Parker, and Rev. B. N. Seymour, were appointed a committee to present resolutions expressing the feelings of the Association in view of the decease of Rev. George Whipple, and Rev. E. P. Smith.

The Memorial Service, which profoundly interested a very large company of Christian friends, was brought to a close with prayer by Rev. H. B. Hooker, D.D.

The business of the Association was resumed at 10 o'clock, when a paper was presented by Rev. C. L. Woodworth, on the following topic: "Does the day of Pentecost cast any light on the principles and methods of propagating the Gospel among the unevangelized?"

The Rev. D. O. Mears, of Cambridge, came next with an essay on the following subject, viz: "The Centennial Problem, and its Uncertain Factor."

The President being called away, took leave with a few impressive remarks on the subject of the essay, and the general work of the Association.

Gen. C. B. Fisk was then called to the chair.

Rev. G. D. Pike, of New York, made an address on Missionary Work in Africa.

Adjourned till 2 o'clock, P. M.

At the opening of the afternoon session, prayer was offered by Rev. S. M. Newman, of Taunton.

A paper prepared by Rev. W. C. Pond, of San Francisco, was read, in his absence, by Rev. B. N. Seymour, of New Ipswich, N. H.

Rev. George A. Oviatt, from the Committee on Finance, made the following report:

Mr. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Finance beg leave to report as follows:

We have not only examined the statement of your Treasurer, as presented to the Association yesterday, but also a classified statement of its assets and liabilities, furnished by the financial committee, a sub-committee of your Executive Committee in New York, clearly showing the pecuniary condition of the Association and its monetary necessities for the future.

It can be said without hesitation, that the financial affairs of the Association, in all respects, have been administered during the year past with remarkable economy; while the financial committee, composed of gentlemen of eminent business ability, propose to prosecute still further their special work of looking after the expenditures of the Association, that in this direction there may be no waste, and that the resources at command may be made to accomplish as much as possible.

The aggregate receipts of the society from all quarters, the collections from the churches, individual donations and legacies, were about ten per cent. less last year than the year before, and as the expenses have not exceeded the receipts, it is evident that there has been either a contraction of labor performed or a commendable effort in the line of retrenchment. The Association has not been able to extend its operations either at home or abroad, while the compensation of the missionaries and teachers in its service is at the very lowest notch. The Secretaries and other agents, never extravagantly paid, voluntarily have thrown off from their salaries as much as they could and live.

These curtailments in the expenses of the Association have been virtually, on the part of the employees, so much increase of their individual contributions to its funds, and the question arises whether, had the patrons of the society all over the land done the same thing, its receipts would not have been sufficient to cancel its indebtedness and greatly extend its work.

The indebtedness of the society a year ago—in round numbers, ninety-six thousand dollars—was diminished last year by special contributions a little more than three thousand dollars. This indebtedness, as you are aware, is for property in the hands of the Association—mostly needed in carrying on its work—so that the assets are equal to the liabilities, and even more than this. But the interest on this large sum of ninety-three thousand dollars has to be paid annually, which is taking so much from the receipts, which are all needed for the prosecution of the great work the Association has undertaken to do.

Your committee cannot do otherwise than recommend that strenuous efforts should be made on the part of the friends of the society to lift from it the burden of this debt.

Of the receipts last year, a little more than thirty thousand dollars were in the way of legacies.

The work of the Association cannot be carried on successfully on the present plan, (which contemplates, in the future, work on a larger scale,) without an increase of receipts.

Your committee suggest that it would be well, at once, to inform the churches of the exact amount of their contributions last year—just how large and just how small they were—and that they be urged, in view of the greatness of the work to be done, to give to this leading object of beneficence with a more liberal hand.

The Executive Committee tell us of the hopefulness of our work, and that more must be done. Do not the churches, in adopting this committee's report pledge themselves to see to it that the treasury of the Association shall be filled?

We are happy to say, that we find the Association, financially, in good, sound condition, save that it wants larger receipts to enable it to liquidate its indebtedness, and to enlarge its operations in accordance with the plain indications of the will of the Master.

All which is respectfully submitted.

The report of the Committee on Religious Work was presented by Rev. E. S. Atwood.

The Committee on "Religious Work" desire to express, at the outset, their satisfaction at the breadth and particularity of the report referred to them for consideration, presenting, as it does, in such brief space, so complete a view of the outcome of the strictly religious work of the Association. As the tabulated results cover, with one or two exceptions, a period of only ten years, and yet an exhibit is made of fifty-six churches, with a membership of about four thousand, and a Sabbath-school clientage of still larger numbers, the Association is certainly to be congratulated on its uncommon and most gratifying success.

That these results have not been wrought out by spasmodic effort, but are the fruits of healthy growth, seems evidenced by the fact, that these scattered churches are already in the process of concretion into conferences, local and State. The element of organization, so vital in its bearing upon the best working of the law of fellowship, integral in Congregationalism, has manifestly not been neglected. Of these fifty-six churches, all but four are credited with Pastors, and appear to be fully equipped for work.

Still more significant and trustworthy, however, than these external indications of prosperity is the actual spiritual fruitage of the year, only partially represented in the 665 additions to church membership during the last twelve months. The revivals at Raleigh, and Memphis, and Hampton, and Selma, and Nashville, and Atlanta, and Athens, and New Orleans, and Mobile, and Talladega, are the seals of the Highest upon the faithfulness with which the Association has done its religious work. It is noticeable and gratifying also that, as a rule, these seasons of refreshing seem to have been remarkably free from that turbulence of feeling and manifestation once so characteristic of the colored race, under such circumstances, and which justly raised suspicion as to the genuineness of a so-called "work of grace." It seems evident that a life of piety is being wrought out, which is calmer, more intelligent, and more stable. It has more of the blood and brawn and fixity of principle, and less of the frenzy of mere emotion, and this fact of itself is evidence of large progress.

Special attention is called to that portion of the report relating to the training of theological students. The commendation of this line of associational work lies on the very face of it. The small outlay of means requisite to the sufficient equipment of these preachers to their own people is no inconsiderable advantage, but far beyond this in importance is the fact that in many particulars they have special adaptations for the work. There are certain affinities of race stock that are stronger than culture; a brotherhood of common blood that has possibilities and opportunities specifically and solely its own. The burden of experience is positive that an alien ministry is only a temporary expedient; and that without undue haste, and equally without undue delay, the work of evangelizing any people must largely be handed over to those whose birth and common interest identify them most closely with the race to be led into the light and liberty of the Gospel.

Nor is this all, nor the most—a vaster problem finds, in the successful outworking of this line of effort, its only hope of solution. The evangelization of Africa is a work that has hitherto foiled the wisdom and resisted the most aggressive endeavors of the various forms of missionary enterprise. That great continent, with its territory sweeping through so many parallels of latitude, with its teeming millions of population, is out of reach by reason of the malaria that fringes it like fire, and though here and there a man has been able to defy it, yet the multitude of martyr graves that line its shores, evidence how well nigh hopeless is the endeavor to break through it. From the honored dust of Livingstone, under the marbles of Westminster Abbey, and from the no less honored dust of Smith, under the lonely sods of the land for the hope of whose redemption he died, and out of the sleeping places of many of God's elect, comes a voice of warning, that makes even dauntless organizations and heroic men hesitate when the name of Africa is mentioned. But just now, when experience is at a loss and sagacity has exhausted expedients, the providence of God seems to indicate that the educated Freedmen are the divinely commissioned messengers to that dark land, and that the outstretched hands of Ethiopia are to be filled with good, by sons and daughters sprung from her own loins. The committee notice as a hopeful augury for the future of this enterprise, the growing interest in the work among the students at Nashville, and Mobile, and in the LeMoyne Institute, showing itself in the organization of African missionary societies, and in personal consecration to the service; and they feel warranted in urging the Association to advance as swiftly and with as full force as may be, along this opening path, so radiant with promise. It seems to your committee quite practicable to secure from many churches and individuals by special solicitation—annual scholarships, to be administered for the education of such students as desire to fit themselves for the African work and they suggest the matter to the careful consideration of the executive board.

One other item of the general report has attracted the particular notice of the committee, viz.; the plan of mission stations adjacent to the schools. It seems to have peculiar merits, with few or no drawbacks. As practical training schools for preachers these stations will have their inestimable use, while at the same time they are sure to become centers of crystalization for new churches. With every word of this paragraph of the report your committee most heartily coincide.

In closing a general survey of things done and things purposed by the Association in the matter of religious work, a most satisfactory advance is noted, and your committee would heartily echo the word "Forward" which is manifestly the watch-word of the executive board. With increased confidence, we renewedly commend to the churches this great work in all its branches, certain that its successful issue carries with it the only satisfactory and permanent solution of some of the darkest problems of our national life, while at the same time it offers the most hopeful assurance of the speedy redemption of the swarthy myriads of that ancient land whose bringing in to God has hitherto seemed the last possibility of missionary enterprise.

The Communion of the Lord's Supper was observed at 3 o'clock. The Rev. Edward Strong, D.D., and the Rev. S. M. Freeland officiated at the table. A large number of communicants participated in the solemn and delightful service.

Resuming business, the report of the Committee on Educational Work among the Freedmen, was read by the Rev. A P. Foster.

The Committee on Educational Work among the Freedmen, beg leave to report as follows:

The importance of the education of the freedmen cannot be over estimated. It is vital to the well-being of this republic. Indeed, it is scarcely exaggeration to say that it is essential to the republic's continuance. In this aspect, the work of the Association appeals to our patriotism as can that of no other society.

At the close of the war the nation was confronted with a most difficult problem, to wit: on what footing to place the South. We apparently had a choice between two courses, and only two. On the one hand, the Southern States might be held as unorganized territory, governed by a civil service, as England governs India, and no exercise of the rights of citizenship be permitted therein till it should be well established that the inhabitants could be trusted with such responsibilities. This was Mr. Sumner's plan. But there were objections to it so serious that it was rejected. The other alternative was to give back the rights of citizenship to those who had been in rebellion, and then, as a necessary protection to the negro, to give him an equal voice at the ballot-box. This last measure was decided upon, whether wisely or not we will not here attempt to debate, and 930,000 colored men, who were unable to read the ballots which they cast, were entrusted with the most sacred right of freemen. What was the result? These men, who through their past life had been subjected to the withering influences of slavery, without knowledge of the responsibilities or duties of citizenship, trained by a previous endurance of injustice to deem it lawful to do injustice in return, given over, most of them, to a degrading superstition, or a corrupt Christianity, beyond question did not in many cases exercise their new-born power wisely. Subject to the influence of designing men, they many times have been guilty of a misapplication of funds, or of the enactment of unjust laws, or of introducing into office men who could not command respect. Parties divided largely on the line of race, and matters were decided in politics mainly by the simple question of whether blacks or whites were in the majority. It is not surprising, under these circumstances, that the whites, heretofore accustomed to the servile obedience of those who now had matters their own way, themselves in most cases uneducated, their passions stimulated, and their Christianity corrupted by the slavery of the past, should fail to meet this unpleasant state of things in a Christian way, but instead resorted to old-time violence. It cannot be denied, that while the present alarming condition of affairs throughout the South is without justification, it has its roots in causes which can be thus easily traced.

The question here meets us with fearful earnestness: What can be done for the unhappy South? Education and Christianity—and they only can solve the problem; not education alone, not Christianity alone, if such a thing could be, but Education and Christianity combined;—an educated Christianity. We have not before us to-day the question of reconstruction; we are here concerned only with the religious and educational aspects of Southern affairs. Nor have we now to do with what may be the duty of Government It is a question worth raising, whether, as a matter of self-preservation, Congress should not do something for the education of the illiterate masses of the South.

But we must not place our dependence on the Government. There are political difficulties in the way, which render governmental help in educational directions unlikely if not impossible. In this emergency Christian people must stand in the breach. In this emergency this Association comes to the front, and, pointing to its record, reasonably claims our heartiest support. As Christians, desiring the salvation of souls; as just men, desiring to protect those whom our own act has put in peculiar danger; as patriots, desiring a united, peaceful and happy land, we are bound to meet these pressing needs.

The Association the past year has done work such as to awaken thankfulness and courage. It has now in the South, seven chartered institutions of learning, fourteen high and normal schools, and six common schools, twenty-seven in all. It sustains 147 teachers, and 6,175 pupils, 57 of whom are in theological training.

It should be remembered, that it is not proposed by this Association to establish a system of public schools throughout the South. A work of this character would be beyond its means, and still more beyond its province. Its one aim is, and must be, to establish at convenient points, institutions to prepare Christian workers. These institutions, dotting the South, are the ganglia or nerve-centers from which will radiate in every direction Christian influences. This principle is fundamental to all Christian work; it is the principle which our Lord set forth under the parable of the leaven. It is the principle which has prevailed, and must prevail, in every kind of missionary enterprise. Years ago the American Board established missions in the Sandwich Islands. To-day the converted Hawaiians are sustaining missionaries of their own race, on the Gilbert and Marquesas Islands. But the Gospel no sooner touches these distant islanders, than they, too, are fired with missionary zeal, and to-day in their turn are supporting missionaries of their own blood on the Mortlock group. And now word comes, that the Mortlock Islanders are preparing to send of their own number to islands still further west It is a like wonderful development which we expect among the colored people of the South; and we record with gratitude that colored teachers are quietly spreading here and there throughout the South, sustaining schools on their own account. There are to-day 70,000 scholars in the schools of the former or present pupils of institutions under the care of the Association. It is gratifying to notice also, that a great interest in the Christianization of Africa has sprung up among the Christian negroes of the South, and that there is now no unreasonable prospect that that vast continent, which has been besieged by white missionaries on every side for these many years, with but here and there a foothold on its burning shores, may now be conquered for Christ by those whose qualifications of race fit them for success. As the fundamental incentive and preparation for all such work, the extensive revivals in many of our institutions are especially cheering

In the condition of the educational work of the Association there is no cause for discouragement, but every inducement to push on in the line marked out by Providence. The loss of Emerson Institute by fire is a matter of deep regret, and the building should be speedily replaced by the benefactions of Christian people. The splendid building recently dedicated as Fisk University, erected by the self-denials and ability of the colored people, is an enduring witness to the value of such influences as this Association throws around that race. But the work is threatened on every side; by the ignorance and immorality of the blacks, by the passions of the Southern whites, by the intense aggressiveness of the Roman Catholic Church, and, shall we say it, by the indifference of many Christian people in the North. The great need now is, that the Association should receive the most generous support of all good people. Its work has by no means come to an end. For many years in the future must it be sustained in its endeavors to do for the negroes what humanity, and patriotism, and Christianity, are all loudly demanding of us.

Rev. G. H. DeBevoise presented the report of the Committee on Work among the Indians, as follows:

The Committee to whom was referred so much of the Annual Report as related to "the Work among the Indians," have considered the subject, and submit the following:

We find from the report, which seems to be full and exhaustive, that notwithstanding unusual obstacles and discouragements, arising from the unsettled condition of Indian affairs, and of public sentiment in regard to them, a gratifying success has attended the work performed by the different agents, missionaries and teachers appointed by this Association. The result of their labors appears to be of exceptional value, and calls for a renewed expression of thankfulness to God for the seal of success He has given to the labors of His servants. While all are ready to confess, that the sum of results, so far as their value can be at all measured, falls short of the desire and the hope, and very far short of the apparent need, none can fail to rejoice in any success attending the labors of God's servants, in the difficult fields of Christian work.

We think that no one can appreciate, even in small degree, the great work yet to be done for and among the Indians, without regretting that so little comparatively has been planned, undertaken or accomplished by any Christian organization in this important and promising field; nor without wondering why, from any causes, the churches fail to furnish the means or men necessary to the work.

It appears to your committee, that if any society or company of Christians, organized, planning, working and praying for the establishment of the kingdom of Christ in our land, is called of God to go in and possess this people for Him, that call comes to the American Missionary Association. We believe that the importance and proportions of their work among the Indians will soon appear in outlines clearly defined. We trust that God will place before His church and people, an open door to this work; and that the policy of the Government will in the future be of a character to strengthen the hands and encourage the hearts of all who labor and pray for the salvation, temporal and spiritual, of this much injured, much degraded, much belied, and little understood people. We deprecate any change which will have the effect or tendency, to leave this roaming savage, and already too warlike people, under the control and influence of men who are but ill qualified to teach them to learn war no more.

We deem it the pressing duty of Christian ministers, teachers, and all who lead in the making and moulding of public sentiment, persistently to keep before the people and the rulers, such a view of the duty and moral obligation of this nation toward the Indians, as is thus expressed, in the words of one well qualified to pronounce righteous judgment in the case, "If this nation would stand justified at the bar of history"—and at a higher tribunal—"the corner stone of our Indian policy should be, the recognition by the Government and by the people that we owe the Indian not endowments and lands only, but also forbearance, patience, care and instruction."

And if neither in these words themselves, nor in their author's intent, was included the larger idea, we here add it, and with emphasis. We owe it to them, we owe it to ourselves, we owe it to their Master and ours, to give them the Gospel. We welcome and re-echo the sentiments of the honored President of this Association, as, speaking from a large experience and with mature judgment, he affirms his convictions with respect to the encouragement we have for Christian labor among this people, concerning whose susceptibility to any impression for good, good men have been strangely filled with unbelief.

In the spirit vitalizing the words spoken to our ears and to our hearts last evening, we would hail and encourage the going forth of many more workers, upon whom God grant the mantle of our much beloved and much lamented Bro. E. P. Smith may fall. May there be found those who shall go forth to bear the precious seed, and to bear it weeping, too, if God will that thus it be. We believe that there is a Divine power in the Gospel of Jesus Christ, which will make even the Indian wilderness to be glad for the Gospel, and the desert of their savage life to rejoice and blossom as the rose, and we look for the witness in the years to come, of a changed, regenerated existence, as they bring forth in their lives the fruit of the Spirit.

The Committee on the Work among the Chinese reported through Rev. C. K. Bliss, as follows:

The Committee to whom was referred the Work of this Association among the Chinese in America, present the following report:

Having examined with care the papers submitted to us, and especially the extended one by Rev. W. C. Pond, we should be untrue to our convictions did we not give an emphatic endorsement to the work as now prosecuted by the Association, and a hearty God-speed to our brethren directly engaged in it. Their measures commend themselves to us as wise, and we rejoice with them over the gratifying results already attained.

The demands of this work should, in our view, awaken serious attention. The presence in this country of 100,000 idolatrous and corrupt people, coupled with the certainty that the incoming tide cannot be stayed, is a fact of tremendous import. What is to be their influence upon us? Can such influence be shaped by us? Is it possible to leaven that strange mass with Christian ideas and principles? These are questions vitally affecting our national welfare. But the tide flows out as well as in. China is destined to feel, even more sensibly perhaps than we, the effects of this commingling of races and ideas upon our western shores; and it is a question rising far above the level of all political or social questions, whether the time favored of God for spreading Christianity in that vast empire has not at last come. It is a significant fact that a dozen young men, converted within two years in the schools of our mission, are now in China, from some of whom tidings have been received regarding the intense eagerness of their countrymen to learn from them about the religion of Christ. The vantage-ground upon which such men stand as witnesses for Christ, is apparent at a glance. At home, acquainted with all the skepticism of their countrymen regarding their own faith, and confident that they can give them something better than anything they have ever had, these converts can do a work for Christ which foreigners, however wise and however devoted, could never hope to do. The signs are now multiplying, that the unforeseen Divine providence which has brought these people to our land is destined to have in this matter a grand development.

Our attention has been particularly drawn to the methods by which our brethren prosecute their work. Their chief instrument is the school, and the school in its most rudimentary type. The new-comers, eager to learn the English language, avail themselves of any opportunity to do it, and our teachers, with a kind of craft against which there is no law, in the words of Bro. Pond, "bait the Gospel-hook with the English alphabet." They preach, but not from a pulpit. They inculcate doctrines, but not in very scientific forms. They take the occasion afforded by their personal intercourse with eager and grateful pupils, to speak to them of the love of Christ. Some might criticise their work on the score that these schools are but slightly organized, and that the education they secure is of the simplest character; but herein our brethren illustrate their wisdom. Their object is not education, but conversion. They extend to persecuted men the hand of kindness; confer upon them a temporal boon of great value in their eyes, viz.: a knowledge of the English language; and having thus proved their good will, they bring the truths of religion to them by direct personal instruction and appeal. It would be difficult to devise more favorable circumstances in which to preach the Gospel to men who, by reason of national prejudices and a difficult language, and many other barriers, have been found hitherto almost inaccessible to it.

Other methods of work, approved by the brethren, seem equally useful. The society known as the Congregational Association of Christian Chinese, so rigid in its conditions of membership, and so well adapted to unite in sympathy and effort those who abandon idolatry for Christ, can doubtless be made greatly helpful in the common work.

The results which a few years of labor in this field have secured surprise us. Not long ago we were in doubt whether any impression whatever could be made upon people so firmly wedded to the superstitions of centuries; but already more than a hundred have been numbered as converts, and many more have become dissatisfied with their old religion, and seem about ready to accept the new. It may well be doubted whether in our entire field of missionary effort the world around, there is one spot that will better repay careful cultivation.

The necessities urged by our brethren for the more successful prosecution of the work are very few. In fact, their modesty in making demands upon the benevolence of the churches is noteworthy. But there is one want which they express that should be immediately met. They should have a building of their own, suitable for their purposes, and large enough to accommodate all who would come to them. They ought not to be crippled financially by the payment of rent, which though in a business point of view small, is yet large to them; nor should they be crowded into uncomfortable quarters. A donation of two or three thousand dollars would remove this the chief evil against which they contend, and it is earnestly hoped that among the benefactors of the Association some one will come forward with the amount required.

In conclusion, we commend this work to the churches as one full of good fruit, and worthy of their liberal support and earnest prayers. It is a work brought to our hands in fulfillment of those numerous and earnest prayers of ours that God would open doors of effort before His Church. The doors are open. The door of China is California, and the question which His providence is now pressing upon us is, Will ye enter it?

Rev. John W. Harding, from the Committee on Foreign Work, made the following report:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN WORK.

The Committee appointed to report on the Foreign Work of the Association note with satisfaction the judicious transfer of most of the churches, schools, and property, connected with the Jamaica Mission to the care of the Wesleyan, Baptist and Episcopalian Missions, and express the hope that the transfer of the whole work may be soon completed.

We have examined the latest reports from the Mendi Mission, with conflicting emotions of painful sadness and hopeful encouragement. On the one hand, the providential origin of the mission, its interesting traditions, and its accomplished success in having fairly opened that region to Christian influences, especially at Avery Station, which is forty miles inland, and comparatively free from the malarial influence and the corrupting civilization of the coast, second the proposed and vigorous reconstruction of this mission, and particularly its reinforcement by a colored leader of the requisite ability, and his colored assistants. But, on the other hand, the discouraging facts presented to us by the Secretary, and those on the ground, lead to a serious questioning, whether the future work of the Association in Africa should be much longer confined solely to this mission. It is confessed that Western Africa is the special home of the malarial foe. Of forty-nine missionaries sent thither by the Association, sixteen have died in the field, and thirteen have returned within a year on account of ill health. Rev. E. P. Smith, whose value to the cause was so inestimable, was at once stricken down. Rev. Barnabas Root, a native, and now connected with the mission, whose ordination was hailed as a marked event at our last anniversary, and from whose careful education and promising abilities so much was hoped, is in large measure disabled by pulmonary illness contracted in this country. Since Mr. Smith's death, Mr. and Mrs. Burton have been compelled to come home, and Mrs. Billheimer has been forbidden to return to Africa by her physician. The question comes, whether, in contemplating the future of our foreign work, it be not demanded by Christian prudence and a wise foresight, while still holding our advantages on the Western coast, which are too great to be abandoned, to look up, as soon as may be, some better strategic point for our Christian work in Africa. This was strongly recommended last year at Middletown, both by a resolution and by the general tenor of the accompanying speeches. The place indicated was somewhere in Eastern or Central Africa. It was then urged that the remarkable progress of civilization along the great thoroughfare of the Nile and the railway connected with it, so rapidly piercing the interior, the wonderful interest and world-wide attention now concentrated on African explorations, the distinguished part which our American travellers and newspaper representatives, like Stanley and Southworth, have had in awakening this interest, together with the influence of our military officers and engineers, in friendly relations with the Khedive, and of the multitude of wealthy and intelligent tourists in Egypt, conspire to make it desirable that this Association should at least speedily take efficient measures to explore this region, with a view of occupying, should it be found practicable, some point of missionary operations, and particularly with the view of training up native missionaries for the great future that seems to be so rapidly looming up, for the splendidly fertile, thickly populated, and comparatively healthy regions of Central Africa—inhabited too by tribes which are, it is said, in general superior to those of the Western Coast. Your committee beg leave respectfully and earnestly to second these suggestions and recommendations.

On motion of Rev. C. L. Woodworth, the several reports were accepted, and referred to the Executive Committee for publication.

Gen. Fisk spoke on the duties we owe to the Indian tribes. Rev. Dr. Strieby followed on the same subject.

The Rev. Mr. Claflin, from the Mendi Mission, addressed the meeting in reference to the work in Africa.

Rev. E. M. Cravath, President of Fisk University, Nashville, spoke briefly on the subject of Education among colored youth, and the sympathy of British Christians with this cause.

Rev. Henry T. Cheever, of Worcester, moved a resolution as follows:

"Resolved, That in behalf of the millions of Southern Freedmen, still the wards of the nation, having the name, but not yet the reality of freedom, there is demanded, at the present time, more than ever before, earnest prayer and right political action on the part of all American citizens." Adopted.

Benediction by the Rev. Dr. Clark, of Amherst, N. H.

Adjourned to 7½ o'clock.

The concluding meeting of the Association was held in the evening. A numerous audience was present, and listened with deep and earnest attention to the close.

Prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Webb.

The first address was by Col. Meacham, in reference to the Indians, and especially the Modocs.

He was followed by Rev. E. Van Orden, missionary in Brazil, who spoke of slavery in that empire.

Rev. W. S. Alexander, professor of theology in Straight University, New Orleans, spoke in high terms of his pupils, and referred to the perils of the freedmen.

The closing address was by Gen. Fisk, in regard to the great work of elevating the colored race.

Rev. Thomas K. Fessenden gave voice to the earnest desire of those present, that the Association may be greatly prospered in the time to come.

Rev. R. B. Howard, of East Orange. N. J., of the committee appointed to prepare a minute in regard to the deaths of Rev. George Whipple, D.D., and Rev. E. P. Smith, made the following report, which was unanimously adopted:

After 30 years faithful service of Christ and his poor, Rev. George Whipple, the Senior Secretary of this Association, has gone from his work to his reward. We wish to express here, and put on record, our heartfelt appreciation of his eminent services. He was early imbued with the then rare sympathy for the slave, and thoroughly devoted to his emancipation. As a student at Oneida Institute, Lane Seminary and Oberlin College, in which last institution he became a professor, he was in schools of preparation for his life-work. Called to the Secretaryship at the formation of the American Missionary Association, he remained to his death its chief executive officer. Whatever it has accomplished it owes very largely to the wisdom, carefulness, firmness, administrative ability and religious consecration of George Whipple. He was a trusted counsellor, in the trying times of emancipation, to Lincoln, the emancipator. He was a discreet and sleepless friend to the Freedmen. He had a loving care as well as a burden of responsibility for the missions in Africa and Jamaica. He was cautious in weighing testimony, slow in coming to final decisions and utterly immovable in what he believed to be right. Undemonstrative in words or manner, there was a fountain of tender sympathy in his heart for the missionaries, and teachers, as well as the degraded people for whom they labored. His character was a rare combination of dignity, gentleness and strength. He richly deserves the universal respect and affection in which he is held by all who know him. We doubt not he has received the heavenly welcome from our blessed Master, "Well done good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." We hereby extend our tenderest sympathies to Dr. Whipple's afflicted household. We record our sense of the irreparable loss experienced by this Association in whose private counsels and public meetings his presence has hitherto never been wanting, and which seems to-day even indispensable. May God comfort his sorrowing family, and guide the bereaved Association in all the affairs which so sorely miss him.

Rev. E. P. Smith was at the time of his death engaged in the difficult and dangerous service of missionary exploration on the coast of Africa. He was sent out by this Association to prepare the way for an enlargement of its work in the cause of their fathers through the agency of educated and Christian freedmen. He had performed services somewhat similar in this country for the Christian Commission and for this Association at the South and, on its recommendation, among the Northwestern Indians. He rejoiced in doing work from which, on account of its demands upon courage and self-denial, many would have shrunk. He richly deserved the confidence of the government and the nation in his faithful administration of the office of Indian Commissioner, which he filled with signal ability and unsullied integrity. His death by climatic fever was sudden, and the loss to the African Missions cannot be easily measured or readily repaired. He has joined the great company of martyrs whose lives have been given to African evangelization. Brother Smith exhibited in all his perplexing and exhaustive duties a sweet and attractive Christian spirit. The wounded soldier, the degraded freedman, the outcast Indian and the heathen African were alike the objects of his tenderest pity and most devoted service. God kindly gave him visions of the upper glory while dying so far away from the comforting and sweet ministries of wife and child. To his dear family we tender our warmest sympathy in their unspeakable sorrow.

Such deaths as we now record signify a loss to the church and to mankind. We are thankful to God for such Christian lives and labors. We trust him to raise up other men fit to wear the falling mantles of His workmen. Our faith in God's purpose of salvation for the outcast and miserable in Africa and America abates not one jot. The work grows richer with every precious new life sacrificed to promote it. Of Brothers Smith and Whipple we may tenderly say, "Lovely and pleasant were they in their lives and in their deaths they were not divided." Their unfinished work, speaks but one language. Close up the depleted ranks, and in the name of our great Captain, march on to victory. That final victory has the divine promise and waits only upon the faith of God's people.

The resolutions were adopted by a rising vote, when all joined in singing, "Nearer, my God, to Thee."

Voted, To refer the Minutes to the Executive Committee, and the Scribe, to be prepared for publication.

Rev. C. L. Woodworth moved a vote of thanks as follows: Resolved, That this Association gratefully records the good providence which directed it to Fitchburg, to hold its thirtieth annual meeting; that it offers hearty thanks to the Rollstone church and society for the use of their beautiful house of worship for the sessions of this meeting; to the pastor of this, and of the Calvanistic church, for ready and unwearied co-operation; to the families of these, and also the families of sister churches, for abundant hospitality, more than meeting the wants of numerous guests; to the choir of this church, for helpful service in the songs of Zion; and to the Fitchburg, Cheshire and Clinton Railroads, for return tickets on their various lines.

A fitting response was made by the pastor of the Rollstone church, Rev. G. R. W. Scott.

After singing and benediction, the meeting adjourned at 9½ o'clock.

REPORT

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

In this thirtieth anniversary of the American Missionary Association, the Executive Committee turn with sorrowing hearts to pay their tribute to the memory of the beloved dead before recording the work of the living.

The heaviest bereavement that has ever fallen upon the American Missionary Association came to it on Friday Oct. 6th, in the death of Rev. Geo. Whipple, D. D., its senior Secretary. Since the organization of the Association, five of its Presidents have in succession died. These officers, highly valued by the Association, and greatly honored in other walks of life, were not, however, immediately connected with the management of its work; but Mr. Whipple always had direct responsibility as its Secretary. For some years he shared the duties of administration with Mr. Lewis Tappan, to whom, under God, the Association mainly owes its existence and organization, but the weight of years led Mr. Tappan at length to resign his position as Treasurer, and in 1873 he died. Of the other heroic men associated with Mr. Whipple in the early and dark days of the anti-slavery struggle and of the Association's history, some have fallen in death, others have retired from active service, but he has stood through all these years in the steady discharge of duty until the last sickness gave the warning that the time of his release had also come.

At the close of the year 1846, Mr. Whipple entered upon his duties as Corresponding Secretary of the American Missionary Association, then recently formed. He was in the forty second year of his age, in the full vigor of his manhood, and he devoted his whole energies to his new position with a success that is well known by the results, but with a faithfulness and spirit of self-sacrifice that few outside of his office ever knew.

Through the whole course of his thirty years duties as Secretary, he labored with increasing diligence. He was a model of punctuality in the regularity of his office hours, and his vigilance and supervision extended to all parts of the work of the Association. He seldom took any time for vacation or relaxation, and even in the hours of conference and consultation, he soon became restless if the discussions wandered in the least from the point immediately in hand.

Mr. Whipple's character was so well rounded that it is difficult to single out peculiar traits, yet a sound judgment—a judicial cast of mind—was perhaps the most marked feature. He was not apt to make suggestions of new plans, but he was always ready to consider them when proposed, and in their consideration he was not content with a superficial or second hand view of the case. He examined the papers himself, and always if time permitted, verified the accuracy of the figures by recasting them with his own hand. Perhaps it might be said that he was not quick in reaching his conclusion—certainly he was not hasty—but when his opinion was fully made up, his associates were accustomed to value it as highly as that of any man living.

This judicial feature of his character fitted him peculiarly to represent the Association in its intercourse with the officers of Government, in its relations to the Freedmen and to the Indian tribes. We have reason to know that he commanded the esteem of all the officers —military and civil—with whom he was thus brought into contact, and that he had a great weight of influence with them.

He was very conscientious. He seemed ever to respect the rights of others, in small as well as great things, and it is doubtful if the man lives who feels that Mr. Whipple ever intended to injure him in any way. The rights of the poor slave were espoused by him when worldly considerations would have told him to "pass by on the other side." Nor was he narrow in his sympathies. He was interested in all classes of men, and in all who sought to benefit man or extend the Redeemer's kingdom.

But those who knew Mr. Whipple most intimately had the highest esteem for his piety and his ripe and well developed Christian character. Humility, profound reverence for God, quiet and calm trust in His promises and love, and full consecration of all he had and could do to the Master's service marked his character. His was a busy life. He rests from his labors, and his works do follow him.

Mr. Whipple was seriously ill for nearly three months before his death. He was stricken down on one of those unusually hot days in July, overcome by heat and toil, with symptoms resembling sunstroke. His remarkable fine constitution resisted for a long time, but he never rallied from the attack, and at length the powers of nature gave way, and he died with little suffering, and in the calm and assured hope in the mercy of the Divine Redeemer.

Rev. Edward P. Smith, died June 15th, on board the Steamship Ambrig, near the island of Fernando Po, in the Gulf of Guinea and was buried June 16th, at the Presbyterian Mission Station at Old Calabar.

Mr. Smith was born June, 1827, at South Britain, Conn. After graduation, from Yale, he taught school for three years at Mobile, Alabama; studied two years in the Union Theological Seminary, New York City, and while there associated himself with Charles L. Brace in his efforts for reclaiming and finding homes for destitute and vagrant children.

From Union Seminary he went to Andover, and after completing his course of study, was settled at Pepperill, Mass. Soon after the breaking out of the war, he volunteered his services to the Christian Commission, and was stationed at Nashville and Chattanooga.

His services before the close of the war were considered so valuable that he was appointed Superintendent of the Western department of the Christian Commission, and afterwards Field-secretary at Philadelphia, where he had charge of the distribution of a very large amount of money and supplies. After closing up the affairs of that organization, he wrote a very interesting volume, entitled "Incidents of the U. S. Christian Commission."

About this time, the educational work among the Freedmen was attracting much attention, and Mr. Smith entered the service of the American Missionary Association as District Secretary at Cincinnati. He was soon called to New York to take charge of the field work of the Association at the South, and while in this capacity, in coöperation with the Freedmen's Bureau, he performed a large share of the work of planting the schools and colleges of the Association for the Freedmen. Mr. Smith was eminently a pioneer, and when Gen. Grant announced his Indian policy, and invited the different benevolent societies to appoint agents and coöperate with the Government in the work of Indian civilization, Mr. Smith resigned his position in New York, offered his services as Indian Agent, and was appointed to the Pillager and Chippewa tribes in Minnesota.

Finding an excellent outlook for civilizing agencies at White Earth Reservation, he built school houses and homes for the Indians, fenced in their lands, furnished them with stock, taught them agricultural and mechanical pursuits, and thus illustrated the possibilities of the triumph of a righteous policy for the red men. On the occurrence of a vacancy at Washington, Mr. Smith was appointed Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and entered heartily into the business of developing the beneficent policy of the Government. The merciless opposition which he met from designing men, who sought to profit at the expense of the Indians, exhibits one of the saddest phases of our republicanism. Soon after the retirement of Mr. Delano as Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Smith resigned his position, and was elected President of Howard University. The American Missionary Association had long felt that their African Mission work should be reconstructed and enlarged; and Mr. Smith was asked to visit Africa and make the necessary investigations. While on this mission he died of African fever after an illness of two days.

On the thirteenth of June he was taken with very alarming symptoms, and from the first was confident that he would not live. He called for the purser of the steamer, and requested him to write as he should dictate, and from those last precious words the following are selected: "I could not die happier, easier, more hopefully and blessedly than I am now passing away." "I would like to live for more service for Him, but there is nothing else worth talking about to keep me here," "How glorious—how joyous—how blessed! It could not be possible for me to set out on an excursion so triumphantly, transcendently, magnificently, as I now pass away to join Him whom we love, and shall yet serve in magnificent glory."

Mr. Smith was a Vice President of the Association.

The hand of death has removed two other Vice Presidents, Hon. Henry Wilson and Rev. Geo. B. Bacon, D.D. Henry Wilson was too well known, and his name too highly honored to need eulogy from us. We only wish to record our appreciation of his deep interest in the colored people of this nation, and his clear perception of the fact that their welfare and that of the nation are identical. His voice, pen and influence were devoted to the enforcement of his earnest convictions on that subject.

In the death of Rev. Geo. B. Bacon, D.D., we mourn with his church and a very large number of friends in both literary and religious circles the death of a beloved pastor, a scholar and a Christian man of broad sympathies and untiring and useful activity.

Two of our co-laborers on this Committee, Mr. James O. Bennett and Thomas Ritter, M. D., were removed from us by death during the year. These esteemed brethren were elected as members of the Committee at the same Annual Meeting in 1848, two years after the organization of the Association, were regularly re-elected every year since, and died in this city within a few months of each other; Mr. Bennett's death occurring suddenly Jan. 26th, and Dr. Ritter's after an illness of twelve days, May 12th.

Brothers Bennett and Ritter were men of decided Christian character, active in their duties in the church, broad in their sympathies for all forms of religious work, and from the first, earnest and steady friends of the colored race. In their interest in the work of this Association, and in their faithful attendance on the meetings of this Board, few of their associates surpassed them. Mr. Bennett rendered valuable service to the Association as auditor of the Treasurer's accounts.

We are called to record the death of three of our female missionaries. Miss Mary J. Doxey died on the morning of the day on which our Annual Meeting assembled last year. She was one of our earliest missionaries among the colored people in Hampton, Va., and vicinity, where she continued her labors for several years, and was then transferred to Eastville on the eastern shore of Virginia. In both localities her labors were faithful, and attended with good fruits. On her final return from the South, she resided in Brooklyn, N. Y., where her death occurred. Mrs. Harriet M. Dodge, wife of our missionary, Mr. D. D. Dodge, who has superintended our work in Wilmington, N. C., for the last three years, died at Nashua, N.H., June 28th. A few years since, the news of the capture and imprisonment of an only son in Libby prison gave her a nervous shock from which she never completely recovered. She was one year at Hampton and two years at Wilmington, presiding over the Mission Homes of the Association with a motherly kindness and assiduity which the teachers will ever gratefully remember. Her life was quiet and useful, and she died without a struggle, in simple trust in Jesus. Miss Lucy A. Woodcock died Aug. 3d. She was educated at Oberlin, and in 1853 entered the service of the Association as a missionary among the Freedmen in Jamaica. She labored as a teacher at Eliot, Sea View and Richmond, with much acceptance. At Eliot, owing to the failing health of Rev. Mr. Thompson, the missionary, the burden of keeping up the station mainly rested upon her. She not only taught the school, but often took charge of the meetings of the church, conducting services in the form of a Bible class, or requesting the members to speak and pray. Ill health compelled her to return home, and she died among her friends in Wellsville, N.Y.

GENERAL SURVEY.

IN THE SOUTHERN STATES.

A broad outlook over the Southern portion of these United States brings to view a population of more than thirteen millions of people not yet recovered from the effects of a long and disastrous war, with their labor system not yet adjusted to the new order of things, and with many prejudices and animosities not yet allayed. Among this population are over four millions of colored people struggling with poverty, ignorance and many other difficulties and dangers which beset them in their untried and peculiar position. The political agitations of the day--and they have recurred at every Presidential election since the war—reveal the deep-seated and unreconciled antagonisms which lie beneath the surface. The political excitement will pass away, and the North will be in danger of again forgetting the whole subject, but the elements of discord will remain, only to foment into future and more serious disturbances. The outlook is gloomy.

But amid these discouragements there are elements of light and hope; and we hesitate not to point to the churches and schools, the missionaries and teachers of the American Missionary Association, and kindred Christian influences, as among the most encouraging sources and evidences of a brighter day. For these come to the South in no spirit of antagonism, seeking neither office nor emolument, and aiming only and effectively to remove the main cause of the difficulty—the ignorance and degradation of the colored people.

It is, therefore, with great joy that we invite attention to another year's faithful and successful labor in our churches and schools in the South. We chronicle no part of this work with greater satisfaction than the revivals of religion and the conversion of souls. We are grateful to God that he has given so many evidences that his presence has been with our workers amid the toils and anxieties of the year. Revivals and ingatherings have been enjoyed in most of the larger churches under our care. In some cases the harvest has been quickly gathered after long sowing and watering, and in other instances the increase has come steadily through the year. In ten of the churches, the accessions on profession of faith have numbered 282. This by no means includes all who have given satisfactory evidence of conversion, for, as in the past, many of the converts unite with the churches to which their parents or friends belong. Our missionaries make no opposition to this, for it promotes a fraternal fellowship with those churches, and furnishes them with members who carry with them an enlightened and practical piety. The only drawback is that these converts do not always find in those churches the intelligent teaching and moral surroundings needed to train them in the Christian life. There are 56 churches in the South on our list and the additions during the year have been 665. The total membership is 3,935.

We feel called upon to give additional attention to the training of theological students. An educated and pious native ministry is essential to the moral and spiritual elevation of the colored people in this country, and the Freedmen can never render the great service to Africa to which we believe God calls them unless a large number can be fully prepared in mind and heart to carry the Gospel thither.

Closely connected with this duty of educating students for the ministry is the necessity of founding new churches in which these students can preach, in which the Gospel, as we understand it, can be proclaimed and exemplified, and from which more students can be gathered. For, without aiming at any rivalry with existing colored churches, we are satisfied that the greatest service we can render in the spiritual advancement of this people will be in the establishment of churches which are untrammeled by their usages and traditions.

Many openings for the planting of such new churches are before us, and, in some cases, where our schools or other like influences have prepared the way, the pressure upon us to enter them has been very great. The want of funds alone has hindered us. We hope that brighter financial days will in some measure relieve this difficulty, but our conviction of the necessity of enlargement in this direction is so great that we must at all hazards push forward in it.

The most practical and least expensive mode of such effort is to plant mission stations near the schools, which, as fortresses, can send out their trained soldiers to teach and preach. Indeed, the theological student while pursuing his studies can go out to these stations for the Sabbath and return on Monday—thus benefiting both the people and himself. A building costing $200 or $300 will meet the present wants of such stations, and will serve for both school-house and church. It is the hope and aim of the Association to plant a number of such mission churches this year, and to push forward the work more rapidly and over wider sections of country as fast as the means can be secured.

Already conferences of churches are formed in the South, capable of counselling as to the location of these mission stations and of exercising a watchful care over them.

In our school work the grandest event of the year was the dedication of Jubilee Hall at Nashville, and the saddest was the burning of Emerson Institute at Mobile.

Jubilee Hall is a goodly building, substantial in structure and beautiful in its proportions. As a memorial it is historic. In the songs by which it was built it recalls the cruelties of slavery and the faith and hope by which the heart of the slave was cheered in the house of his bondage; and it also attests the self-sacrifice of the Jubilee Singers and their leader, who sought not their own advantage, but devoted their talents to rearing a school for the Christian education of the descendents of the oppressed slaves. The dedication of the building took place Jan. 1, and was attended by a large and enthusiastic audience. It was a joyous occasion, and yet there was, deep down in the hearts of many of the teachers and students, a burden of prayer that the Lord might enter the new house with the convicting and purifying power of his Holy Spirit. We are glad to record the fact that the prayer was answered ere long in the revival of His work and the conversion of many souls to Christ.

In sorrowful contrast stand the blackened walls of Emerson Institute, which was burned on Sunday night, April 16. It was the work of incendiary. The teachers and pupils stood outside in the street, tearfully and hopelessly watching the destruction of their noble school building. At the office in New York, when the news came, the first impulse was to ring forth a call to rebuild, yet we trembled to utter it with full voice, lest the gathered means might only be a diversion of funds essential to sustaining the work already in hand at other points. The rebuilding must await further developments and increased resources.

Turning from these scenes, so joyous on the one hand, and sorrowful on the other, to the steady work done in our schools, we have occasion only for congratulation. Diligent and successful labor has marked the year. The most satisfactory result of our educational work is the addition we are steadily making to the corps of colored teachers who are spreading themselves over the whole South. They go not with the grandeur of a marching army, nor with the popular eclat of the five hundred Northern teachers we formerly sent into the South, but they go quietly and unostentatiously among their own people, to teach their children in the day school and in the Sabbath school, to assist in their prayer meetings and to carry an enlightening and Christian influence to their hearts, homes, schools and churches. We believe there is not in the whole land a more salutary influence, of no greater magnitude, at work for the regeneration of the South and for the peace and prosperity of the nation, than these colored teachers. We esteem it to be one of the most important objects of this Association to multiply their numbers and to increase their mental and moral qualifications. Our estimate is that nearly 70,000 scholars were in the schools of our former or present pupils, during the year.

But the great drawback—the poverty of the people—merits the attention of the friends of the colored race. Our brightest pupils are often compelled to quit their studies before they are duly prepared for teaching or preaching, and many are hindered from coming to school at all for want of means. Education societies are needed for the comparatively prosperous North and West—how much more for these, the poorest people of the impoverished South?

CHINESE ON THE PACIFIC.

To the mission among the Chinese on the Pacific coast, a new impulse has been added by the organization of the "California Chinese Mission" in connection with the General Association of California. This brings our efforts among the Chinese into closer relations with the churches on the coast and awakens a deeper sympathy. We believe that the churches at the East are also taking a greater interest in the conversion of these Chinese and in their relations to the redemption of China itself. This centennial year has been dishonored by the attempt to debar these foreigners from our shores and to arouse anew the bitter spirit of caste prejudice, and by mob violence against these unoffending people. We rejoice that our Superintendent, Rev. W. C. Pond, has joined with other friends in resisting with tongue and pen this unchristian outbreak.

In no part of our field have more satisfactory results appeared in the conversion of souls and in general Christianizing influences, considering the amount of money and labor expended, than among these Chinese on the Pacific slope. The report of the Superintendent enumerates 13 schools and 1536 scholars. Those who profess to have ceased from idol worship number 119, and those who give evidence of conversion 89. The total receipts for the year have been (in coin) $5.320, of which $1,406 was contributed directly to the auxilliary, and through the churches in California $741, precisely double the amount received the preceding year.

THE INDIANS.

The unsettled condition of affairs among the Indians during year has been a serious drawback to our work among them. A feeling of uncertainty has extended not only to the agents, but to the employes and the Indians—in some cases causing the employes to resign. Yet notwithstanding this, our agents have remained at their posts without change, and have done most satisfactory work; and the reports show that the Indians have made great progress towards a Christian civilization.

JAMAICA.

The work in Jamaica, in accordance with the recommendation of the Annual Meeting in 1873, is being transferred to other hands. The Rev. John Thompson alone remains in the active service there, and he will transfer the churches under his care as rapidly as it can be done consistently with the best interests of all concerned. Rev. Mr. Venning and his wife, so long connected with the missions, are in feeble health and laid aside from active work. They await almost from day to day the time when their change shall come.

AFRICA.

The greatest sorrow and the greatest interest of our field-work cluster around the African mission. The impulse given at the last annual meeting led to the journey of exploration by the lamented Rev. E. P. Smith. His sad death is but one of the sorrows and difficulties thrown before us to try our faith and increase our zeal. The return of Mr. Burton, Mrs. Billheimer's presence in this country and the prohibition of her return to Africa by her physician, and the continued illness of Bro. Barnabas Root, are among the other discouragements. But the question is not one of sorrow, but of hope; not of death and defeat, but of success. Africa must be conquered for Christ—yea, even Western Africa, malarial, barbarous and cursed as she is with tribal wars and slave-hunting. The antecedents of the negroes of this country point to them as the destined heroes in this steady conquest for Christ; and the history and traditions of this Association—yea, all that it has experienced of difficulty, sickness and death among its workers and the discouragements now resting upon its efforts there—are but motives for renewed zeal and sacrifice. We had hoped that the martyr Smith would have led the new movement, but he did all that the Master had appointed for him there. He indicated his plan for the renewed effort—left his triumphant testimony to the faithfulness of Christ in the hour of death, and then went to his reward, sending the call from that dark battle field and from his bright death hour to his successor.

Portions of Africa are as healthy as America, but, over the larger part, malaria reigns unchecked, and joins hand in hand with heathen barbarism in disputing every inch of ground with the missionary of the Cross. Western Africa is the special home of this malarial foe, yet even here, while some have died, others have labored with success for many years. Of forty-nine missionaries sent thither by the American Missionary Association, sixteen have died in the field and thirteen returned within a year on account of ill health; on the other hand, one of its missionaries has remained twenty-four years, one nineteen and two others seventeen years, with occasional respite of return to America: one remained twelve consecutive years, and two others five. This, indeed, is a sad record, but is far better, we think, than most people in America imagine. One great danger attending the efforts of nearly all our missionaries in Africa has been a zeal which has driven them to excessive toil, pressed as they were by the great desire to accomplish the work so near their hearts.

We believe that to-day a white man of good constitution, not liable to malarial attacks, between thirty and forty years old, gifted with a moderation that would not lead him beyond his strength, could go there to labor with the prospect of long life and great usefulness. Some acclimation would be inevitable; but with proper precautions it might be passed through as safely as any malarial fever in this country.

In the proposed reconstruction of our Mendi Mission in Africa, the American Missionary Association must secure the services of such a man. Who will volunteer to go forth? We shall expect to be very careful and severe in scrutinizing his health, his mental and spiritual gifts, and we shall not hesitate at all to reject any applicant, for his sake as well as ours, who may fail of the requisite qualifications. We believe Providence calls for the man, and we shall spare no pains to find him and send him forth.

We have spoken of a white man, but we should be far more ready to receive a colored man of similar qualifications as the leader of the force we propose to send thither. In addition to this leader, we desire the services of three colored men and their wives to accompany him. These men must be qualified to teach or to preach, and must possess all the requisitions of health and heart for the work in Africa. We hope to secure such workers and to send them out at the beginning of the next dry season.

But still the refrain comes to us of Africa's deadly climate, and a deeper tone is added by the death of Mr. Smith; yet is it the way of heroes to shrink from the front of the battle because death is there? In our armies in the dark days of the rebellion, the fall of a leader discouraged no one. Others sprang forward to fill the vacancy, and when the rank and file were mowed down, the North wept her honored dead, but sent other sons to take their places. When the Christian martyrs sunk in death at the stake or in the arena of blood, it was but the signal for the bolder avowal of Christ, and a fresh marshalling of those ready to peril their lives for His sake. In the battle-field, the thought was not of danger, but of victory. The field must be won and the nation saved. In the martyr age, the thought was not of the fagot or of the fang of the wild beast, but that the world must be conquered by the Cross. And now in this case, Africa must be won to the Saviour. It will be won. The danger must be met. The climate must be braved. There can be no delay till commerce or civilization shall have drained these swamps or cleared the jungle. Christianity must take the lead, and as the co-worker with civilization, must bring religion, health, and the new life to Africa.

FINANCES.

The receipts for the year from all sources (including those for Hampton and Berea) have been $264,709.03; being $8,824.19 less than last year. On the other hand the expenditures for the year (including Hampton and Berea) have been $261,382.83, being $28,953.04 less than last year.

These figures indicate the gratifying fact that we have begun a reduction of debt even on a decreased income, as compared with last year. With returning prosperity to the country, and increased receipts to our treasury, we hope to follow this beginning with more marked reductions. The treasurer's report also shows that in this reduction of expenditure is the item of over two thousand dollars on the cost of collection and administration.

We rejoice in a diminished debt, yet the cutting down in the field work, by which it has been achieved, has been done with great sorrow and regret. The cry comes up from every part of the South for enlargement. We are confident the golden hour for the most effective work is passing away, and our earnest prayer is that the heart of the nation may be so aroused to the pressing wants of the field that the day for an advance along the whole line may not be far distant.

THE CENTENNIAL EXHIBITION.

The Centennial Exhibition seemed to call for some indication of the progress in education of the millions of former-slaves whose relation to the nation in the past are historic and whose future condition is so intimately connected with its welfare. Space was accordingly obtained and the Association forwarded specimen exhibits from its schools and also photographs of its buildings in the South, together with a map showing the location of its schools and those taught by its pupils. This map is a most striking evidence of the wide-spread work done through the schools of the American Missionary Association.

Hampton Institute occupies the same room in the Centennial building with its varied exhibits; and a large picture of the Jubilee Singers and portraits of the Earl of Shaftesbury and of David Livingstone furnished by Fisk University complete the display. Perhaps no room in the Educational Gallery attracts so many interested visitors as Gallery T. 47.

FREEDMEN'S MISSIONS AID SOCIETY—JUBILEE SINGERS.

The interest in our work continues in Great Britain. The Freedmen's Missions Aid Society, under its faithful Secretary, Rev. O. H. White, D. D., is securing funds mainly for the aid of students who are looking to Africa as their field of labor. The Jubilee Singers have spent another successful year among our British friends, and will remain with them this year also. Rev. Mr. Cravath, the President of Fisk University, gives them the benefit of his efficient supervision.

THE BIBLE SOCIETY.

As in the past, this benevolent society lays us under obligations deserving of distinct and thankful mention for its steady and liberal grants of Bibles and Testaments for the Freedmen.

DETAILED REPORT.

FREEDMEN.

CHURCH WORK.

REVIVALS AND INGATHERINGS.

Our last Annual Report was written while in some places revivals were in progress, or the special effort had just closed. We give the subsequent results.

In Raleigh, N. C., the closing services of the revival are thus described by Rev. W. G. Marts:

"I would like to give some additional items with respect to our work here. The whole number who professed an interest in Christ was about eighty. The greater number of these give good evidence of possessing a new life. At the date of my last letter to you, twenty-two had united with us. Subsequently sixteen more were received into membership, making our total number fifty-two. Some others of the converts have expressed a desire to unite with us.

"Many of those received into the church preferred to be baptized by immersion. I accordingly baptized twenty-seven of them in this way. A creek, about a mile from the city, is the place where this ordinance is usually celebrated by the churches of Raleigh. Thither, upon a most beautiful Sabbath afternoon, we repaired. Two or three thousand people gathered to witness the performance of this rite. Good order was observed and great solemnity pervaded the assembly, and we trust that an impression was made on the impenitent which will produce good fruit.

"At the night meeting following this service, we partook of the Lord's Supper. Many for the first time commemorated the dying love of our Lord. It was a blessed hour that we thus spent in communion. I had never witnessed such a season before. There was great quietness and solemnity, but deep feeling, and an interest that seemed to isolate that company of believers from the great and respectful throng around them. We all felt that Jesus must be present. Many a heart was melted, and many a face beamed with joy that earth cannot give. New inquirers presented themselves that night, and several persons professed conversion. Thus ended that blessed Sabbath, long to be remembered by us all."

The revival in the LeMoyne Institute, at Memphis, Tenn., was so rapid in its development as to awaken a natural anxiety as to the permanency of its results. The long summer vacation in the school occurred soon after the close of the revival meetings. Prof. Steele thus describes his anxiety and the gratifying relief:

"I felt, as did other of the teachers, some concern about the state of things we might find among the converts on our return after vacation. Letters from different ones to some extent reassured us. Our return would reveal all. So it has. Our fears have proven groundless. We have yet to find more than one of the whole number who has lost sight of the salvation found so precious in the school prayer meetings. There is now the same fervency and interest felt and shown forth in the testimonies in our weekly meetings; the same earnestness of purpose to live Christian lives. So that we cannot doubt but the good seed was sown in good ground, and that it has well taken root—we trust for rich fruitage in eternity.

"Our prayer meeting, each Friday afternoon, is very pleasant and a blessing to us all. Usually the pupils all remain. If during the week there have been any burdens or crosses, the meeting lifts them all and lets in good cheer and joy. There are not many in the school not Christians; we look soon to see them brought into the fold. We rejoice that the Holy Spirit is present, and that His influence is felt."

As an illustration of the more quiet methods of Christian labor among the colored people, we give an extract from a letter of Rev. Richard Tolman, Hampton, Va.:

"There is not now, and has not been since the spring of 1873, what may be called a revival. Nor have we been any of this time without some tokens of God's gracious presence in the conversion of souls. Though various persons who gave evidence of piety, on account of their peculiar denominational views, join the churches to which their friends at home belong, there has not been a communion season here, for more than two years, without some additions to the church by profession.

"And this leads to the remark that we have the privilege of witnessing at times wonderful transformations of character: some who, when they came, had been addicted to lying and stealing and other vices, and who seemed at first beyond recovery, by means of the educational and Christian influences brought to bear upon them, have been moulded into a manhood and womanhood of the noblest type.

"Besides our Sabbath services and week day religious gatherings, we depend much under God upon private personal effort, and this may be the reason why the fruits of conversion among us have been generally not so much in the mass, but one by one throughout the year."

The faithful labors of Mr. Pope at Selma, Ala., are thus described:

"We have been visited with a precious revival, during which there have been sixteen conversions, and now during the week of prayer our meetings are full and interesting, and several are still inquiring the way to life.

"Mr. McLean, one of the theological class of Talladega, assisted Mr. Pope for nearly two weeks, and proved to be indeed a great help. The last night he was with us he preached from the text 'The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few.' He made a stirring appeal to the young people to prepare themselves to enter in and reap the harvest. At the close of the sermon, Mr. Pope said he had long hoped and prayed that from the young people of our church there might be many whom God should call to the work of ministers and teachers, and then asked all the young men who were ready to consecrate themselves to such work, and by thorough study fit themselves for it, to come forward and occupy seats at the left of the pulpit; and young ladies who would give themselves to the work of teaching, and study with that in view, to take seats at the right of the pulpit; immediately nine young men and fifteen young ladies and girls came forward, while every heart in the house seemed to be thrilled in response to the call."

The dedication of Fisk University took place Jan. 1st, 1876. The occasion was joyous, yet there were many hearts burdened for the spiritual baptism of the faculty and students in their new and beautiful home. This feeling was indicated throughout the three days of dedicatory services. The revival which came soon after is thus described by Mrs. Spence:

"For weeks before we left the old place, as soon as it was certainly known that we were to dedicate Jubilee Hall the first of January, there was a great coming unto God. If ever that prayer was sincerely made since the days of Moses, I believe it was made with us: 'If thy presence go not up with me, carry us not up hence.' We felt that we needed not only to dedicate that house, but we needed such a dedication of ourselves as should swallow up the hindrances of years; that we must be in such an attitude that God could bless us, and work through us. Outwardly the revival may be said to have commenced on the Sabbath, Jan. 16. Previous to this there had been some very searching sermons.

"At the Sunday night prayer meeting there was a great spirit of confession and of humiliation; and near the close Mr. Spence asked all those who felt that they had backslidden from God and would like to be prayed for, and wanted to say so, to rise up with him. God gave a good many of us strength to do it, and we got a great blessing. On the Wednesday night following we had a deeply interesting meeting. It seemed as if God had come down among us. Friday, the 21st, was set apart as a day of special prayer and humiliation to all who would like to avail themselves of the opportunity. I think it was quite generally observed. The next day, Saturday, there was one conversion. On Sunday three other persons were converted. Others followed, until last week, the number was ten.

"Last Sabbath, Jan. 23d, was a wonderful day; seven anxious souls found peace. On Monday the feeling was such that the morning exercises became an inquiry meeting. In that meeting a young man who had been under conviction, rose and said: 'I have been seeking Him a long time; now I see the way; now I know that I am a Christian.' During the day six more came into the light; recitations stopped of themselves; students were so broken they could neither study nor recite. A room was designated where Christians might come to meet those who wished for religious conversation or prayer. Yesterday there were four conversions: to-day there have been four. There have been now over thirty conversions; but O, this is only the beginning; there are stout-hearted ones not yet brought in.

"Wednesday night, half past nine. We have just come up from our weekly prayer meeting. I never was in such a meeting before. Older Christians sat still; we let the converts talk; they pressed upon each other: I never heard such testimony before, so clear, so simple, so decided: there was no mere sentiment, no talking at random; they all testified to the power of faith; the burden of it was, 'when I believed.' One young man said: 'I am alive; I was dead; my soul was asleep: now my soul is alive; I feel the love of God' Many said: 'I thank God I came to Fisk University.' 'I thank God He led me to Fisk University.'"

In a subsequent letter Mrs. Spence describes the communion season which followed the revival:

"One week ago last Sunday thirty-two of our dear young people united themselves with our church. There were several who had applied for admission, and did not join till they could hear from home. O what a day it was! The communion before was at the dedication. What a change in six weeks! Then our hearts were bowed before God, pleading that this house might be filled with His presence. We know now that God has accepted this house to put His name here; His presence has overshadowed it. We prayed that He would come till His presence could be felt, and He has answered our prayers. Henceforth we want Fisk University to be a school where the Spirit of God will dwell, where young men and women will be stimulated to earnestness and consecration, where ministers and missionaries will be trained, and all its children shall be taught of God."

Miss Matson adds some particulars:

"I wish I could photograph our prayer-meeting to-night to you. Teachers, and, to quite an extent, older Christian students, give place in many of our meetings, so that the young converts may have greater opportunities; then two and three will be on the floor at once, eager to speak; and often, in prayers, it is the same. A little boy, who has been converted in the primary school, made a most touching prayer; there were not many dry eyes in the room when he ceased—'Dear Jesus, please to convert my parents; and grant before this month is out, that all of our families may be Christians; and O, send a great many people from America to Africa, and the islands, where they don't know anything about Jesus, to tell about Him to those poor people.' A young man said, he used to wonder when he saw Christians mourning over sinners, he thought if he was a Christian he should let that satisfy him, and enjoy it, but he had found religion to be the first good thing he wanted to share with all the world. He said when he came here he found Jubilee Hall a different place from what he had expected; he supposed they would have preaching on the Sabbath; probably would open the school with prayer; but he did not suppose they would pray all the time—all over the building—the young men's hall was full of prayer, they came to his room and troubled it with their prayers, till he asked the Lord to make the young men let him alone. Now he blessed God that they did not let him alone. When he began to seek the Lord, he prayed in two different closets, and every corner of his room, but he never found God till he let go of his sins, then he fell into the arms of Jesus, and He caught him.

"Many of the young men who have been converted have been engaged in barber-shops, where they worked on the Sabbath. This has always been a struggle, for in several instances it was giving up their only means of coming to school. A young man who resisted long before yielding, finally said that was the thing he could not give up, but he did at last trust God for employment, and found great peace. He went to his employer, and told him he could not work on the Sabbath now, for he was a Christian, and so wonderfully did the Lord care for him that he was allowed to remain in the place, working only week days."

At Woodbridge, N. C., the A. M. A. has a school and a church. Miss Waugh is the teacher of the former, and the latter is without a pastor. The revival interest detailed below is due, instrumentally, to the teacher. She has no help except as she can secure the services occasionally of a minister on the Sabbath. We trust her toil and faith will reap yet larger harvests.

"The good work of the Lord goes on slowly and surely. Monday night our hearts were made very glad by the conversion of the most prominent man in the community, the secretary of our Band of Hope. Last night he spoke earnestly to his unconverted neighbors. Yesterday he erected the family altar in his house, making the third family within sight of the chapel where the father leads in prayer, who, three weeks ago was unconverted.

"Our hearts are made to rejoice almost every night by some token of answered prayer. Since Wednesday, five men, all heads of families, have come forward for prayers; the wives of two of them were converted on Wednesday night. Five or six of my older scholars are also seeking Jesus. Saturday I received a letter from a young man who went from school the first of the year to teach, saying that he had given his heart to Jesus, and meant to live henceforth for Him who died for him. Another answer to prayer. I can only say 'Praise the Lord.' The house was crowded full on Wednesday night, more than could be seated. They come for miles all around us, and as they go back they kindle the fire, and they tell me that revivals have commenced all around us."

A great work of grace, culminating in the day of "prayer for colleges," was enjoyed at Atlanta University, and is thus described by Prof. Francis:

"You will rejoice to know that we are in the midst of a glorious work of grace in this institution. It is four years, at least, since there has been any such general and deep religious interest as now seems to pervade all classes and to reach almost every heart. There has been, for some weeks, a growing seriousness, which manifested itself in the increased fidelity and prayerfulness of Christians, found expression during the week of prayer, which was faithfully observed, and culminated in the meeting on the day of prayer for colleges.

"At the meeting on the last Sabbath evening in January, a very remarkable expression of feeling was manifested, and twenty-five persons arose and desired the prayers of others in their behalf; some in sentences of a few words only, and others in remarks taking two or three moments to utter, and each independent of the others, rising in his own seat. Special meetings have been held for a week past, with a steady maintenance of interest, and a uniform attendance. Quite a number profess a hope in Christ, and give evidence that a change has taken place in their characters. Many others seem to be deeply interested in the salvation of their souls, and almost every day another is added to the number.

"The work has had one of its chief manifestations in the renewed consecration of Christians, and the importance of this cannot be overestimated, when the circumstances are understood. A large part of the students have a nominal connection with some church before coming here, and so far as they don't live a true Christian life constitute a dead weight upon all Christian activity. We believe that a number of this class have been really converted, or led on to a permanent consecration to Christ's service.

"There is a great increase of mission interest, and the contributions at our monthly concerts this year are twice as large as ever before. We think some are ready to say, 'Here am I; send me.' Pray for us that we may have wisdom and strength to reap this harvest, and that the good cause may be greatly built up here."

At a later date, Prof. Francis gives further particulars, especially interesting as showing how different races become one in Christ:

"At our April Communion season yesterday, seven persons were received into membership in our church, five of them upon profession of faith, as a part of the fruit of the blessed work of grace we have enjoyed for the last few weeks. Others have already joined churches at their homes, and a few more will do so. We think that at least twenty have found the Lord, and give good promise of holding out, while a most precious work has been done for many Christians who had wandered from the fold, and were not living active lives. Of the seven who united with the church yesterday, one was a daughter of teachers from New Jersey, one was a Swedish girl, a member of one of the families, and four represented four different sections of this State. Two had been connected with Congregational churches, one had been reared as a Baptist, one had been trained as a Lutheran, and three had been under the influence of different branches of the Methodist church. They represented three different races, and were of several different colors, and we rejoiced that they could all be 'one in Christ.' I mention these facts to indicate how in our work sometimes the ends of the earth seem to be brought together, and how we are permitted to anticipate the day when caste and all other unchristian barriers shall be broken down, and the very spirit of Christ shall prevail."

A refreshing season was enjoyed at Athens, Ala., and is thus briefly referred to by Miss Wells, the teacher:

"The Holy Spirit is striving with the hearts of our students. Nearly all who have not found the Saviour are asking what they shall do to be saved. Four have come into the light to-day. What can we do but work and pray for these burdened ones?"

Rev. Mr. Roberts, the pastor, adds:

"Our meeting still goes on; we have had about thirty converts, and from thirty to sixty inquirers. The work seems to stand still amongst the students, but outsiders are coming in two or three a night."

The Central Church (colored) in New Orleans, La., had been for some time without a settled pastor. The advent of Rev. W. S. Alexander was welcomed as the beginning of brighter days. It proved to be so in the filling up of the congregation, in the increasing consecration of the membership, and soon in a blessed revival. The facts are thus given by Bro. Alexander:

"I have 'glad tidings' to send you from Central Church. For several weeks the spirit of inquiry has manifested itself in the Congregation, in a deeper and more tender interest in the preaching of the word. Christians have been quickened. Some, from whose hearts the Christian hope had well nigh departed, have been recovered and are now rejoicing in a better hope and a higher consecration.

"The conversions which have already occurred, ten in number, are of that clear and decided type that admits no doubt of their genuineness. I have never in my ministry seen deeper conviction of sin, or in the hour of conversion a more intelligent trust in the Saviour. After days of prayer and earnest seeking these same souls have found peace in believing, and their hope is as decided as was their conviction. On last Sabbath morning, after the service, a young girl, a daughter of one of our officers, who had been seeking most earnestly for a week, came to me, and with smiles and tears said to me, 'O, I am saved! I am saved!' and she went from one to another of the congregation who lingered, and told them of her joy and gratitude, and her tears of gladness called forth tears of sympathy from many eyes. The work is spreading. Some of our leading men are deeply interested, and have given me their solemn pledge that they will seek until they find. It is God's work, and we believe He will carry it on until our eyes behold blessed results.

Rev. Mr. Adams, of Straight University, makes this brief mention of the influence of the work in that institution:

"I am happy to be able to say that the religious interest in the school (Straight University) is on the increase. The prayer meeting yesterday was the best we have ever had here. Two more students professed their faith in Christ. Many stood up to tell how much joy and peace they had found in believing on Him. Nearly all the unconverted students present rose for prayers, and expressed their desire to become Christians. Ten are now numbered among the converts, and I think there will be more."

The ingathering of souls is thus gratefully described by Mr. Alexander:

"The revival in Central Church, of which I wrote to you in March, has been in uninterrupted progress since, and the interest is still very deep and tender, with a larger number of inquirers than at any previous time.

"The decided evidences of God's convicting and converting grace for which I have always longed in my ministry, in precious seasons like this, have here been given, with hardly an exceptional case. There has been no instance of professed conversion marked by mere emotion and sympathy which would create a suspicion of its genuineness, but under God's guiding hand all have been led on step by step into the kingdom. As an illustration of this fact, I may mention the experience of a member of the Board of Trustees, who was under the deepest conviction for many days. I thought I had seen strong men weep, but really I never did until I saw this noble man. Tear drops, like the summer rain, fell from his eyes to the floor, night after night. His eyes were constantly swollen with weeping. But at last light broke in upon his burdened soul, and from that hour his peace has been like the river, so deep and full, 'the peace of God which passeth all understanding.'

"Sunday, March 26th, was the day of our precious ingathering. On the Thursday night preceding our preparatory service, the candidates presented themselves for examination. It was an open examination in presence of the church and congregation. Each one, from the dear boy of twelve years to the man and woman of forty, stood up, as their names were called, and told 'what the Lord had done for their souls.' God made all our hearts tender, and tears of joy and gratitude were mingled with the tears of these converts, 'newly born' into the Redeemer's kingdom.

"The morning of the Sabbath was peaceable and beautiful. The congregation which gathered was large, and deeply impressed with the occasion. After two beautiful children had been consecrated to God in baptism, twenty-three adults came forward to take the vows of God upon them. Six were received by letter, and seventeen on profession of their faith in the Redeemer, nine of whom received baptism. Eight were members of Straight University. After they had given their assent to the 'Creed' and the 'Covenant,' the right hand of fellowship was given, and we sat down together at the table of our Lord. This precious Sabbath has passed into our memories as one of the brightest and best of our lives.

"And the good work goes on. Since communion day, March 26, seventeen decided cases of conversion have occurred, and the number of inquirers, all earnest, and some I believe very near the light, already reaches thirty. Many are students of the University, where they have daily prayer-meetings, and where the teachers are untiring in their devotion and faithfulness."

Emerson Institute, Mobile, Ala., was blessed with a revival among its pupils. Rev. Mr. Lord refers thus briefly to the awakening, and its connection with the contemplated organization of a new church:

"We are having a most precious work of grace. Our whole school is moved, and ten have already been hopefully converted. An outsider would hardly think anything unusual going on, and yet seventy-five have risen very thoughtfully for prayers. Our new church is feeling the effects, and several will unite upon the first Communion."

Later, Mr. Lord adds:

"The blessed work of the Spirit continues. Fifty of our older scholars have given the brightest and clearest proof of leaving all to follow the Master. The work is spreading into all the colored churches. Our scholars have gone to work at once. Twenty may join the First Congregational Church. The building is to be dedicated next Sabbath, and the first communion observed. The church starts off with bright prospects."

Talladega, Ala., has enjoyed its share of this blessing. Prof. Safford writes:

"We are in the midst of a refreshing from God's presence. On Saturday night, twenty-six came forward for prayers. Several had expressed a change before that. Last night (Sabbath) the church was crowded and many came forward. In our own family of students but one remains who has not manifested an interest in these meetings. Several, who have been here for years and seemed past all hope, are showing a deep interest. The meetings are quiet and free from all noisy demonstrations."

The pastor of the church, Rev. Mr. Marts, adds:

"The Lord has been, and is, evidently present with us to seek and save sinners. More than twenty have been converted, and more are anxiously inquiring the way. The meetings are almost ideal ones for their quietness, order and seriousness. We have a separate room for inquirers, where we converse and pray with them in a whisper. I suggested this to the workers, as the best way, perhaps, to prevent the attention of the anxious ones being divided, and it seems to yield good results."

A small but valuable addition was made to the church in Wilmington, N. C. One of the teachers writes:

"Wednesday evening, March 29, was a joyful one to the Congregational Church in Wilmington—small in membership but great in faith—for on that evening seven precious souls were gathered into its sheltering fold from out the darkness around it. The services were held in the school-room, which becomes our chapel on Sundays. At the close of the sermon the candidates went forward, and gave hearty and emphatic assent to the Articles of Faith and Covenant of the Church. Thus was added to this little church a force which will give it a strong impetus in its onward course, for each possesses an active, earnest, Christian character. Two young couples were among the number. They are all young except one, who is a 'mother in Israel.' Three of the number have had to endure persecutions that bear close resemblance to inquisitorial times, bodily torture excepted. Our hope rests with the young! There are two large Bible classes, of forty men, and fifty women, and it would be difficult to find a nobler set of representative young people anywhere than is gathered into our Sunday-school. The superintendent holds a large Bible class immediately after the morning service. Many who attend these Bible services are from other churches. They come here, they say, 'to be fed out of the Word of God.' The good seed so faithfully sown is springing into life, and we trust will soon yield a plenteous harvest.

FOUNDING OF CHURCHES—DEDICATIONS.

The formation of the "Union Congregational Church of Jacksonville, Fla," and the dedication of its house of worship, is described by Rev. C. L. Woodworth, Dist. Sec. of the A. M. A., who was present and conducted the services. This is not a Mission church, nor is it connected with the A. M. A., but its object and spirit so fully harmonize with our aims in the South that we rejoice to put the facts on record.

"This is the first church of the Congregational order planted in Florida. The persons united in this enterprise, are residents of Jacksonville, formerly from the North, and largely from New England. And it may be said of all of them, without exception, that they had tried for years to labor with the other churches of the city, while all the time sincerely preferring their own polity. But a series of events, over which they had no control, seemed at last to lay upon them the necessity to plan for a church of their own. Accordingly they began to meet in each other's houses for prayer and consultation with reference to such an undertaking. The meetings were held for months, growing in interest and in numbers, until finally these brethren resolved to go forward in the strength of God and plant the church of their early love. And it would seem as if the repressed energy of years were put into the work. For they not only had a mind to build, but they set their hands to it with such energy that in just eight weeks from the time the first spadeful of earth was taken out for the foundations, the house was dedicated to the worship of God. Every step of the way seemed indicated by the finger of Providence. Indeed, the whole history of the enterprise is marked by tokens of divine direction and favor.

"It was the privilege of the writer to be present and supervise the work of organizing the church. He preached the first sermons in the new church on the first Sabbath in January, to full and eager audiences. The ensuing week was occupied in preparing confession and covenant, in receiving the names and letters of those desiring to enter into the movement. Thirty-eight names of such were registered, of whom twenty-one had letters, and the Sabbath following, Jan. 9th, they were organized into the 'Union Congregational Church of Jacksonville.' At the same time the new house of worship, 40x60, was dedicated, and the whole cause committed to the care and favor of Almighty God.

"While it is hoped and believed that this new church will be a center for the spread of the Pilgrim faith throughout Florida and the regions around, we would have it distinctly understood that the Congregational church has no mission in the South to pull down other churches or to proselyte from them. But it is under bonds to add the measure of its Christian force to that of the other churches, to save the perishing multitudes there and everywhere. And unless we would compel our members, who emigrate from New England and the North, to forsake their own church, we must plant that church throughout the South. But if not for their own members, they should do it for the sake of the colored people, who need the freedom, the purity, and the intelligence of its ministrations."

The formation of the church in Mobile, Ala., was foreshadowed in what has been said of the revival in Emerson Institute. It may be proper to add that the church was originally Presbyterian, formed by the colored members who had been members of the white Presbyterian churches of the city. The change to the Congregational polity was made by the cheerful concurrence of all parties concerned. From the Emerson Institute Sentinel we furnish this sketch of the council called for the recognition of the church:

"A Council of Congregational Churches of Alabama met, by invitation, in the First Congregational Church of Mobile, on Scott street, April 8, 1876, for the purpose of considering whether the organization of the First Congregational Church of Mobile had been regular and satisfactory, and if so to receive it into their fellowship. The Council was composed of Rev. G. S. Pope, pastor of the First Congregational Church of Selma, Alabama; Mr. Lanier, delegate; Rev. W. G. Marts, pastor of the First Congregational Church, Talladega, Ala., Rev. G. W. Andrews, minister without charge, Talladega, Ala.: Rev. E. C. Stickel, pastor of First Congregational Church, Montgomery, Ala.; Miss H. M. Leonard, delegate. The Council was organized with Bro. G. W. Andrews as moderator. The clerk of the church, Rev. E. P. Lord, then gave a brief history of the church, and read the Articles of Faith and Constitution adopted by it. The proceedings of the church were unanimously voted by the Council to be satisfactory, and the Council commended the church for the care with which they had proceeded. The organization of the church was here approved by the Rev. Dr. Burgett, pastor of First (white) Presbyterian Church of Mobile, who was present.

"After arranging exercises for a formal recognition of the church Sabbath night, the Council adjourned till that time. In the evening Rev. W. G. Marts preached to a good congregation an able sermon from Acts 24: 25. Sabbath morning was solemnized by administering the sacrament of baptism to six who presented themselves for that purpose.

"Sabbath afternoon, at 3: 30, found the church full to overflowing, waiting the services of dedication. After Scripture reading by Rev. W. G. Marts, and a prayer, Rev. G. W. Andrews delivered a powerful sermon on Christian Love from 1 Cor. xiii: 31. Then Mr. Scipio Brown, in the name of the trustees of the church, in a few words, gave the house to God. This was followed by a consecrating prayer offered by Rev. E. C. Stickel, which, with an anthem and doxology, concluded the services."

The house of worship at Athens, Ala., whose erection is so largely due to the untiring energy and perseverance of Miss Wells, the principal of the school, and to the help of the colored people, is sketched in a letter from Rev. H. S. Bennett:

"I have just returned from Athens, Ala., where I have been to assist in the dedication of the beautiful little church which they have just finished, and I write to give you some impression of the field in that village and the surrounding country. The occasion was a delightful one. In the morning of the Sabbath, July 2d, I preached and administered the Lord's Supper.

"The dedication took place at 8 P. M. The house was filled to overflowing by a deeply interested audience. The capacity of the building is about two hundred and twenty-five, when the seats are all taken. It is a little gem, about 24x36 feet, of brick, and is beautifully finished inside. All classes agree that it is the neatest church in the place. The choir of the school had several beautiful anthems ready for the occasion. I preached the sermon from Romans 1: 16. Rev. Lindsey A. Roberts, the pastor, offered the dedicatory prayer, and Miss M. F. Wells, the principal of the school, gave a touching history of the struggles of the little band in their efforts to build this church. The exercises were interesting, and the congregation were deeply impressed.

"The church is now the strongest colored church in the place. It has about fifty members, who are the young and intelligent pupils of Miss Well's school."

A new chapel was begun in the Spring for the church in Savannah. It was not quite completed when the vacation came. The terrible visitation of yellow fever in that city will delay the finishing, but it is hoped that it will be ready for use soon after the return of Rev. R. F. Markham, the efficient missionary pastor. The inconvenience to this church of worshipping in the chapel of Beach Institute was so great that the new building became a necessity. Its prosperity is quite important to the welfare of the numerous mission stations in and around Savannah.

CONGREGATIONAL CONFERENCES.

Our churches in the South are widely scattered, and the missionaries are poor, hence it is difficult to secure frequent gatherings for conference. The Central South Conference maintains its regular annual meetings with increased interest. We copy from the American Missionary a brief notice of its last meeting:

"The Fifth Annual Meeting of the CENTRAL SOUTH CONFERENCE was held recently in Nashville, Tenn. It represented about twenty churches in the central portion of the Southern States. It was composed of black and white ministers and delegates—no colored line being drawn or thought of. It welcomed a few visitors to a share in its deliberations, and here again were whites and blacks. On the Sunday it filled the pulpits of the colored churches of the city, and of one white church which extended an invitation for supply.

"The meeting was a good one. The narrative of religion was encouraging. Two topics of much interest were discussed: The Influence of Romanism on the Freedmen, and the Relations of the Freedmen to Africa. On the latter subject, the papers and addresses at the annual meeting of this Association were in part read before the Conference, and produced a marked impression—awakening a new enthusiasm for the preparation of missionaries for Africa. We learn that, since the meeting, preliminary steps have been taken at Fisk University to organize a 'Society for the Evangelization of Africa'—its members pledging themselves to pray, give or go, as God shall enable and direct. The students of Fisk are represented as 'aglow with the subject.' We hope the flame will burn bright and steady, and extend to all our institutions in the South."

The Conference of Southeastern Georgia is composed of churches founded by the A. M. A. It embraces the churches of Savannah, Ga., Charleston, S. C., and the mission churches near Savannah. The pastors of most of these mission churches are also teachers of schools in their church buildings. Rev. Mr. Markham, pastor of the church in Savannah, gives an account of the recent meeting of this Conference, from which we abridge these items:

THE SOUTHEASTERN GEORGIA CONFERENCE of Congregational Churches held an interesting meeting last week. There are seven churches connected with this Conference. All were represented except one. The reports from the churches were very encouraging. All are regularly supplied with preaching, and in a good spiritual state. Each church has had accessions by profession within the last few weeks.

The MIDWAY DORCHESTER CHURCH, Liberty county. Rev. F. Snelson is pastor. This church, the survivor of the old Midway Congregational Church, was organized in its present form only about two years ago. They are building a church which will cost over $2,000, sixty by fifty feet. We held service in the new church, though not yet finished. Nearly five hundred persons were present. We held Communion in connection with the meeting, and fifteen persons united with the Midway Church, most of them from the Sabbath-school. This church received sixty-two members during the year, and has now one hundred and seventy-five members. There is a flourishing day school connected with this church of over one hundred scholars.

BELMONT CHURCH. The pastor, James Fleming, a licentiate, teaches a day-school of seventy-five scholars. Fifteen persons united with this church this year, and five now stand propounded for membership.

PILGRIM CHURCH, WOODVILLE, has built a house of worship, twenty-six by forty-six feet. This church was very small—only twelve members. Bro. H. H. Sangstacke their pastor, teaches a day-school of ninety scholars in his church, has a flourishing Sabbath-school of seventy-five scholars, and a fine congregation, varying on Sabbath evenings from one hundred and fifty to three hundred. Fifteen persons recently united with the church, and twenty-two more stand propounded for membership.

The OGEECHEE CHURCH is growing, under the care of Rev. J. B. Cuthbert Five have been added this year.

LOUISVILLE CHURCH is small; received two members.

The SAVANNAH CHURCH in the city have laid the foundation for a new chapel. The church is growing in numbers and spirituality. The Sabbath-school is increasing every Sabbath; there is a very interesting Bible meeting held on Tuesday evenings, conducted by the pastor; much enthusiasm is manifested in this meeting.

The CHARLESTON CHURCH was not represented.

A new mission has just been started at EAST SAVANNAH, which it is hoped will soon grow into a church.

The Conference licensed five persons to preach. There were interesting discussions on Sabbath-schools, temperance and education. All agreed that it was the best Conference they had ever held. There is a great work to do here.

A new Conference was formed in Alabama in April last. The Emerson Institute Sentinel gives this brief account of its organization.

"The ministers and delegates of the Congregational Churches of Alabama met in Montgomery, Thursday, April 6th, at the invitation of the church at Montgomery. Rev. G. W. Andrews of Talladega, was chosen Moderator.

"Articles of faith and a covenant were adopted and a State Conference fully organized. There are now twelve Congregational churches in Alabama; one in Montgomery, one in Selma, one in Marion, one in Athens, one in Mobile, and several in and about Talladega. These have been built up in six years, and the denomination is rapidly growing in the State. The meeting was one of very great interest, and the members are looking forward with much interest to the meeting next year at Marion."

Rev. G. S. Pope adds a few particulars:

"The Congregational churches of the State met with Bro. Stickel's church in Montgomery, April 6th, and organized "THE GENERAL CONFERENCE OF CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES IN ALABAMA." We have twelve churches in the State now, so I think we can claim to be the banner State in the South.

"A peculiar and important feature of our organization is that we have an Executive Committee of three, whose duty it is to provide for holding Sunday-school Teachers' Institutes and Theological Institutes in connection with the yearly conference, and aid in revival work. We have felt the need of a State Superintendent to attend to this work and the organization of new churches, but supposing the American Missionary Association would not feel, under its present pressure, authorized to keep a man in the field for this work, we have determined to make the best stagger we can in attempting to walk alone."

THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS.

The theological students in the schools of the A. M. A. are usually very poor. The letter below from one of their teachers gives some touching facts. A student-aid fund is essential to the continuance of the mass of these young men in their courses of study.

"Connected with our school is a theological class of thirteen members. They are all poor men—several of them with families—who are practicing an amount of fortitude and patience under sacrifices and privations, which is truly wonderful. Like the disciples of old, some of them have left all to follow Christ in most cases that all being as little as was that of the disciples.

"Some of these men preach to Congregational churches which have been established at different points—children of the Church in this place; others hold Sabbath schools in dark places which have but this one ray of light. This work is of great value, giving these men experience, and also reacting upon the work here, by inciting the young people to attend this school, who, in their turn become prepared to carry on the work. Thus the work spreads, though slowly.

"How some of these men live is a mystery. Two of the most efficient workers receive less than one hundred dollars each per year, which must cover family expenses for themselves and wives, books, paper and other school expenses. One, who is a faithful worker, was engaged in mission work during the summer; he had two revivals in which many were converted. For this work he has not received one cent. Others, who held meetings, received only the food they ate while holding them. One walked fifty or sixty miles to find a school, taught three months, but has not received a penny for his labor. While the laborer is worthy of his hire, it may properly be asked, 'Why don't the people for whom they labor pay them?' It is because they are too poor. Occasionally some one gives a chicken, cabbage, pumpkin, etc., which is all he can do. These men in going out to their work travel from five to fifty-two miles at every trip—those whose trips are twenty miles and upwards, go by rail, costing from $1 to $2.60 per trip, which they pay from their small salary. All others walk. One Sabbath one of them walked six miles to open a Sunday school, went from house to house to notify the people, held his Sunday school, and then walked back. Not long since another was to walk twelve miles, preach, and then walk back, but a mule was obtained for him. I presume he has been obliged to walk since, for mules are not always so easily secured.

"This walking over rough roads is hard work, aside from the fact that shoes wear out, and there is not money to buy more. It is also necessary that their teacher visit the young churches occasionally, to administer the communion and baptism, and to admit members, as he is the only ordained minister here, and has 'the care of all the churches.' If he goes by rail he must be gone two nights, but this is too great a tax on his time and strength, for his duties here are both numerous and arduous. Then, if he could do it, the colored people live in such small cabins, usually of one room, and are so poor, that they could hardly find room for him, and white people could with difficulty be found who would have 'a nigger preacher' in their houses."

The gratitude of some of these students for assistance, as well as incidental allusions to their wants and trials, are well presented in the following extracts from letters written in acknowledgment of aid furnished them.

From P. W. Young.

"It is with much gratitude, that I write you a short letter. I wish to return to you my sincere thanks for the money that I received from you. It could not have come in a better time for I was greatly in need of funds to pay my expenses. It troubles me to think that I cannot find the way in which I should express my thanks to my Northern friends as I should.

"We have a fine school at present. I am studying systematic theology, and I like it more than any study that I have ever pursued. I have a fine Sabbath-school, about thirteen miles from here, to which I go every other Sabbath. It numbers about one hundred and twenty-five. I enjoy teaching them very much with three or four of their number to assist me.

"I taught school five months last summer and part of the fall, but my wages were only twenty-five dollars a month and I could not save much at that price, especially as it was discounted so heavily. I have not got all my pay yet either."

From B. H. Hudson.

"I have received twenty-five dollars out of the funds you sent for the aid of students who are in need, and are preparing themselves for life's work.

"I have taught for several years past, during vacation. My salary has been small, mostly paid in State money, worth from eighty to ninety cents on the dollar. I have often failed to get my pay, even in State money. My aim is to complete a normal course of study, if I can, though the way sometimes seems dark.

"With the aid I have received from your contribution, for which you have my hearty thanks, I shall try to work my way through the present session of school. I am endeavoring to fit myself for the Lord's service, a service that is demanding laborers now, for our people are suffering from the want of proper leaders and teachers."

From J. R. McLean.

"Through the kindness of Prof. A. A. Safford, I got a portion of the money you sent to him. I am not able to tell the good it will do me, but I feel sure it will not be spent in vain. I was needing some money very much just then, because I got nothing for my work during the summer. I taught two months and have not received any pay yet, and I am not sure of getting anything at all.

"I hope I shall be able to continue in school until I shall be able to do a good work for the Master, for I feel that the work is great and there are so few who are taking hold of it."

An editorial in the "American Missionary" makes some suggestions as to the modes in which the benefactions intended for these students may be given.

"Many of our friends are contributing funds to aid the students in the South. Some of these gifts are for particular students; others are to be assigned at the discretion of the Association. The latter is the better way; for the individual student may be taken sick, or die, or prove unworthy; while the teachers can always make judicious selection and appropriation—changing, if need be, the beneficiary."

"The principal of one of our schools wrote us not long since that some of his best scholars would be compelled to leave school for lack of means. But by taking the small donations which had gathered in our hands, we were enabled to send him two hundred dollars with which to meet the emergency. The wise use of that sum was just the help to the many in the time of need.

"If we are, in this way, entrusted with funds to aid students, we will encourage them to express their gratitude through the columns of the "Missionary," thus reaching the donors, and we hope, awakening an interest in the minds of other liberal friends."

The awakened interest among our students in the great work of African evangelization is attested by the following items from the "American Missionary."

"It will gratify the friends of the colored race to know that the enthusiasm for African evangelization which was enkindled afresh at our recent Annual Meeting, is extending among our institutions and churches in the South.

"Soon after the Annual Meeting, Secretary Strieby attended the meeting of the Central South Confereuce, held in Nashville, and presented to the members of the body and to the members of Fisk University, an outline of the Papers read and the Speeches made at Middletown. The seed fell upon good soil, for the ministers present, and the teachers and students of the Universiiy cherished a warm interest in Africa. In the University, immediate steps were taken to give some permanent form to the awakened zeal, and in December a society was organized, the members pledging themselves to aid in the regeneration of Africa.

"The first public meeting, at which the Society was inaugurated, Jan. 2, 1876, was in connection with the dedicatory services of Fisk University. The very instructive address of Rev. G. D. Pike was then delivered before the Society, and seemed to arouse still more the enthusiasm of the students. The second meeting was held Jan. 30, at which there were religious exercises, addresses and a collection. It is the intention of the Society to get out circulars, asking all colored schools throughout the South, and especially those under the care of the American Missionary Association, to form similar societies, to exchange reports, and at length to hold a general conference of the societies."

From Mobile, Rev. E. P. Lord writes regarding the missionary meeting, as follows:

"We hold monthly missionary meetings which are attended with great interest. At the December meeting a report of the work already done in Africa, and of its present needs and relation to the educated colored people of America was given, and awakened great interest among the older students; previous to this, one of the young women had expressed a desire to become a missionary to Africa, and since then he said it was her intention to fit herself for that work.

"The interest is a growing one, and we feel confident that more of our students will see the need of work there, and will be glad to say, 'Send me.'"

From Tougaloo and Selma we also hear that the subject is awakening interest. We clip from the "Advance" the following, showing that the students in our Le Moyne Institute are awakened to the subject:

"On to Africa by way of the Southern States!" is becoming at least quite a familiar thought, if not a saying, to many interested in foreign missions. The lively interest felt by the students in our schools seems to encourage this hope. Soon after the day of the Week of Prayer, devoted to missions, our students and teachers formed what was called the Le Moyne Missionary Society. In two or three days over $70 was raisod to be sent for the support of a native missionary worker at some point in Africa. We hope to make the amount $100. So far all has been given by students and teachers. Several of our most promising pupils express an earnest desire and a longing to be prepared and able some day to go to their Fatherland, and carry the light of the gospel."

HAMPTON NORMAL AND AGRICULTURAL INSTITUTE.

The annual examination of this Institute occurred May 18th, a little earlier than usual. There is steady progress in the work done by this excellent school. The graduating class numbered forty-five, the largest ever sent forth, and their examination and addresses were an improvement upon the past. The addresses, for range of topics, and skill in handling, and effectiveness in delivery, would have done honor to many a white institution of like grade in the North. The industrial department—including the wide range of field, fruit and stock, of sewing and cooking, and of printing, is prosperous. The farm, under bright May skies and diligent and judicious culture, was especially attractive. The press where the Southern Workman is printed, occupies less space, but may in the end be found to be doing as large a work.

In the public exercises of the day, the graduating class necessarily occupied so much of the time that there was little space for addresses from others, yet those we did enjoy lacked neither in ability nor variety. Three brief speeches were made, by Dr. Schaff (a German) Dr. Braden (an Englishman) and Prof. Newell (an Irishman.)

[From the Norfolk Virginian.]

HAMPTON NORMAL AND AGRICULTURAL INSTITUTE.

The anniversary exercises of the Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute were held yesterday, and showed a marked advance in the admirable course of instruction pursued. A large number of patrons and friends of the Institution and other invited guests from both the North and South were in attendance, and all seemed highly pleased with the evidence of progress made. The morning hours were occupied in the assembly room, and the five other recitation rooms, in each of which three or four classes were examined at different hours. The branches of study are the useful rather than the ornamental, designed to fit the students to go forth as teachers; to impart to their race a solid, practical English education—or to fill other positions of beneficent and elevating influence among them. Two hundred and eleven students, male and female, have been in attendance during the past year, of whom forty-five were in the graduating class.

After the morning examinations, the visitors were invited to inspect the various buildings and departments of the Institution, the girl's industrial room, the dining room, kitchen and laundry in Virginia Hall, and the printing office and mechanical workshops in the basement; also the agricultural department, the barn stalls for live stock, orchards, grain fields, vegetable patches, etc., which are admirable in all their appointments and products, the labor being all performed by the students in part payment for their board and tuition.

A beautiful collation was served to about two hundred guests at the residence of the Principal, General S. C. Armstrong, after which the rhetorical exercises were held in the spacious chapel in Virginia Hall, which is one of the finest educational edifices in the country, and to which Academic Hall, in which the recitation rooms are situated, is inferior only in size. These exercises consisted of poetical recitations, original orations and essays by ten members of the graduating class, who acquitted themselves in a manner to reflect the highest honor on the Institution, and give evidence of the thoroughness with which they had pursued their studies, and would have done credit to an institution of far higher pretensions. The fact is especially worthy of mention that although several of the pieces had special reference to the past and future of the colored race, no traces of bitterness, but on the contrary, the kindest sentiments, were expressed throughout.

The music which added so much to the pleasures of the entertainment, was unique for such an occasion. It was not the usual performance of an orchestra or brass band (though very creditable outdoor music was furnished by the latter, organized among the students) but by the "Hampton Singers," whose popular songs have been received with such favor in their extended tour throughout the country, and no better nor more acceptable music could have been furnished. The richness of voice and perfect time and harmony with which the plaintive plantation songs as well as pieces of higher character were rendered, made this one of the most delightful features of the occasion.

At the conclusion of these exercises, the diplomas were delivered to the members of the graduating class by Rev. Dr. Whipple, President of the Board of Trustees and Corresponding Secretary of the American Missionary Association, (under whose auspices the Institution had its origin,) with a few touching words of farewell.

Brief and earnest addresses of congratulation and commendation were then delivered by Rev. Dr. Schaff, Professor in Union Theological Seminary of New York City; Rev. Dr. Braden, editor of the Independent of London, now on a visit to this country, and Professor Newell, Superintendent of Education of the State of Maryland, after which the whole audience united in singing "Old Coronation," and the exercises were concluded with prayer and the benediction by Rev. Dr. Schaff.

This proved to be one of the most successful and satisfactory anniversaries of this noble and prosperous Institution. We were happy to see a large delegation from Norfolk among the guests, and among them some of our most prominent citizens. May the Hampton Institute long continue its useful and honorable career.

A VISIT TO BEREA COLLEGE.

BY REV. R. L. BRECK, D.D., OF THE SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, CHANCELLOR OF CENTRAL UNIVERSITY, AND EDITOR OF THE TRANSYLVANIAN PRESBYTERIAN.

[From an Editorial in the Transylvanian Presbyterian, July 14, 1876.]

"This institution has great notoriety in Kentucky and in the Northern States. Its beginning was a church and a school, established some years before the civil war, by anti-slavery men from the North, for the poor people of the adjacent mountain region. The public mind, sensitive to everything relating to the institution of slavery, distrustful of the designs of those engaged in the enterprise, and finally, about the time of the John Brown raid in Virginia, thoroughly fired by rumors of tampering with the slaves to foment sedition, the citizens assembled in mass-meeting, passed resolutions condemning the parties and demanding their departure from the region, and appointed a large committee of leading citizens to see that their demand was complied with. The parties expelled returned at the close of the war, recovered through the courts for the destruction or damage of their property, and resumed their work. The school, originally designed for whites, was opened also to the now emancipated blacks, the plans were enlarged and liberal contributions secured from the North for carrying them forward. Commodious and handsome buildings were erected, and the students increased until they numbered several hundred.

"The institution as now organized has been in operation several years. The officers and teachers have had little or no social relation with the families which constitute our better society, but in their intercourse in other ways they have thoroughly won the respect of all intelligent and fair minded people, by their promptness and uprightness in business matters, their polite and unpretending personal bearing, their correct deportment as citizens, their general good counsels to the colored people, and their manifest philanthropic devotion to their self-sacrificing work. Particularly, upon the enfranchisement of the blacks their conduct was in striking contrast with that of many native political radicals. While the latter gave fierce counsels to their blinded black followers, the former counseled peace, exhorted them to be thankful for and satisfied with their enlarged liberty, to exercise it with moderation, and to cherish kind feeling and kind relations to their old masters. With some of the instructors at Berea the writer of this article has had an acquaintance and occasional intercourse for several years, and has found them as just represented. Of Dr. Fairchild, the President, especially, it gives us pleasure to say that he is an intelligent Christian gentleman, of scholarly culture, who, apart from views he entertains which bring him in contact with the convictions and prejudices of our people, would be an ornament to any of our institutions of learning. We have discussed with him, in private and in public, differences on political and social questions, without diminution of the respect which all intercourse with him inspires for his sincerity, fairness, and Christian zeal in the interest of the poor whites and blacks.

"Favorably predisposed from our personal knowledge of the gentlemen engaged, and in pursuance of a purpose for some time entertained, to use the first opportunity to become better acquainted with a great enterprise so near to us, the writer and our esteemed president, both of Central University, on the 8th ult., rode out to Berea, over a good Macademized road, to attend the Commencement Exercises. The site of the institution and of the neat village which has grown up about it, is as charming as can well be conceived, on a beautiful plateau under the shadow of the mountains, some sixty feet above the valley through which it is approached. When we arrived, although the hour was early, the exercises were in progress, in a splendid grove of native and dense forest. We were recognized on our approach, and invited at once to comfortable seats on the platform. Here the scene presented was one of great novelty. Upon the large platform, which was covered partly with canvas and partly with the green boughs of trees, were the president and professors of the College, Rev. John G. Fee, founder of the institution and pastor of the College Church, the students who were to take part in the exercises, male and female, white and colored, a brass band consisting of students of both races, and a piano presided over by a young lady, of the white race, who was a student in the normal department of the institution and teacher of music. In front of the stand and provided with seats, was an audience of probably a thousand people, young and old, male and female, white and colored, all evidently poor, but respectably dressed and preserving great good order. They appeared a perfect democracy, with little advantage of condition possessed by any above others. And yet, whilst no portion of the seats was occupied exclusively by either color, and there appeared little except color to make a distinction among them, they were grouped upon the color line. A similar observation we may here make about the students. They sat together, read or spoke alternately on the rostrum, sung together in duets and choruses; and yet when driven by the storm a short while in the chapel, and in the recess, whilst there appeared an absolutely free, easy and polite intercourse of male and female and white and colored, yet they seemed naturally to separate and group themselves on the color line.

The subjects of essays and orations were very various, and indicated a fair average range and even some ambition of thought. Of the two classes of young men, white and colored, the latter seemed to us to display most vigor in their speeches. Some of the colored young men—if their orations were entirely their own, and we were assured they were—give promise of making public speakers of much force. Their declamation was excellent, and their pronunciation conformed punctiliously to the standard of Worcester. Girls, both white and colored, read essays. Two young ladies, both white, who were the only graduates, read pieces of a high order in most excellent style. The exhibition altogether was very creditable as compared with the performance on similar occasions in other institutions.

There were in the school during the last session about 250 students. Males and females, white and colored, recite together. The expense of tuition and living in the institution is very small, and many are permitted to defray it in part or entirely by their labor. The endowment of the College is small. The church of the College is independent, and a latitude of views on some matters is tolerated. The pastor, who was regularly educated for and ordained to the Presbyterian ministry, is a decided immersionist; the College body generally are pedo-baptists.

"We omit of necessity many facts that would be of interest to our thoughtful readers; we have written this much because the enterprise relates to a subject of great magnitude of itself—the education of the colored race—which is now engaging, and is destined still more to engage, the attention of all our Southern Churches; of which we will have something to say in future issues of our paper."

DEDICATION OF JUBILEE HALL.

The special act of dedication took place on Saturday forenoon, January 1, 1876, but the services may be said to have begun on Friday morning, ere the rooms had all been cleaned out and the furniture arranged, and to have ended, January 3, 1876, when the school exercises were regularly inaugurated.

The first public prayer in Jubilee Hall was offered on Friday morning. "We assembled," says one of the teachers, "in a recitation room, and as there were no seats, we lined the four walls of the room, standing with reverent heads, as Prof. Spence committed to God our new and beautiful house and ourselves its occupants."

WATCH NIGHT MEETING.

This meeting is of immemorial observance among the colored people and has been held regularly in Fisk School since it was founded. The services are devotional, and being continued till after midnight, are a farewell to the old year and a welcome to the new. The hours were delightfully and profitably spent in prayer and singing, interspersed with grateful remembrances of past spiritual mercies and in supplicating for Divine blessings on the coming services of dedication, and on Fisk University as it enters upon its new era, and also upon the nation, now beginning its centennial year.

A teacher gives these particulars: "The special burden of prayer seemed to be that God who had surely been with the school in the old home might take possession of this, might so fill it with His presence that it should be as the temple of old, when the glory of the Lord descended and abode upon it, and in it, that it might be the birthplace of souls for many generations to come. A student prayed, 'O! Lord, Thou knowest, we hated to leave the old home, which was so dear, and so sacred to us, and we do not want to stay in this spacious building unless Thou art here.' Mention was made of Moses, when he pleaded with God, 'If thy presence go not with me carry us not up hence,' and very sweetly came to our hearts the promise given to God's servant, 'My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest.' Just at twelve o'clock, when 1875 was numbered with the past, and the untried new year was opening upon us, we all knelt in silent prayer, that God would hide us beneath His wing, safely sheltering us, during all the passing years, whether they brought to us trial and sorrow or joy and rejoicing, in the great work that He has given us to do."

DEDICATION OF THE HALL.

January 1, 1876.

A more delightful day could not have been desired for the dedication of Jubilee Hall than to-day. Long before the appointed hour, crowds were wending their way to the beautiful hill on which the building is situated, and by the time the exercises opened, a vast throng had assembled to witness one of the most interesting events that has ever occurred in the history of the colored race. Over the door leading to the platform from the hall, were the flags of America and England, looped up with magnolia leaves.

On the speaker's stand were seated Revs. T. O. Summers, D. D., J. C. Granberry, D. D., and N. T. Lupton, LL. D., Professors in Vanderbilt University; Rev. J. Braden, D. D., of Central Tennessee College, Rev. D. W. Phillips, D. D., of the Nashville Institute; Rev. J. B. McFerrin, D. D., Corresponding Secretary, and Rev. D. C. Kelly, Assistant Secretary, of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; Rev. J. B. Lindsley, Dr. W. P. Jones; Ex-Senator Fowler, Judge Alexander Campbell; Prof. J. W. Coyner, Prof. Cole, Joseph Cares, G. W. Hubbard, J. J. Carey; Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, Rev. M. E. Strieby, D. D. Cor. Sec. of the American Missionary Association, Hon. E.P.Smith, Rev. G. D. Pike, Rev. W. S. Alexander, Edgar Ketchum, Esq., Samuel Holmes, H. W. Hubbard; Prof. A. K. Spence, Prof. F. A. Chase, Rev. H. S. Bennett and the lady teachers of the Institution.

A noticeable feature in the audience was the large number of white citizens present. The Sixteenth Infantry Band was in attendance, and while the multitude was assembling and in the subsequent exercises, contributed to the interest of the occasion.

"Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, President of the Board of Trustees, took the chair and invited the vast audience to unite in singing,

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

The audience remained standing while Rev. D. W. Phillips, D. D. invoked the Divine blessing. The University choir sung

"Steal away to Jesus."

Selections of Scripture were read by Rev. J. Braden from an elegant Bible which had been presented to the Jubilee Singers by the Presbyterian Church in New York city, of which the Rev. Dr. Burchard is pastor. The band played the national airs, closing with "Dixie" and "Yankee Doodle" amid loud and long continued applause.

Gen. Fisk then delivered the address. It was eloquent and appropriate to the occasion. We copy this brief passage for its historical reference to the University:

It is a decade since many of us who share in this day's joys participated in the inauguration of Fisk School, established in yonder vacated army barracks, under the auspices of the American Missionary Association, by two of its most faithful, sagacious representatives, Revs. E. M. Cravath and E. P. Smith, who, after a survey of many inviting fields, decided that here, in this central city of the South, they would plant a university for the higher education of the freed people. It was the day of small things; and to an observer, who did not with prophetic soul scan the future, the idea that a university should be the outgrowth of the beginning of ten years ago was absurd. Let us not despise the day of small things.

The history of the rise and progress, successes, disappointments and triumphs of Fisk University would reveal a story replete with illustrations of heroic Christian faith, and a sublime courage which knows no such word as fail. The immediate friends and promoters of this institution, though poor in worldly goods, and beset with discouragements without limit, were, nevertheless, rich in faith, and never faltered from their original purpose to build here a college, or, at least, make the beginning, trusting to the blessing of God upon those who might come after them to carry forward the enterprise to complete success. Year by year, after the undertaking of ten years since, grew upon us the perplexing problem of obtaining the means to purchase a new site and erect the permanent initial building of Fisk University. When, through decay of the old buildings and the urgent demands for increased facilities, the necessity for a solution of the problem became imperative, there was found one man equal to the emergency.

The son of a village blacksmith, who, from limited advantages of culture, became a successful country school teacher, a brave and gallant soldier of the army of the Union, and a most faithful staff officer in my own military family, became the man of all work in the hour of our greatest need; and to no human agency, nor to all other human agencies combined, are the triumphs of this glad hour so much indebted as to George L. White. [Applause.)

The story of the Jubilee Singers fills a volume. The little poorly clad company of emancipated slaves who, four years ago, left Nashville on their mission of song, have, since that day, written their names indelibly on the hearts of millions in our own country and Great Britain. They went forth weeping, bearing precious seed; they came again rejoicing, bringing their sheaves with them.

CONGRATULATORY DESPATCHES

Gen. Fisk remarked that a large company of friends in Great Britain were that day celebrating with the Jubilee Singers this glad occasion, and stated that the Jubilee Singers had just sent them the following despatch from Leeds, where they then were.

CABLE TELEGRAM FROM ENGLAND.

"British friends and Jubilee Singers send greeting. Hitherto hath the Lord helped us. May Fisk University be inspiration to struggling humanity in America, and light to Africa's millions. May Great Britain and America ever thus unite to extend Christ's kingdom.

Leeds, 9 A.M. E. M. CRAVATH."

RESPONSE FROM NASHVILLE.

"Fisk University responds with thankful greetings. To the Jubilee Singers, to their friends at home and in the land of Wilberforce and Sharp, we owe what God hath wrought. May the two flags floating to-day from Jubilee Hall ever symbolize the united purpose of both lands to fit the struggling Freedmen of America to carry light to Africa."

The audience then united with the choir in singing,

"The year of Jubilee."

Rev. John B. McFerrin, D.D., Senior Secretary of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was introduced by Gen. Fisk, as having most faithfully aided him during his official residence in Nashville.

Dr. McFerrin was greeted with much enthusiasm, and spoke with great earnestness, concluding his remarks with these words:

I want you, Gen. Fisk, and all others, to understand, that the Southern people, as far as my information extends—that is, the intelligent, patriotic and Christian people of the South, with perhaps, a few exceptions—rejoice in the education and elevation of the colored people, and fully appreciate the grand work you are doing for them. [Loud applause.] I stand on my native soil and bear this testimony. It meets the hearty co-operation and sincere approbation of all Christian people. In the elevation to which the colored people may attain, it is my prayer that all the instruction they may receive, all the culture you may bestow upon them, may bring them to Jesus. Your Sunday schools, churches, seminaries and your colleges, are worth nothing unless you bring those taught to Jesus. I pray that the President, the Faculty, the teachers and the pupils may all be sanctified in Christ, and at last meet in heaven for Christ's sake. [Applause.]

LETTERS FROM INVITED GUESTS.

Letters were then read by Gen. Fisk, from a number of prominent gentlemen, expressing their interest in the cause to which Fisk University is devoted, and regret that they were not able to attend. The letters were from Mr. D. L. Moody, the Evangelist, Gen. Garfield, M.C., Hon. L. Q. C. Lamar, Hon. W. E. Dodge, Bishop Payne, Hon. Geo. H. Stuart and Hon. John Eaton, U. S. Commissioner of Education.

After addresses by Sec. Strieby, Rev. G. D. Pike and Rev. E. P. Smith, the prayer of dedication was offered by Rev. H. S. Bennett, pastor of the church, and the keys were delivered by Gen. Fisk to Rev. A. K. Spence, Acting President of the Institution.

In the evening a bountiful repast was provided, and about three hundred invited guests, colored and white, sat down together, an event of no small social significancy. The speeches that followed were genial, and those from the white residents of Nashville gave evidence of sincere interest in the efforts of this Institution in promoting the education of the colored people.

THE SABBATH SERVICES.

January 2, 1876.

The services of the forenoon were under the direction of the pastor of the church, Rev. H. S. Bennett.

The sermon was preached by Rev. M. E. Strieby, from the words in Gal. 5: 1. "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage."

After the sermon, the Communion of the Lord's Supper was administered; the Rev. E. P. Smith and the Rev. W. S. Alexander officiating in the services.

In the afternoon at 3 o'clock, a large audience listened to a very interesting and instructive lecture on AFRICA, by Rev. G. D. Pike. The lecture was delivered under the auspices of the "Society for the Evangelization of Africa"—a society recently organized by the students of Fisk University, and which has taken a strong hold upon their hearts. The members pledge themselves to do what they can to evangelize Africa—to pray, give, or go, as God shall call.

After the lecture, Rev. Dr. Dashiell, Secretary of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, North, and others, added some instructive and encouraging remarks.

PRAYER AND CONFERENCE.

On Sunday evening a meeting for prayer and conference was held, which partook largely of the missionary spirit which has been roused in all hearts by the afternoon lecture. The aims of this Institution were spoken of—shall it indeed be a missionary school, from which shall go forth young men and women, to carry the Gospel to darkened lands?

THE OPENING OF THE SCHOOL.

January 3, 1876.

On Monday morning the school assembled for the first time in the new building. Prof. Spence opened it in the usual manner, by prayer and the reading of the Scriptures. This was followed by brief addresses from some of the students, and by earnest and encouraging addresses from Rev. H. S. Bennett, Rev. W. S. Alexander and Gen. Fisk. These exercises were among the most intesesting in the whole series of service, and were felt to be auspicious of a bright future for the spiritual as well as the educational work of the University.

FISK UNIVERSITY.

The closing exercises of Fisk University, Nashville Tenn., occurred May 21–25. A sermon was preached by Bishop D. A. Payne, D. D. President of Wilberforce University, at 11 o'clock Sunday. Prof. F. A. Chase lectured at 3.30 P. M. on the life and labors of David Livingstone, before the Society for the Evangelization of Africa. This lecture was but one of a series of missionary lectures and addresses on Africa, which have been delivered before the students of the University during the past year. By these addresses a great interest has been aroused in the minds of the students on the subject of African missions, and several of them are studying in nearly every portion of the State, in school-house, church, log cabin, brush arbor, barn, or wherever a score of children can be gathered and a partial shelter from driving rain or burning sun be secured. It is a new and toilsome work to many of them, and three months of school under the great disadvantages everywhere found do not seem to promise great things, but it is a little, and in the right direction, and it pays to inspire and fit them for such service. Virgil and Horace, Greek Lessons, Anabasis, and Greek Testament, Algebra and Trigonometry were examined.

Could the enemies of the education of the negro have been induced to visit the classes during the examinations, their preconceived notions must have received a terrible shock if they were not completely overthrown.

One of the most interesting features of the occasion was the examination of a class of young men in Theology. During the year thirteen young men have been pursuing a course in Theology under the instruction of Rev. H. S. Bennett, Professor of Theology. The class, consisting of eight at the close of the school, were examined in the English Harmony on Tuesday, and in Skeletonizing on Wednesday. Both examinations were attended by large audiences, and were well sustained. This class give only part of their time, about one-third, to Theology, while they are pursuing their literary and academic studies in their various grades. The experience of the past eight years has demonstrated the wisdom of this course.

The colored people of the South need young men, who may go immediately into the field, with what culture they may receive in a few years of study.

On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, the usual literary exhibitions and anniversaries came off, in which a large number of young ladies and gentlemen participated. The exercises were highly entertaining to large audiences. As indicating the ability of the colored youth for literary effort they were promising. Some of the productions had decided merit, while the delivery of the readers and speakers, was on the whole animated, clear and vigorous.

The occasion was made more interesting by the presence of Prof. Geo. L. White, of the Jubilee Singers, who came over from England for the purpose of setting on foot measures for the good of the Institution.

ANNIVERSARY EXERCISES—GRADUATES FROM COLLEGE, NORMAL AND BIBLICAL COURSES.

Our anniversary exercises awakened unusual interest among those who do not often express any enthusiasm in regard to such matters.

The occasion possessed special interest on account of the fact that a class of six were to graduate from the College department as its first representatives. These, with four who had completed the Normal course, and three who had finished the eclectic Biblical course, made up thirteen, a larger number than have ever before been sent out at one time from this school. Most of them had been here from the first opening of the institution; indeed were among the first pupils in the early American Missionary Association schools in the State, and so had received their whole training under the same edifice. The examinations were carried on for three days in the presence of a board of examiners appointed by the Governor, who expressed much satisfaction with the results. The anniversary exercises on the fourth day were attended by a very large audience, who manifested the deepest interest until the close. All of those who were to graduate participated with productions which were very creditable, and were a surprise to those who attended such exercises here for the first time. The increased attendance on the part of all classes, the marked attention and ready acknowledgement of excellence, and the hearty expression of interest and appreciation, seem to indicate that a slow but steady progress in the right direction is maintained.

It is a great source of satisfaction that all of these graduates are Christians, and go out with deep impressions of the importance of the work they have to care for, and earnest purposes to make that work effective. All have had experience in teaching, and nearly all go to new fields of labor, whithout pausing for rest or returning to their homes. A large portion of the school have done the same, passing within a week from duties here, to the charge of schools of their own in a hundred different places in nearly every portion of the State, in school-house, church, log cabin, brush arbor, barn or wherever a score of children can be gathered and a partial shelter from driving rain or burning sun be secured. It is a new and toilsome work to many of them, and three months of school unde the great disadvantages everywhere found do not seem to promise great things, but it is a little, and in the right direction, and it pays to inspire and fit them for such service to those who sit in darkness.

ATLANTA UNIVERSITY—COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES—INTERESTING OCCASION.

The public exercises of the Atlanta University, which have been in progress all the week, were yesterday brought to a conclusion by the anniversary exercises. The church was crowded with a very large audience. Quite a number of prominent citizens were present, and they seemed well impressed with the exercises of the day.

We give expression to the opinion of every competent judge present, when we assert that the orations and essays were exceptionally fine. With one exception they were written in a clear forcible style, without the usual faults of youthful composition.

It was remarkable that every one of the orations should have been delivered so well—with such perfect enunciation and such fine emphasis. Three or four of the speakers possess no small degree of oratorical talent.

The singing was as good as we have ever heard by any school or congregation. Most of the pupils sang by note, and rich tenor, bass, soprano and alto voices could easily be distinguished even in the burst of the choruses by two hundred voices.

The musical education of the pupils of the University seems to be finely attended to. The pupils excel in this department; many of them seeming to possess no little talent.

The whole exhibition reflected honor on the colored race, on the individual pupils, and on their instructors. All the orations and essays were original.

After singing of the parting song by the class, President Ware delivered the diplomas given by the University. The previous classes had only received certificates of graduation in certain studies. The class of yesterday was the first set of regular gradutes from this or any similar institution in all this section of country. Every one of the graduates was a professed follower of Jesus Christ. They will be watched with affectionate interest by their instructors in their course hereafter.

Bishop Gilbert Haven made an earnest speech to the graduating class, which was full of good advice.

The University is constantly increasing in popularity. The attendance grows larger every term, and during the one that has just passed was considerably over two hundred.

ATLANTA UNIVERSITY—COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES—FINE SHOWING FOR THE CLASSES.

The annual commencement exercises of the Atlanta University [colored] began yesterday. The institution was thrown open to visitors, and many availed themselves of the opportunity of seeing how far the colored boys and girls were improving the privileges there furnished them.

The University is at present receiving a donation of $8,000 per annum from the State. The President, Edmund A. Ware, A. M., has evinced a decided capacity for his work, and is undoubtedly doing much good. Assisted by an efficient corps of instructors, he is educating many of his pupils up to a point, that a few years ago was not thought possible.

The Constitution reporter was courteously received by Mr. Ware and assistants, and shown through several of the rooms. Every thing was the embodiment of neatness, and we were struck with the politeness and respect exhibited towards both teachers and visitors by the pupils. Of these there are now two hundred and forty.

Several of these classes we heard recite, and were agreeably surprised at the marked proficiency of the pupils. They dealt with the intricacies of botany, arithmetic, and Greek in a manner that would have reflected credit upon any school.

We wish the institution much success.

EXAMINATION AND COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES AT TALLADEGA COLLEGE.

By Rev. W. G. Marts, Talladega.

The examination of the classes of this institution, for the term that has just ended, commenced on Tuesday the 20th of June. The weather was fair, and cool enough to make it pleasant for intellectual efforts, and agreeable for visitors. Besides the friends of the students and the patrons of the school, quite a number of the prominent citizens of the town were present. Among these were noticeable Ex-Gov. Parsons and Judge Afee. They listened to the examination of the classes with an interest and appreciation that was very pleasant and encouraging to pupils and teachers.

The recitations did great credit to both the students and their instructors. They showed at once the capacities of the young people, and the patience and thoroughness of Prof. Safford—the principal—and the efficient corps of instructors who assisted him.

It is, indeed, a very wholesome way in which to break down prejudice against the colored people, for the white people to visit the school, during its examination and closing exercises, year by year, if the students acquit themselves always as well as they have done this year. Nor were the circumstances the most favorable to indicate the real work of the institution, for many of the best students could not be present at the examinations, having been compelled to go out and teach school a number of weeks before the close of the term. This they are in some cases obliged to do, or lose their chance of getting schools, and thus their means of meeting their expenses at school.

During the three days of the examinations, twenty classes in all were examined by eight teachers. Prof. Andrews had examined his classes in the theological department a week before, having been compelled to go to the bedside of his, as he feared, dying mother.

Seldom do students in our Northern seminaries acquit themselves more creditably than did the more advanced class in theology at this examination. Some of the members of the second class, likewise, surprised their auditors with their rapid and nearly endless marshalling of dates, and the classification of events of Bible history.

As to the numerous examinations in the other departments, where all the classes did so well, it is impossible in so brief a sketch to speak particularly of any class or teacher, without seeming to disparage others.

At the close of the examination on Thursday evening, the Rev. E. P. Lord—the Principal of the school for the coming year—delivered an interesting address. It was listened to with marked attention. He was followed by Ex-Gov. Parsons in some excellent and instructive remarks. It remains for me to add a word as to the evening exercises of Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. On Tuesday evening, the "Young People's Literary Society" held its fifth anniversary exercises. The chapel on this evening, as upon the two following, was crowded to overflowing.

The performance was very creditable to the young men and women who took part in the exercises. The music each night was very good, and called forth a hearty expression of appreciation. This was especially true of the concert night (Wednesday.) The most interesting of all were the graduating exercises on Thursday night. The graduating essays and orations showed much culture. There was in most cases a very vigorous grasping of the subjects in hand, and a very thorough handling and development.

At the end of these interesting exercises, Prof. Safford delivered a very pointed, feeling and impressive address to the eight young men and women of the graduating class, and then presented them with their diplomas. This is the first class that has finished a prescribed course of study in Talladega College and received diplomas.

Students.—Normal Course, 61; Intermediate, 51; Primary, 109; Total, 221.

We have the following account of the work at Tougaloo, from the pen of Mrs. Darling:

The political excitement and confusion that existed in the State during the fall, greatly impeded the progress of our work. Many of our students were afraid to come here for fear of losing their lives on the way, and some who were teaching fled to Tougaloo for safety; others sought refuge in the woods and swamps. At the opening of the New Year, the dark clouds had in a measure dispersed, and everything assumed a brighter aspect. Our school increased largely in numbers, and during the months of January and February there were about fifty more pupils than during the same months last year.

Our prayer meetings are well sustained; there is a deep tone of religious feeling existing in our school, but no great outpouring of the Spirit has descended upon us. At our last meeting of the term, closing March 24th, we witnessed the baptism of six of our pupils, several of whom were very interesting and hopeful conversions. The teaching of my Sabbath-school class has been, and is, one of my most interesting duties here.

I have never seen anywhere so large a number of young people giving such close attention to the Word of God, and to instruction given in Sabbath school, as here among these colored people. They receive the truth as little children, according to the command of the Saviour, "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." There are several with whom the Spirit is striving and over whom we feel great anxiety; we are longing to hear them witness for Jesus, and rejoice in Him.

STRAIGHT UNIVERSITY.

FIRST GRADUATION FROM COLLEGE AND LAW SCHOOL—SOUTHERN TEACHERS TWO LADIES GRADUATE FROM COLLEGE.

The examination, exhibition and commencement at Straight University were all very satisfactory. I wish some of the New York officials could have been present during the week, especially at Central Church, Friday evening, June 9th, to witness the graduation of the first college and law classes. That eight young men pass fine examinations and are admitted to the bar of Louisiana, is an event of no small importance.

The most significant feature—and here I pause to wonder if significant is really the right word; perhaps delightful is more honest—connected with this law class, is the fact that it has been trained by Southern men, who are thoroughly identified with Southern interests, but are willing to put aside prejudice for principle. Their devotion and faithfulness could not have been surpassed. It is pleasant to give them this just praise.

Probably Straight University will receive more local honor for graduating so large a law class, than for conferring college diplomas upon two young ladies; but to those connected with the school there can be no question that the best work of the Institution is represented by these noble girls. Very few persons can appreciate the sacrifices they have made to complete the long course of study. For six years they have been punctual, faithful and persevering in spite of every discouragement. Many of their early classmates dropped out of the course, because they found the effort to maintain themselves and acquire an education greater than they could afford.

Listening to their well written essays and remembering some of the struggles they had endured for the sake of knowledge, I was glad they composed the class of '76, and could but think the women of a century ago exhibited no greater fortitude and patience that our good girls of Straight. They are Christian ladies as well as good scholars.

Commencement exercises had an inspiriting effect upon the students and also upon the very intelligent audience, who heartily applauded Prof. Adams' able address that pleaded the need of higher education.

This has, in every respect, been a successful year. About the middle of January, or first of February, fresh impetus was given to every department. New scholars of marked ability and the re-arrangement of classes and studies, created enthusiasm. About the same time interest in the students' prayer-meeting deepened; one of the young men started an early morning meeting in his room, which was held regularly till the close of the term; devotions at the close of evening study hours became more interesting and impressive; and soon many were confessing their love for Christ. But it would be impossible to mention all the pleasant memories that teachers and scholars will keep of the past year.

[From the New Orleans Republican.]

THE STRAIGHT UNIVERSITY.

One of the most complete, practical and useful institutions of learning in this city is the Straight University, located on the thoroughfare of Esplanade street. The closing exercises of the past term of the University commenced on Sunday evening, the fourth instant, with an able address before the theological class, delivered by Rev. Mr. Alexander, on the subject, "The Ministry we Need."

Examinations in various studies were thereafter held on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. The proficiency and attainments shown in the theological, ancient history, Latin, botany, mathematical, geography and English grammar classes were most creditable, and gratifying alike to the teachers and friends of the University.

On Thursday evening the annual exhibition exercises were held at the Central Church. This was one of the most interesting exhibitions ever given by the students of the university. The programme was somewhat lengthy, but the attention of the large audience remained unabated to the end. Several songs, duets and dialogues were well rendered, and during the evening short and excellent speeches deserving of praise were delivered by young students.

The regular graduating exercises occurred on Friday evening, when essays and addresses were delivered and diplomas awarded.

The law department of the Straight University presents such excellent advantages, that many of our young men, not colored, have availed themselves of the opportunity and privilege of attending its lectures, and eight young men graduated from the law class at the last term, and have been admitted to practice at the bar of the State courts.

THE AVERY NORMAL INSTITUTE, CHARLESTON, S. C.

[From the News and Courier.]

The closing exercises of this institute took place yesterday morning in the presence of a large crowd of spectators, composed of the friends, parents and relatives of the pupils. The school is situated in Bull street, west of Rutledge street, and was built by the contributions of some Northern philanthropists, and was for several years supported by them. As time advanced and the colored people began to appreciate the advantages of education, the attendance of pupils increased, and a tax of $1 a month was levied upon such of them as could afford to pay. It is now one of the most thriving institutions in the State, and under the supervision of Mr. A. W. Farnham, the superintendent, and corps of able assistants, affords the most excellent opportunities of education to a large number of colored children.

The exercises yesterday consisted of singing, reading and declamation, conducted in the presence of committees who were intrusted with the duty of awarding the prizes.

At the close, brief and instructive addresses were made by Mr. Graves, Associate Justice Wright of the State Supreme Court, School Commissioner S. R. Cox, and Mr. J. D. Geddings. The pupils were then dismissed for the spring vacation, which lasts until the 24th instant.

Brewer Normal School, Greenwood, S. C.

Teacher—Mr. J. D. Backenstose, Geneva, N. Y.
Number of pupils, 39.

Of the closing exercises, Mr. B. writes as follows:

Thursday, June 29, completed another page in the history of the Brewer Normal School—another year of its labor and usefulness. The examinations took place on Tuesday and Wednesday, the 27th and 28th, and manifested an appreciable degree of inquiry and study on the part of the students. Rev. F. E. McDonald, pastor of the M. E. Church at this place, and recently from Claflin University, Revs. Spearman, Perrin and Mance of the A. M. E. Church, and Hon. J. A. Spencer, Representative from this county, were among the distinguished visitors present, and expressed themselves plessed with the proficiency exhibited. The closing exercises, consisting of singing, recitations and declamations, occurred on Thursday night. The large school room, which was tastefully decorated for the occasion, was filled to overflowing with an interested audience. The declaimers gave promise of future action and eloquence far beyond our expectation. The past year has been an unusually prosperous one, and the future of the school is very encouraging.

FROM MISS M. F. WELLS, ATHENS—INTERESTING CLOSING EXERCISES OF THE SCHOOL—PUPILS KEPT FROM SCHOOL BY POVERTY—NEEDS OF THE PEOPLE.

We are just through with the closing exercises of the school. We had a very large and enthusiastic audience of the colored citizens of Athens; also a few white gentlemen—who expressed themselves highly pleased with what they saw and heard. We, as teachers, were greatly gratified by the creditable manner in which the students acquitted themselves, and we feel greatly encouraged by the general progress of the school and church this year.

The hard times have compelled many of our best students to leave before the close of the year. This has broken up our classes sadly, and now that the remuneration they get for teaching is so small, they will be unable to attend school next year unless they can be aided from abroad.

We hope, however, for a large number of students from the country, who are now in the schools taught by our students. Many such have the prospect of fine crops, and they are enthusiastic in their desire to attend the school which has trained these teachers. Our students seem to arouse a good deal of interest among the people wherever they go, and will, we trust, add many "spots" to the already "spotted reputation" of the American Missionary Association. Many Sunday-schools are being established, and I have constant calls for Bibles, books and papers, and singing-books, which I have no means to supply. Many cases of destitution and suffering, also, are found which we have no means to relieve. This struggling people must be aided, or they sink in a wave of degradation and infamy. Oh, what need of earnest prayer and unyielding faith to sustain those who see and realize the peril that threatens our beloved land. God grant that this centennial year may witness a mighty uprising of Christian people everywhere, to beat back the powers of darkness, which are creeping so stealthily but surely over the land.

Emerson Institute, Mobile, Ala.

Number of pupils 417 (Normal 96); number in Sabbath-school, 300.

The burning of Emerson Institute on the night of April 16th, was a calamity so great, that we might well have expected the school work to cease for the year—but the untiring zeal of Principal and teachers was manifested in the promptness with which regular duties were resumed, only one day intervening between the date of the fire and the re-opening of school in the church building. Although laboring under great disadvantages through the loss of books, the course of study was successfully continued until the last of May, when the usual interesting commencement exercises were held.

The Emerson Institute Sentinel thus records the circumstances of the fire.

Sunday night, April 16th, at half-past eleven o'clock, Mr. Lord was aroused from sleep, and feeling a sense of uneasiness, went out of his room about the building: finding all safe in the home part, he went into the school rooms adjoining, where he perceived smoke; hurrying on farther to a hall in the southwest corner of the building, he discovered flames under the stair-case leading from the second to the third story. Seizing a bucket of water he dashed it upon the fire, partially subduing it, but before he could secure more water or help, the flames had made such headway that he felt the family must be aroused. Sending one to give the alarm at the fire department, he awakened all in the building, telling them of the danger. Most of the family were on the third floor and some were already almost stupified by the smoke. The scene was one of terror and confusion, each fearing lest some one might be left in the building, yet all displayed great presence of mind and tried to save as much as possible from the devouring monster. But the flames spread so rapidly that in half an hour after they were discovered it was dangerous to enter the building, and in less than an hour the walls fell. The building seemed to melt away before the fire.

Fire engines were on the ground in good time, but water not being easily accessible they waited calmly outside in the street, and blew their whistles gallantly.

All that was saved from the great building was a part of the clothing of the teachers, a few books from the library, and some articles from the store-room. The piano and much of the furniture might have been saved, had there been men enough to carry them out.

Some gentlemen were there who aided nobly, working to their utmost to save goods from the burning building. The families living near were very kind, offering their homes to the ladies, and in many ways sympathizing with them in their misfortune. Teachers and scholars stood outside in the street, sadly and tearfully watching the scene so terribly grand, and, as the sound of crashing timbers and roaring flames came to them, could only thank Him who "doeth all things well," that not one was harmed—all safe.

The loss of personal property in the building was considerable, including two valuable gold watches, other articles of jewelry, clothing, books and pictures, besides all the furniture of the American Missionary Association, bedding, piano, printing press, type, two sewing machines, the school furniture, school books and the bell. About three hundred books were saved out of a library of fifteen hundred volumes.

That the fire was the work of an incendiary, there can be no possible question; it was discovered in a hall under a stair-case with no stove-pipe or chimney within forty feet of it directly under a window opening upon a gallery reached by an outside stair-case. The stair-case, gallery and school rooms had not been used in two days, and Mr. Lord passed through there about dusk on Sunday, finding nothing amiss.

Monday morning found the teachers on their way to the place where their home had been, where the work of years had been done, where God had so recently manifested Himself in the salvation of precious souls; and the tears would come when they saw before them only the six great pillars, standing like sentinels before the ruins, the grand old oaks withered and blackened, and the whole scene one of desolation—Emerson Institute in mourning waiting for them. The yard was full of sorrowful, sympathizing scholars and friends. The meeting was a sad, yet a happy one. Teachers, scholars and friends seemed bound together by cords of sympathy stronger than ever before.

Mr. Lord gathered them about him, and spoke of all that had happened, as one only can when the heart is overflowing. Then arose songs of praise and thanksgiving, from hearts that felt that the hand of our Good Father had been outstretched in love to save the lives of all, and that with the eye of faith could see through the dark cloud of disaster the silver lining of good to come. Then came the tearful meeting of the family and the breaking up of home associations, for each must now go to her own home or that of a friend. All day the grounds were full of sad people, and Monday was a day of mourning.

ANNUAL REPORT OF BURRELL SCHOOL, SELMA, ALABAMA.

BY MR. E. C. SILSBY, PRINCIPAL.

The session of Burrell school for 1875-6, having closed, it is proper that I should give an outline of the condition of the school.

ATTENDANCE.

The attendance of pupils has been generally good, especially in the higher grades. With the exception of the grammar department, there have been periods when all the available space in each room was occupied, making the admission of new scholars practically impossible.

HINDRANCES.

We have met with them. We have been accused of proselyting the children; running the school in the interest of the Congregational Church; lecturing and even punishing pupils for not attending the Sabbath-school of that church, and in various ways showing partiality to those that do. These reports were carried to the ears of Capt. Ward, our city superintendent, and upon receiving a communication from him, I set myself vigorously at work to let the truth of the matter be known. I submitted the question to the entire school in the presence of a number of visitors, and in the presence of the accuser to Capt. Ward, and our justification was complete. I was gratified to receive from the superintendent the assurance that he was thoroughly satisfied with any statement I might make.

During the winter holidays, when temptations beset the young so thickly, a number of our promising scholars, members of the temperance society connected with our school, broke their pledge. We were encouraged afterwards, however, in seeing them renew their vow, or promise to do so when opportunity should be afforded.

IMPROVEMENTS.

It is gratifying to note that improvements have been made—in studiousness, in regularity of attendance, and in a growing tendency on the part of the pupils to remain in school for a longer time than formerly. As there has been less falling off in attendance, we have been able to carry scholars further along, and thus raise the grade of the school higher than it has ever been before.

The pupils are more cleanly in person, and are dressed better than in some preceding years. Marked improvement has been noticed in a number of individual cases, in respect to conduct in and out of school; more gentleness in manners and bearing, more deference to the wish of teacher and schoolmate, and less of rudeness and heedlessness.

We have been blessed with a work of grace in our school this year, concerning which I have written heretofore, and nineteen have professed their faith in Christ. A number of these have united with some church. Our school prayer meetings held every Tuesday afternoon have been usually quite interesting, and, I trust, a source of strength to the young Christians in our school. The Sabbath-school work has been growing. A number of mission schools are in operation, sustained almost entirely by members of the classes in our morning school.

We closed our school with an exhibition at night. The exercises presented consisted of songs, dialogues, tableaux and recitations, and the entertainment was well attended. A small admission fee to those not connected with the school was charged, to be applied in the purchase of charts, etc., for the rooms.

LE MOYNE SCHOOL—FIRST GRADUATES—INFLUENCE OF TEACHERS.

FROM PROF. A. J. STEELE, MEMPHIS.

The year has been of unusual import, because at its close our first graduates were sent out. At the beginning of the year, the senior class numbered eight; of this number, all but two lacked means to complete the course, and were obliged to teach during a part of the year—so that the class numbered but two—these graduated with honor to themselves and to the school.

There is now a much stronger desire with the members of the school to remain at their work steadily, till the course of study is finished. The honors of graduation, and of holding the diploma of the institution, are very much coveted, and will be most earnestly worked for. Our senior class for next year numbers not far from twenty.

While the stringency of the times has compelled many of our students to quit their studies for a time, we find some satisfaction in the fact, that most of them have been teaching in communities where they have exerted a great influence for good.

For want of funds we have been unable to resume our work at this point, and the building has been unoccupied.

Normal School, Pine Bluff, Ark.

Teacher—Mr. M. W. Martin, Ripon, Wis.

Number of pupils, 90 (Normal 30); number in Sabbath-school, 50.

Mr. Martin writes:

The religious interest here during the past few months, has taken some of our pupils into churches, where I think they will do good, yet they are regarded with suspicion by the old people, unless they follow all the extravagancies so common among them. Our Sabbath-school is smaller, but very interesting. I give a half hour Bible lesson each day, and thus reach many who do not attend any Sabbath-school.

We have not been able to maintain a school here during the past year, and the building has not been occupied.

*From these schools the report is for July instead of August.

NOTES.—1. The schools at Los Angeles and San Leandro have been sustained during the entire year, but were under the care of this Mission, during only the period specified.

2. The number of those who profess to have ceased from idolatry is doubtless considerably larger than is here reported. The number whose confidence in idol worship is shaken and almost overthrown, is doubtless many times larger than that given in this report. But it is the opinion of our most experienced teachers, that seldom, if ever, do our pupils cut themselves off from idolatry altogether, until they are truly converted to a better faith.

3. The last two columns contain the number given in the August reports. The total number of those who have given evidence of conversion in connection with our schools, is not less than 115. But many of these, in any single month are so situated, through absence or otherwise, as not to be able to attend the schools.

The total number of teachers employed for the whole or a part of the year is 32. The average number for any one month about 17.

The total resources of the Mission have been (in coin) $5,320.40. Of this amount, $1,406.05 were contributed directly to the treasury of the auxiliary. The amount contributed by the churches of California is $741.95, precisely double that of the preceding year. This is the third year in which this doubling process has gone on. If it can continue for about four years to come, we shall have means adequate to the work we find to do. From private subscriptions in California $551.01 were received.

The disbursements were as follows: salaries, $4,298.85; rents, $1,132; incidentals, (traveling, printing report, &c., repairs, fuel and lights, &c.,) $456.15. Total, $5,887. Would it be easy to find a missionary work as broad and as richly remunerative as this, conducted at less cost? Especially considering that poverty compels us to carry so heavy a load of rent?

The organization of the new and promising auxiliary, the "California Chinese Mission," in connection with the General Association of California, Oct. 5th, 1875, is thus briefly and approvingly noticed in the Pacific, of San Francisco:

"One of the memorable incidents of the late meeting of the General Association, was the organization of the California Chinese Mission, as an auxiliary of the American Missionary Association. This society is to take up the work of the American Missionary Association on this coast, acting as its agent in the collection and disbursement of its funds and the superintendence of its work. Thirty-six persons have already made themselves annual members by the payment of two dollars each. A donation of $25 will render the donor a life member. In our work among the Chinese last year, $6,504.35 were expended, of which amount $1,630 were contributed in California. The report presented to the Association, and adopted by it, contained the statement that $10,000 would be needed during this new year to accomplish, on the most economical scale of expenditure, the work which is ready and needing to be done."

The progress of the work is indicated in an extract from a letter of Rev. Mr. Pond:

"Besides the thirteen conversions reported by Affoo, two are reported from the Los Angeles school, and two in the school in Stockton; a total of seventeen during the month of December. It is an amount of saving result—a harvest—that almost staggers my weak faith. I raise the question, are these conversions real? and hesitate to say, yes. I feel that others will be likely to do the same. And yet, the more I know of our brethren, the more ashamed I grow of such unbelief. I do not hesitate to say that in the light of my observations thus far, I have less reason to be doubtful in these cases than in a like number reported among my own countrymen."

Still further indications of good are given in a letter from Fung Affoo to Mr. Pond:

"REV. MR. POND—It cheers our heart to see that the Chinese evening schools are so fully attended by our countrymen. In this school the average number of scholars for last month was the largest we have ever had. The average was about one hundred, but nearly one-half of them were under sixteen years of age. These youngsters are bright ones, and earnestly inclined to learn the English language. I hope their study will be the means of leading them to the Lord Jesus. From the first of last month up to the present date, thirteen more have become Christians, and joined our Chinese Young Men's Christian Association; six of them from Oakland, four from San Leandro, two from their school and one from Miss Henderson's school. All of them have attended the evening schools for sometime. I hope there will be many more soon to follow their example and become good Christians."

An instance of the persecution of a Christian convert by his fellow countrymen, and its endurance in an excellent Christian spirit is mentioned in one of Mr. Pond's letters:

"At the last communion of our (Bethany) church, three of our Chinese converts were baptized and received into membership. There are now upon our roll the names of twenty-six Chinese believers. Four of these have gone to China, and can be reached, for the present, only by our prayers. One other young man would have been baptized but for the interference of his relatives. You will be reminded of a similar occurrence about six months ago. In this case, they hid our brother's clothes, and then, to the number of five or six, stood guard over him, not allowing him to pass out of their inclosure, till late on Sunday afternoon, when they knew that the service was over, and his opportunity, for the present, lost. To prevent his getting another opportunity they sent him at once to San Diego; and when we shall see him again, or how we can reach him by letter, I do not know. But we hope that he will go—as the scattered disciples in early days did, 'preaching the word.' He has been in California two years, and commenced attending school almost immediately on his arrival. In the course of his examination for church membership, he made expressions like these, 'I heard the brothers say that Jesus died for us and I thought I would love him.' 'I saw that images of wood are not good and can have no power, and I stopped worshiping them.' 'Some of my friends are very angry, but I talk with them and love them.' 'I pray God, give me knowledge so I can tell more about Jesus; not money, not strength.' 'If we love Jesus, he can do what we cannot.' 'I pray God to give power to our brethren, so that we can preach the Gospel to every man.'"

FOREIGN MISSIONS AT HOME.

Under this heading, Rev. J. K. McLean, of Oakland, Cal., gives a very interesting sketch of the efforts made for the evangelization of the Chinese in California, and points out the bearings of that work on the conversion of the millions in China. His views deserve, and we believe will receive, the thoughtful attention of all who read them.

We copy below the closing portion of the article referring to the work of the American Missionary Association in California:

"Rev. W. C. Pond, the A. M. A. Superintendent of Chinese work, reckons some seventy converts among the Chinese connected with Congregational schools, more than half of them having been gained within the past year. During the month of December alone, nineteen conversions were reported. Probably the Chinese work of the other denominations on this coast is equally promising, although I cannot speak from personal knowledge. There are, in and about San Francisco, twenty Chinese schools taught in English. The Bethany Congregational Church of San Francisco has over twenty Chinese members. And in a thousand families there may be courses of influence and instruction going forward similar to that spoken of by the Chinese street preacher of Christmas night—patient, prayerful, believing women, instilling into the minds of their domestic servants the light and hope of the precious gospel of Jesus Christ.

It seems, indeed, to be a crisis-period in the history of Chinese evangelization upon our American soil. Not only are the dusky Mongols flying to our instruction "as a cloud, and as doves to their windows," but our churches upon the Pacific Coast are awaking to a new interest in these heathen brought to their doors, and to a new sense of opportunity concerning Christ's kingdom through them."

The violent outbreak of anti-Chinese hostility on the Pacific Coast is thus described by Mr. Pond:

"The month since my last report was sent, has been one of severe trials. You have been aware, I suppose, for years, that the general sentiment in this State respecting the Chinese is such that to stir it is like setting nitro-glycerine in motion. The resolutions adopted at the monster meeting at Union Hall were adjusted for meridians on the Atlantic slope, and are comparatively moderate in tone. The talk at the numerous 'anti-Coolie' clubs organized in various parts of the city is less guarded. And the conduct to which our 'hoodlum' element now feels itself set free, is more shameless and disgraceful still. Some parade has been made of the fact that on the evening of that great meeting, notwithstanding the intense excitement of the people, no Chinaman suffered violence. This is not true, as one, at least, of our teachers could feelingly testify; but that it is so nearly true, is due in part to the fact that the Chinese kept closed doors and themselves within the doors. They have felt the need of doing this, more or less, ever since. Consequently, the attendance on our schools, this month (April) thus far has greatly diminished. Our pupils have been stoned and struck and kicked as they returned from school. Their hats have been snatched from their heads and some of our 'hoodlum' crews exhibit their trophies of stolen Chinese hats, much as the Sioux or the Pawnees would the scalps of their foes. Connected with the Methodist mission are about twenty Chinese girls, who have been rescued from the prostitution to which they had been doomed, and are taught to read and to work; and, in about every case, have been brought to believe in Jesus. Under the protection of American ladies they went out, one afternoon, to walk. When at some distance from home, they were set upon by a gang of men and boys, pelted, and then, as I understand, struck, their clothes rent, their ear-rings torn from their ears; and when an Irish woman (God bless her!) gave them refuge, her house was stoned. On another occasion, one of these women being obliged to go upon some errand, was standing on a street corner, attended by her teacher—a noble Christian woman well known to me—waiting for a street-car, when a young man of our superior race, discerning an opportunity to demonstrate his superiority, slipped out of a paint-shop near by, with a brush well soaked in black paint, and bravely coming up to her from behind, drew the brush across her face and slunk away. And other white men stood by, laughing and applauding."

An illustration of Chinese forbearance under persecution is given in an article clipped from a California daily.

A gentleman who comes down Pine street each morning, has given us an incident which came under his observation on Wednesday last. A Chinaman had set down his basket to rest himself near the corner of Mason street. Three well-dressed boys, aged from twelve to fifteen years, came along on their way to school. Unable to resist the temptation to commit a crime, they each stole what vegetables they could take conveniently in their hands—principally tomatoes—ran off a short distance, and pelted the Chinaman, besmearing his clothing and damaging his little stock. The gentleman went up to the Chinaman, and said to him: "Why do you stand still and permit such a thing? Why did you not throw one of those rocks and punish the young rascals?" What was the reply of this heathen: "Me no punishee him now, bym bye we alee go up here (pointing heavenward;) God punishee him for me alee same." Astonished at the reply, the gentleman asked "John" where he learned that: "O, me go Sunday-school and mission-school. Good teacherman show me how I makee good man."

THE INDIANS.

The unsettled condition of Indian affairs during the year has been a serious drawback. A feeling of uncertainty has extended not only to the Agents, but to the employees and Indians, in some cases causing the employees to resign. Yet notwithstanding this our Agents have remained at their posts without change, and have done most satisfactory work; and the reports show that the Indians have made great progress towards a Christian civilization.

RED LAKE AGENCY, MINNESOTA.

R. M. Pratt, Agent.

Rev. Francis Spees and Wife, Missionaries.

Miss M. C. Warren, Teacher.

The Indians at this Agency number 1178 and the Reserve contains 3,000,009 acres of land. Rev. Francis Spees still remains pastor of the little church, which now numbers 21. The school has not been continued during the whole season for lack of funds. The Agent, and all specially interested in the work at Red Lake, earnestly urge upon the Association the opening of a Manual Labor Boarding School, as the only means of getting a sure hold upon the children. Mr. Pratt has been absent from the Agency for a few weeks, and Dr. Allen, the able Christian physician there, forwards the report.

From this report we make the following extracts:

"These Indians have raised about 7000 bushels of corn, which is an excess of 1000 bushels over any preceding year, 2000 bushels of potatoes and 430 bushels of other vegetables; have cut 250 tons of hay, made 5000 pounds of maple sugar, gathered 600 bushels of berries, caught 750 pounds of fish and $14,000 worth of furs, and made 1000 yards of matting.

"The only school was a day-school, which for want of appropriation closed the 31st of June. The largest number in attendance during any month was forty. The results were as satisfactory as could be expected where the children live at home, somewhat remote from school, with no public sentiment to compel prompt and regular attendance.

"These people are, doubtless, as moral as any heathen people; yet polygamy and licentiousness are quite too prevalent. Gambling is their favorite pastime, and is indulged in much more than it would be if employment could be given them. They are kind to the sick, much more amiable and less quarrelsome than white people, and are scrupulous in attentions to the graves of deceased friends, keeping the grass and weeds away, and frequently depositing flowers and berries on the grave.

"One of the most serious obstacles to the civilization of the Indian is his repugnance to labor; yet here are gleams of a brighter future. He is becoming industrious, is clearing and cultivating more land, is building better dwellings, getting more household conveniences and comforts, is becoming slowly more cleanly in his habits, and these foretastes of civilization stimulate him to further efforts in this direction.

"During twenty-six months, from the official report made by the physician, I find he has treated 2,388 cases, with a loss by death of twelve. This does not include the almost innumerable cases, where he has put up in the office medicines as called for by the Indians. Such success in the treatment of disease has procured for the 'white man's medicine,' almost universal confidence, although the medicine dance is still held occasionally. In all serious cases, the agency physician is called upon, and he visits them at their wigwams, as if in a white community.

"We greatly need a good Manual Labor Boarding School. If such a school were opened and properly maintained in combination with a little more liberal appropriation to purchase teams, wagons and stock, this people might be rendered self-supporting, civilized citizens, and, doubtless, with the right religious influences, and God's blessing, much might be hoped for in the way of Christianizing them."

A letter from Mr. Spees, the missionary at this Agency, states some pleasant facts respecting the little church, which was organized a few years since:

"The church at Red Lake now numbers twenty-one individuals. One member has been under censure; until recently he has promised to amend his life, and we have concluded to try him again. Three have united with the church during the past year on profession of their faith in Christ, a half-breed and his wife, and an old gray-headed man who was formerly a Catholic. This old man has been quite regular in his attendance at church for about two years past. Many times, although thinly clad and infirm in body, he has plodded through the deep snow two miles, in severe winter weather, so great has been his desire to hear the Gospel. Two women have, as we hope, been led to embrace Christ as their Saviour during the past year, who did not unite with our church. One died rejoicing a few days after finding Jesus; the other is now nearly gone with consumption, but has learned to love Jesus, and is patiently awaiting her release, while her wicked heathen parents oppose her almost to downright persecution.

"Quite recently a young Indian man, who had for years been a professional gambler, and who was a three years' soldier in the army during the late rebellion, came to our house and asked me to write out an anti-gambling pledge with a temperance pledge included. I added a clause pledging him to quit going to Indian and half-breed dances, and he has signed the writing and has commenced attending church, and we are teaching him to read in the Ojibue Testament. He has commenced building a small house for his young family to winter in.

"Our attendance on the Sabbath is not large, as the half-breeds about us are mostly Catholics, and the priest teaches them that they had better stay at home than attend an heretical church."

LAKE SUPERIOR AGENCY, WISCONSIN.

Dr. I. L. Mahan, Agent.

Robert Pew, Mrs. M. A. Wheeler, Teachers.

The Indians in the seven reserves embraced in this Agency number 4,551, and their total individual wealth is estimated at $38,355. There have been four day-schools maintained besides the Odanah Mission School of the Presbyterian denomination, and one night school. The day scholars number about one hundred and forty, and the night scholars at Red Cliff thirteen. The progress of the Indians at this Agency is very encouraging. The Agent's report is of such general and popular interest that we cannot do better than to quote largely from his own words:

My agency is made up of seven different reservations, three in Minnesota, to wit: Grand Portage, Fond Du Lac and Bois Forte; four in Wisconsin, to wit: Red Cliff, Bad River, Lac du Flambeau and Lac Courte d'Oreille. These reserves are widely separated. To visit all of them from the office at Red Cliff would require a distance to be traveled of at least two thousand miles, stretching from the middle of Wisconsin to the Canadian line on Lake Superior. The Grand Portage reservation is only accessible by the Lake during navigation. The Bois Forte reservation can only be reached during the winter, and then forty or fifty miles must be made on snow shoes or by dog-trains.

The Indians of the Lac Du Flambeau reservation number about 700, and are usually met during the fall on the line of the Wisconsin Central Railroad, and such supplies as can be furnished distributed to them. These Indians have made no progress in civilization. They roam through the country, trapping, fishing and hunting. No missionary has ever raised his voice within a hundred miles of their camp fires. They are too far off to be reached by the agent with any degree of satisfaction; without funds sufficient to locate employés upon this reservation, it is useless to attempt anything for them. That there are good men and women belonging to these Flambeau bands cannot be denied. The following is taken from my report just after making these Indians a visit. "The Indians are extremely anxious to have their reserve improved. They express themselves as willing to do without clothing, blankets, &c., if they can have a school-house and teacher. It is a sad feature of my work, that I am not able to meet all the demands made upon me for teachers, farmers, &c. I enrolled a band of twenty-two men, who had worked faithfully the most of the past year in civilized pursuits. One of them had built a house himself, and had furnished it as white men's houses are furnished. He had a bedstead, cups and saucers, plates, knives, forks and spoons, and a No. 8 cook-stove, which he purchased at Steven's Point, shipped via railroad to Worcester, thence by stage to the Flambeau River, where he took it upon his back and carried it thirty miles to his house. Stop a moment and think. What does all this indicate? Should not an abundance of encouragement be given such enthusiasm? This Indian should be rewarded by pork and flour enough to support himself and family while he clears at least ten acres of land; but I have no funds, my hands are tied. And this is not the only instance; many such come before me almost daily. An old man on the Fond Du Lac reserve has a birch bark wigwam, in which he has a No. 8 cook-stove. I asked him why he did not build a house for the stove. He answered that he did not know how. He was abundantly able, but he had no one to go before to direct him—and people, good meaning people, ask me why I don't help such. My answer is, 'no funds.'"

Again from my report after my visit to the Lac Courte d'Oreille bands I copy; "Two things were noticeable. First, the cleanly appearance of all the Indians. I saw no sights from which to turn with disgust, as upon former visits, and I could not but remark this change. Three years ago when I first visited these bands, I found them dirty, ragged and filthy, lazy and ignorant, in a degree beyond anything I had ever imagined. Their blankets, clothing and hair were perfectly alive with vermin, and they had the wood lands covered with birch bark wigwams. To-day I found them generally dressed in civilized costume, their hair combed, and their faces and clean white shirts showing that some one has taught them the use of soap and water. The absence of the birch bark wigwams assures me that many have taken advantage of the teachings of Mr. and Mrs. Holt, and built houses in which to live and entertain their friends. Then, again, I was not in fear of losing my life as upon former visits. The Indians were gentle in their demands. They spoke and acted reasonably. They have grievances that would make white men mad, yet they trust the Great Father.

I never had a more agreeable visit with any of my Indians. They seemed pleased to have the surveyor among them, with a prospect of getting their 80s. Some seven or eight houses are in course of erection, but owing to want of funds the work has been suspended. One hundred and fifty houses should be built upon this reserve the coming year. Now, when we think that a band of some thirteen hundred lazy, indolent Indians have been turned into fine-looking, clean and industrious, let me say, citizens of the United States within three years, at an expenditure of some $25,000, have we not something to rejoice over?

The school is prosperous. I attended one morning, and Mrs. Crocker passed the several classes before me in review with very satisfactory results. She is certainly the right person in the right place. The children seem to respect, honor, and really love her. Now all this has been done under the most trying circumstances.

Civilized bands, of whom the Red Cliff stands first, have made application for 80s, and the four sections of the original reserve have been divided, surveyed, and most of the land has been applied for, under the provisions of the treaty of 1854.

The Bad River bands are progressing slowly. The want of funds to assist them this year has been a great drawback. They accepted their 80s last year, in hopes the Government would assist them in clearing land and building houses. The young men have become weary and disheartened at not receiving help. Those who planted this year have fine prospects. Many families will have potatoes to sell, after providing for their own wants, during the winter. The sugar and rice crops are failures, not more than a quarter of a harvest in either. Furs have been scarce and hard to obtain.

SCHOOLS.

One at Grand Portage, one with the Bois Forte, one with the Lac Court d'Oreille, and one with the Red Cliff bands, being the day-schools, and the manual labor and boarding-school at Odanah, have without exception been successful—that is, if day-schools can be made successful. I very much question the policy of day-schools for Indians, but under the circumstances, and living in hopes that true benevolent friends will yet come to the assistance of my people, I have kept up the day-schools; knowing that if they are permitted to dwindle away, no effort will ever be made to revive them.

GREEN BAY AGENCY, WISCONSIN.

Joseph C. Bridgman, Agent.
W. W. Wheeler, Farmer and Teacher.
Miss M. S. Schlieman, Teacher.

The headquarters of this Agency are at Keshena. The work has been greatly retarded by the interference of the Catholics as well as by the lack of funds. Three schools have been sustained among the Stockbridge and Oneida tribes. An advance has been made among the Menomonees in combining a Manual Labor Boarding School with the day school at Keshena.

The Agent writes:

"The Stockbridge Tribe, numbering only one hundred and twenty-one, have but a small school, the average attendance of which has been twelve. As the Government has withdrawn the appropriation of $400 a year for school purposes, the tribe in full council voted to employ Mrs. J. Slingerland as teacher for six months, paying her from their interest fund $200, for her services. The children are all small, but bright, keen and quick to learn, and it is to be regretted that more do not attend.

"The Oneida schools are still kept by the two missionaries appointed by the Methodist and Episcopal Societies, notwithstanding the withholding of the fund heretofore paid them by the Government. The Methodist teacher feels this severely, as the salary paid him by the Society has been cut down to $250 a year, his only income, and he has notified me he cannot continue his labors among them unless the Government renews his salary. His school attendance has been twenty-three. There has been a deep religious interest in his church the last winter, resulting in some fifty additions to his membership, the total at this date being two hundred.

"Among the Menomonees a radical change has been made by closing the Ocoute Settlement School, and combining a Boarding and Manual Labor with the Keshena day school, placing it under the care of W. W. Wheeler, who for the past two and a half years has been the farmer of the tribe, with Miss M. S. Schlieman, assistant. The average attendance for the term has been twenty-two. This change made May 1st, met with the hearty approval of the tribe, and would have proved a grand success but for the interference of the Roman priest, who immediately expelled from his church parents who allowed their children to attend school as boarders. We have the promise of a large attendance upon the opening of the next term, Sept. 11th. Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Stryker, teachers of the West Branch school having resigned, J. Raphael Rogers, a graduate of Oberlin was secured to take their place, and he found the interference of the priest working against a full attendance, but his school of an average of ten made good progress during the first term.

"I regret that I am unable to report any marked progress in the religious element of this tribe, unless the action of the Roman priest may work for good, as expelled members of his church are questioning the piety of a religion that forbids servants working in Protestant families and that will not allow its adherents to be present when people come together for the sole purpose of worshiping God. The way has not opened for active Christian work among these Pagans, but the earnest, consistent Christian life of the employés as they come into daily contact with the wild Indian speaks for the Master and must produce fruit in its season.

FORT BERTHOLD AGENCY, DAKOTA.

Chas. W. Darling, Agent.

The Agent reports:

"At present the population of the different tribes is as follows: Arickarees 618; Gros Ventres 403; Mandans 241; total 1,359 This includes those employed as scouts at the different military posts along the river. Three were killed with Custer in that last sad charge. On the 17th of last June, two Gros Ventres, cousins, got into some altercation which resulted in the death of one of the disputants. Wood, the murderer, fired in self-defense, but that to an Indian makes no difference; he has been a fugitive ever since with his squaw and children, and it will probably be long before they will dare return. This is the only instance of the kind within my knowledge, and it really seems a marvel, that a people so low in the scale of civilization as we count them, should contrive, crowded together as they are, to live so amicably. Like those of a higher civilization they have their quarrels, but it is not often one assumes serious proportions. In the case already cited, the whole affair was the more regretted by the whites here, in that Wood was one of our most industrious workers, a staunch friend of the white man, as he has often proved, never better I think than by the magnanimous way in which he bore an imposition by a steamboat captain, who early last spring bought several cords of wood of him, paying for it with nothing better than Confederate scrip. The poor fellow did not discover the cheat until he had taken his money to the store to trade, when he was told how worthless it was. He said it was very bad, and wished nothing said about it, lest Indians who did not like the white man should be made glad. Perhaps I might as well mention right here the unscrupulous conduct of most of these boat captains in supplying their boats with wood, the more they steal and the less they pay for, the greater their satisfaction. You can understand, perhaps, how small is the incentive offered under such circumstances to Indians in this branch of industry, or how little such conduct serves to strengthen their belief in white men generally.

"The owners of thousands of acres, much of it abounding in game, these people are huddled together in a little village, covering but three or four acres, and do comparatively little hunting, while their life long enemy, the restless warlike Sioux occupy a large portion of their royal possessions. Few in number, the only safety for these three tribes, until more peaceful times, is in union; this makes them very accessible to Missionary or Agent, but still it is to be regarded as a misfortune for them on various accounts, certain it is that less dense living would very much improve their sanitary condition.

"So far as observation or experience have taught me, the greatest difficulty to be overcome in making working men out of these Indians is to find some sufficient motive for their exertion. Shut in and away as they are from all markets for produce and demands for labor, there is very little incentive for work. There was no trouble in getting the coal and wood needed for the Agency last winter, and many have been equally industrious in getting up hay during the past summer, some working under disadvantages that would have disheartened a pale face. One old fellow in particular had no better rake than his ten fingers. The squaws still form the large body of workers, and perform the drudgery of the camp, but for a man to work is no longer a reproach, and of regular workers we count forty, one of them a tall finely developed Gros-Ventres, whose manly bearing gives one an involuntary respect for him. I see no reason to doubt that uplifted by a Christian enlightenment and surrounded by more favoring circumstances, these people would become industrious and self-supporting.

"In regard to their dress, perhaps twenty or twenty-five wear citizens dress, many others their own, modified by the introduction of a garment or so, which they find to be a very good thing, particularly in the winter. But there are some who walk about with all the native disregard for covering, one old chief in particular, who seemed to delight in appearing during the severest cold, clad in no more than his robe and moccasins, the robe usually falling in a hardy fashion away from one bare brawny shoulder. None of the women have abandoned their own peculiar dress.

"One day school has been maintained under one teacher who in the face of many discouragements taught her wild pupils for seven months, with an average attendance of twenty-three. A Boarding and Manual Labor School should be established here for the education of Indian children. With all their restlessness and intractability, these children showed themselves ready learners. The school will re-open on the first of November under more favoring circumstances. It is to be held in a room of the new mission house, and the teacher's efforts will be supplemented by those of Mrs. Hall, wife of the missionary located here, who is a teacher with years of experience.

"Mission work proper can hardly be said to have gained a footing here, and any opinion as to what it may or may not accomplish, can not be based upon results already attained. Mr. Hall reached his field of labor on the ninth of May last, and has been busily engaged during the summer in the erection of the mission house, which for a time is to answer the triple purpose of chapel, school and dwelling. He seems to be most heartily enlisted in his work, and under a continuance of the present Indian policy, it is difficult to see why its prosecution should not be productive of much good. Three Sabbath services are contemplated so soon as the house can be used for such purposes; until then, as previously, there is but one each week at the house of an old interpreter."

SISSETON AGENCY, DAKOTA.

J. G. Hamilton, Agent.

The number of Indians in this Agency is about eighteen hundred, and the reservation is some seventy-six miles long. Each able-bodied Indian is located on a farm of one hundred and sixty acres, for which he holds a certificate of allotment, and he cannot be dispossessed of this land as long as he occupies it. One Manual Labor School has been sustained for nine months of the year, and one district school for four months. The Agent's report is good. We give extracts from it, calling special attention to the work among the women, which he earnestly desires should be continued:

"The Indians here have long enjoyed the benefit of the self-sacrificing labors of Rev. Dr Riggs and others, missionaries of the American Board, and the result of their labors is now manifest in five native churches, officered by native pastors, and an aggregate membership of three hundred and ninety-five. Although the Gospel here, as elsewhere, meets hindrances, still its advance is steady, and its hold upon the hearts of these Dakota people is great, and is becoming stronger with time.

"The Indians have given up tent life and live in houses. Many of them have as comfortable and tidy homes as the most of frontier farmers. As no timber grows here, excepting oak and other hard woods, it is not possible to furnish finishing material equal to the demand, hence many houses are covered temporarily with sod roofs. The hope of obtaining shingles, flooring, siding, etc., induces the Indians to labor diligently to acquire the credit necessary to entitle them to aid in this direction. No supplies are issued to Indians, except in return for labor performed or produce delivered. They receive credit on the books of the office at certain fixed prices for all labor done, and receive rations and such other aid as the resources of the Agency allow, every month that they have credit on the books.

"The good effects of this system are seen in the number of houses occupied by Indians, built by themselves, the number of farms opened, the acres of land fenced and cultivated; and it is not unreasonable to expect that each succeeding year will show still greater improvements.

"In educational matters, owing to the limited amount of funds available from the Government, we have only been able to sustain a Manual Labor School for nine months of the year, and a district school for some four months. There are five district school buildings, in as many districts, in which schools should be taught a portion of each year; but until Congress awakes to the necessity of educating Indian children, and appropriates money for this object, the buildings here must remain unoccupied.

"The most encouraging work done on the reserve the past year has been the work among the Dakota women by Mrs. Curtis, under the auspices of the Women's Board of Missions. It has been fruitful of good, and I regret to learn that Dr. Riggs has decided to abandon it through lack of mission funds. It is an open field of labor, most promising indeed, and it is most cordially commended to those who desire to see the Indians progress. Eight hundred dollars will support two laborers in this work a year; and the good that may be done can scarcely be estimated. Will it not be possible for the Association to take up and carry forward this work?"

SKOKOMISH AGENCY, WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Edwin Eells, Agent.

Rev. Myron Eells, Missionary.

The Agent reports the school as averaging over thirty scholars, an increase of thirty per cent over former years. The Indians have raised and sold more hay than ever before, and have more cattle. They have been accumulating about them many of the comforts of life. The attendance on Sabbath services has been good, and during part of the year there seemed to be a somewhat deep and general interest in religious matters. The Agent has a continual battle with the liquor traffic at this Agency. Of the conflict this year, he thus writes:

"Early last fall by a complication of favorable circumstances, I succeeded in convicting quite a number of persons for selling liquor to Indians, and having them punished. This for a while put a very effectual stop to the traffic, but on the other hand aroused the fierce opposition of the whiskey ring in this vicinity, which has done its utmost to prevent my succeeding again in a similar manner. Their efforts have caused me some trouble and annoyance, but I still hold the whiskey element in fear, though by no means can I entirely prevent this unholy traffic."

The missionary, Rev. Myron Eells, gives the average attendance on Sabbath-school as eighty-five, on prayer meetings twenty-seven, on public worship ninety, and the number of families under pastoral care seventy-three. The total membership of the little church is eighteen.

He says:

"Regular preaching services are held every Sabbath at eleven A. M., and the Sabbath-school immediately afterwards. Once a month in the evening there is preaching exclusively for the whites, and a collection taken up for some object. A regular church prayer meeting is held every Thursday evening, a ladies' prayer meeting once in two weeks on Wednesday afternoon, and a children's prayer meeting once in two weeks on Saturday afternoon. From the latter, three have united with the church on profession of faith.

"I have held forty-five other services with the Indians on the reservation, part of them being with the school boys, and the rest with the older Indians at their homes. I have also made two trips one hundred miles distant, holding twenty-four services there among the Clallam Indians. When I am not with them they usually hold services on the Sabbath and on Thursday evening, their chief taking charge.

* Transferred to Baptist Mission.
† " " Wesleyan Mission.
‡ " " Episcopal Ch.

The above report indicates fully the condition of the churches, &c., in Jamaica, and the transfers that have been made.

The subjoined letter from Rev. Mr. Thompson, the only remaining missionary in active service in the field, shows the care used in making the transfers. It will be seen, too, that he expresses the hope that ere long the remaining churches may, in like manner, be placed in other hands, and the wishes of the Executive Committee, to close our work on the Island, be carried out.

"Having been left in full charge of the churches and schools of the Jamaica Mission, I felt it to be my duty to take steps with a view to a transfer to other religious organizations, in accordance with the wishes of the A. M. A., with which I fully concur.

"From various letters in your possession it will be seen that our object has been attained in part, and it is probable that we may be prepared to transfer the three remaining churches and schools at no distant day.

"In the transfer of the schools we have been careful to make the change agreeable to the wishes of all parties interested, and to the credit of the A. M. A. The schools were well supplied with appliances, and regularly organized under teachers who have grown up under the fostering care of your missionaries, some of whom have gone to their reward.

"Much care has been taken in the transfer of the two churches, Brainerd and Chesterfield, to the Baptist mission. The Mission premises are of considerable value, situated in healthy localities, and in thickly populated districts; the respective properties being regularly held in trust for the good of the people.

"The additions to our churches have been comparatively few during the year, but it is known to me that others are desirous of uniting with us; at the hopeful little church at Providence, for instance, there were several who applied for church fellowship just as I was about to leave the Island, and who will, doubtless, be received when I return to the field.

"But while we have much to be thankful for and to rejoice over, our hearts are often made sad because of the inconsistency and disorderly walk of some of our company. I need not enter into particulars; every missionary will understand it, and then it becomes all the more painful when we have to bear our sorrows alone."

MENDI MISSION, WEST AFRICA.

There are three stations. Good Hope Mission in Bonthe on the Island of Sherbro. Missionaries—Rev. J. K. Billheimer and Rev. Barnabas Root. The latter is occupied chiefly in the translation of English into the Mendi language, which is spoken by the inhabitants throughout a large tract of heathen country. Teachers—Elias Tucker and Mrs. During; Buel Tucker, printer; Mr. Jewett, assistant translator for the Mendi language. Buildings—Mission-house, church, school-house.

Debia, an out-station from Good Hope, has a school-house and a house for the native teacher, Samuel Goodman, who has been educated in the mission of Good Hope.

Avery Station. Mahno on the Bargroo River. Workers—Mr. and Mrs. Burton, Mr. James Kirk, and Mrs. Thomas. Church members resident, included in Rev. J. K. Billheimer's statistics of the Good Hope Station seven, and seven others who attend Communion, and are, it is hoped, Christians. Number of children in the school, twenty-nine. Buildings— Mission house, church, where school is held, mill, store, shed for lumber and produce, fifteen houses built of slabs for laborers, four boats, one the "Olive Branch," for missionaries when travelling, one small boat and two boats for cargo, and coffee farm.

Avery Station is about one hundred and twenty miles southeast of Freetown, situated on the Bargroo river, and is on the borders of the country occupied by the Mendi people. The Bargroo river is navigable for large vessels at all seasons of the year to within four miles of the Avery Station, and on its tributaries are many large towns where missionaries would be kindly received, and these towns can be easily reached in from three to five hours by boat.

This tract of country has for some years been disturbed by frequent wars, but through the efforts of the English Government, peace has been established. Avery Station is favorably situated for health, being on high land, and as far as the country has been visited, it has been found to be rolling and hilly, abounding in streams of clear water. About two miles from the mission house is a mountain, the elevation of which is one thousand feet. This is considered a favorable point to locate the buildings for an Industrial Training School.

The condition of affairs in Good Hope Station in the early spring may be learned from the following, received from Rev. Barnabas Root. The health of this dear brother is not firm. He has suffered much from throat difficulty since reaching Africa. He devotes himself to school work and translation.

"Our mission is in a very interesting condition just now. It is known all over the country, and, I believe, everywhere respected. We are able to see that much good has been done. I think those who have always been slow to believe on this point are beginning to see and be encouraged by it. All over the country are to be found people who have been either directly or indirectly benefited by the mission; some of these are now chiefs and men of influence in the country. It is true they are not all leading strictly Christian lives—but they are living much better than their fathers before them, and are always friendly to the mission and its work. The country is opened to us in a way that it never was before; in almost any town in Sherbro our school and religious work would meet with a hearty welcome from the people. I hope the time is not far distant when we shall be able to do a much larger work. I have often thought what an addition of strength it would be to us, if we could only get some of those good people down South—men like Mr. Gomer, who is doing so much good for the people at Shengay.

"The country is in that peculiar condition called the transition state. There has been much real progress in civilization within the last ten or twelve years, but morals are frightful, worse than in the purely heathen state. In this respect our work is both great and difficult.

"You have heard of the new work at Debia. The school was opened there in our new chapel last week. The number of pupils was small, but there are good prospects for a speedy increase. The work there was begun almost a year ago, and the school house would have been ready for use months ago, but I was obliged to leave it to go to Madeira for my health, and it stood just as I left it until I came back. I feared the people would lose their interest by the long delay. This has in a measure proved so. The history of the enterprise is briefly this. On my arrival here from America, I paid a visit to my relatives at Debia, and spent a few days with them. Supposing that I had come to live among them, a very pleasant site was given me for a house. I told them I must live at the mission station, as my work was to be there, but if they liked we might build a school house on the place, and give the town a good school. This they readily and cheerfully agreed to. I had seen how very finely the school at Shengay, built right in the country town and among the people prospered, and how much interest the people took in it. I was anxious to try the experiment in our work, and I thought the time and place very favorable to begin it. Debia is about four miles from Good Hope, towards the south end of Sherbro Island, and in a much healthier region. The town is not very large, but there are many Fahals, or villages, near by, besides it is on an important roadstead to the interior of the Island. The chief thing aimed at in beginning the work there was to follow the people's own ways as to the house and place, so that they might feel perfectly at home in it. So we built a chapel in every respect a country house—only better in shape and size. We have a spacious, airy and comely chapel and school house, 40 by 22 feet in size. I noticed the school-house at Shengay was a country Barre, or house, and the country children seemed to be much at home in it. I am strongly in favor of going half way to meet the people in these respects when it can be done.

"I want to see a pure, simple and natural Christianity among our people here. I would prefer that Christianity come unattended by that officious hand-maiden modern civilization—I think it possible—come into our simple dwellings, make us Christian Africans, raising us slowly, but surely and naturally. I feel much encouraged by the Debia work. They call it here my hobby."

Mr. Billheimer wrote from Good Hope, March 5th, as follows:

"We had most precious meetings yesterday. At 11 A. M., seven persons were received into the church, after which the Communion was administered. The services were very solemn and impressive. I should think about forty persons partook of the bread and wine. In the evening at a prayer and conference meeting, we had a large congregation. We usually continue these meetings about an hour, but I was unable to close last evening inside of an hour and twenty-five minutes. Our congregation has been steadily growing in numbers. The outlook is very hopeful. The most serious attention is paid to the preaching of the Word. I believe the Lord is about to do a great work here."

Of the results of Mr. Smith's explorations we have as yet only received the following letters. We hope there will be found among his papers or letters written to personal friends some further facts or opinions as to the re-organization of our mission on the Western Coast.

FREETOWN, SIERRA LEONE, West Africa, May 22, 1876.

When I wrote you last I was about taking passage for the Gambia, with a view to explore the river some 400 miles for a mission field among the Wallis. On arriving at the mouth of the Gambia River, April 29th, I found that the only steamer which plies on the river was disabled and could not be repaired for some weeks. The colonial Governor kindly offered to send me up in the steamer if I could wait for the repairs. The alternative was to go up in a trader's cutter, trusting to wind and tide. Either course would likely bring me into the rainy season and thus cause unusual danger of fever. The information, however, received at Gambia from officers of the Government and the missionaries, led me to doubt so seriously the probability of finding an open field at the present among the Wallis that it would hardly have been advisable to make the journey for the purpose of further information. The British Protectorate does not extend beyond one mile from either bank of the river, which generally covers the mangrove swamps, and the natives are in no degree subjected to British authority.

Only a few weeks before my arrival, one of the tribes had demanded the return of some fugitive slaves, but the Governor refused the demand. A short time after, the Governor had occasion to visit this tribe on official business, when the natives undertook to seize him, and he barely avoided being held captive, subject to the return of the escaped slaves. This fact, of itself, shows the disturbed state of the country, and that an essential element of an enlarged mission to Africa, viz. a protecting government, native or otherwise, is wanting for the present on the Gambia. I believe that some day, and, perhaps, not long hence, England will assume control of matters on the Gambia river, and for some distance north and south, and also open a route of travel and trade from Barrakonda on the Gambia to Sego on the headwaters of the Niger, and that then Sego will offer one of the best of mission fields, itself far within and opening across the continent. For the purpose of general information respecting the people and, the country, which will be useful when this route of trade is opened, I should have been ready to undertake the Gambia trip as far as Barrakonda, and thence by land to the Wallis, if the Government steamer had not been disabled.

I reached Sierra Leone on the 1st of May, and the next day at evening went on the Sherbro steamer to Bonthe or Good Hope Station on the Sherbro Island. Here I found Mr. Root and Mr. Billheimer, and two native helpers as school teachers. Four miles out, Mr. Goodman, another native helper, is teaching a school at Debia. This constitutes the Good Hope Station. There is a church membership of about forty, including the eight new members lately added. The two schools at Good Hope and Debia number from fifty to seventy-five pupils. The scholars, the church members, and the Sabbath congregation, are mainly from what is known as the "Sierra Leone people"—that is emigrants from Sierra Leone. Within the last fifteen years, the whole native population have retired and the Sierra Leone colonists or emigrants have come in. They are not hopeful as a class for any future work. They are traders and jobbers of one sort and another, and use the most wretched nondescript of a language, Sierra Leone English, which is neither African nor European, but consists of such English words, and put into such forms and combinations as a savage, or a "Heathen Chinee" is most likely to use when he first begins to attempt the Anglo-Saxon tongue. How such language came to be brought into use as a vehicle of thought for educated men is one of the wonders of this wonderfully dark country. No heathen language can be so utterly poor and barren.

I was down with a hot fever when the steamer came to the wharf at Good Hope, but it soon passed off, and after one day I took passage in the "Olive Branch" for Avery Station at Manah on the Manah river, four miles from the Bargroo river, and about forty miles from Good Hope. The "Olive Branch" is an open boat, with eight oars and two masts with large sails—manned by a native captain and crew. She is a fine craft, and with a fair wind will make time with any of the coast steamers. She was built at the mill by native carpenters under Mr. Burton's direction. The "Olive Branch," with her African crew, brought me from Avery to Sierra Leone, via Good Hope, a distance of 160 miles. The last 60 miles we came before the wind in less than ten hours—but the night before we were obliged to go in shore and anchor while a tornado swept over us, and until a strong head wind subsided.

Avery presents a different field for mission work from Good Hope. It is forty miles from the "civilization" (?) of the coast, and is in close proximity to the Mendi people proper. It is on higher ground and above the mangrove swamps, and, consequently, is a much more healthy situation. In fact I doubt whether there are many places along the western coast, until you get back some distance and into some mountain range, which surpass Avery in healthfulness of climate. During my stay the thermometer ranged from 75° to 86°. This was the beginning of the rainy season. This mission station differs from Good Hope and others of the Mendi Mission, and indeed of all other missions on the West Coast except the Basle mission at Accra, in the industrial feature introduced by Mr. Burton some years since. In one of his visits from Good Hope in the back country, Mr. Burton came upon a swift running stream of clear water, just where it fell over a ledge of rocks some 12 or 15 feet. He had passed on the way parties of natives cutting out boards from their hard, almost iron wood trees, with their hand saws in the most toilsome manner. As Mr. Burton saw this power throwing itself down the rocks he could not help but ask, for what purpose is this waste? You are familiar with the sequel. The raising of the funds for a saw-mill, its erection, its good service, paying for itself and all its running expenses, in lumber for the mission, or put into market. There can be no question as to the beneficial effects of this industry. It furnishes the natives useful employment—gives them new ideas of life and gathers a little community around, who are closely allied to the mission, and can be brought much more easily than any others under educational and religious influences. In this latter respect, however, the opportunity has not by any means been improved as it should have been, either for schools or religious work, owing to the want of an adequate missionary force. The past cannot be recalled, but its mistakes can, I trust, be obviated in the future. So far as I can now judge, Avery offers as favorable a base for progressive interior work as any point along the West Coast. The Mendi people are within reaching distance. They number from 100,000 to 150,000. They are on the whole a promising race—good physique, sprightly minds and of an enterprising disposition. They are well disposed and will probably be ready to receive teachers and missionaries at their towns much faster than suitable missionaries and teachers will be found ready to go.

Mr. Burton and wife returned to this country soon after the death of Mr. Smith, and they await the will of Providence in regard to their return. Advices from the station at Avery since they left represent the condition of affairs there as favorable.

Constitution of the American Missionary Association.

Incorporated January 30, 1849.

ART. I. This Society shall be called "THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION."

ART. II. The object of this Association shall be to conduct Christian missionary and educational operations, and diffuse a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures in our own and other countries which are destitute of them, or which present open and urgent fields of effort.

ART. III. Any person of evangelical sentiments,* who professes faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, who is not a slaveholder, or in the practice of other immoralities, and who contributes to the funds, may become a member of the Society; and by the payment of thirty dollars, a life member; provided, that children and others who have not professed their faith, may be constituted life members without the privilege of voting.

ART. IV. This Society shall meet annually, in the month of September, October, or November, for the election of officers and the transaction of other business, at such time and place as shall be designated by the Executive Committee.

ART. V. The annual meeting shall be constituted of the regular officers and members of the Society at the time of such meeting, and of delegates from churches, local missionary societies, and other coöperating bodies—each body being entitled to one representative.

ART. VI. The officers of the Society shall be a President, Vice-Presidents, a Recording Secretary, Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, two Auditors, and an Executive Committee of not less than twelve, of which the Corresponding Secretaries shall be advisory, and the Treasurer ex-officio, members.

ART. VII. To the Executive Committee shall belong the collecting and disbursing of funds; the appointing, counseling, sustaining, and dismissing (for just and sufficient reasons) missionaries and agents; the selection of missionary fields; and, in general, the transaction of all such business as usually appertains to the executive committees of missionary and other benevolent societies; the Committee to exercise no ecclesiastical jurisdiction over the missionaries; and its doings to be subject always to the revision of the annual meeting, which shall, by a reference mutually chosen, always entertain the complaints of any aggrieved agent or missionary; and the decision of such reference shall be final.

The Executive Committee shall have authority to fill all vacancies occurring among the officers between the regular annual meetings; to apply, if they see fit, to any State Legislature for acts of incorporation; to fix the compensation, where any is given, of all officers, agents, missionaries, or others in the employment of the Society; to make provision, if any, for disabled missionaries, and for the widows and children of such as are deceased; and to call, in all parts of the country, at their discretion, special and general conventions of the friends of missions, with a view to the diffusion of the missionary spirit, and the general and vigorous promotion of the missionary work.

Five members of the Committee shall constitute a quorum for transacting business.

ART. VIII. This Society, in collecting funds, in appointing officers, agents, and missionaries, and in selecting fields of labor, and conducting the missionary work, will endeavor particularly to discountenance slavery, by refusing to receive the known fruits of unrequited labor, or to welcome to its employment those who hold their fellow-beings as slaves.

ART. IX. Missionary bodies, churches, or individuals, agreeing to the principles of this Society, and wishing to appoint and sustain missionaries of their own, shall be entitled to do so through the agency of the Executive Committee, on terms mutually agreed upon.

ART. X. No amendment shall be made in this Constitution without the concurrence of two thirds of the members present at a regular annual meeting; nor unless the proposed amendment has been submitted to a previous meeting, or to the Executive Committee in season to be published by them (as it shall be their duty to do, if so submitted,) in the regular official notification of the meeting.

* By evangelical sentiments we understand, among others, a belief in the guilty and lost condition of all men without a Saviour; the Supreme Deity, Incarnation, and Atoning Sacrifice of Jesus Christ, the only Saviour of the world; the necessity of regeneration by the Holy Spirit, repentance, faith, and holy obedience, in order to salvation; the immortality of the soul; and the retributions of the judgment in the eternal punishment of the wicked, and salvation of the righteous.

It having been arranged by previous agreement that this day should be observed by the officers of the Society and the workers in the field, as the annual day of special prayer for the work of the Association, a half-hour was spent in devotional exercises, conducted by Prof. H. S. Bennett, with remarks and prayers by different individuals.

Rev. Dr. Beard, in behalf of the Committee of arrangements (appointed in advance by the Executive Committee of the Association,) consisting of Rev. Dr. Strieby, Rev. G. D. Pike and himself, announced the Order of Exercises for the ensuing sessions.

The Association then took a recess till 7:30 P. M.

At seven and a half o'clock P. M., the Scriptures were read by Rev. W. B. Brown. Rev. Geo. M. Boynton offered prayer. Rev. F. A. Noble, D. D., delivered a discourse from Eph. iv: 25,—"For we are members one of another." Rev. M. M. G. Dana, D. D., offered the closing prayer. Benediction by Dr. Noble.

The Association then adjourned till 9:30 A. M. of Wednesday.

Wednesday, October 24th.

A prayer-meeting was held at 8:30 in the Chapel.

At 9:30 the Association was called to order by Hon. E. S. Tobey, President of the Association. The hymn "All hail the power of Jesus' name" was sung, and prayer was offered by Rev. J. J. Hough.

Rev. Dr. Strieby read a paper entitled "The Religious Aspects of the Work of the American Missionary Association.

A paper was read by Rev. Washington Gladden, entitled "The Weapons of our Warfare."

Rev. W. S. Smart, D.D., Chairman of the Committee on Church Work, presented a report, as follows:

"The founding of churches after the polity of the Pilgrim fathers is the natural outgrowth of the work of this Society for the elevation of the colored race of our country. Established originally in the interest of a more catholic interpretation of the gospel, which recognized that in Christ "there is neither bond nor free," but that all, of whatsoever race, should share in the "glad tidings," it would be false to its history and to Christ did it not seek to confer all the blessings which the gospel brings to our world. And among these may be reckoned as not the least, the gathering together of those who by its instrumentality have been led to the Saviour, in the fellowship of Christian churches. If we need the help which such organization gives, for the development of spiritual activity, and as a safeguard to personal faith, how much more is the church a necessity to those who are just emerging from the degradation of long years of bondage. The first care of the Apostles—and in all missionary work we cannot do better than follow their example,—was to found churches. For this work Paul left Titus at Crete, to "ordain elders in every city as I had appointed thee." It was the very beginning of the missionary work for the conversion of the world to Christ, when those whose hearts the Lord had touched on the day of Pentecost "continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and in fellowship."

Out of this church, founded for the salvation of souls, came in time, as a natural outgrowth, the class of catechumens, the parish school and the university. Christianity is not the result of culture, but is the originator of all that instituted learning which has crystalized around those venerable seats of education which for centuries have trained the best intellects of the world. Oxford and Cambridge, Harvard and Yale drew their first life from the breast of Christian faith. We may doubt if they would have existed at all without the pre-existing church of Christ. Certainly they could not be what they are, and could not have exerted the wide influence they boast, without the molding influence of Christianity, and in the support of those who believed that the work of saving the world the church and the school should go together. This may seem to be a high-flown comparison. It may even provoke a smile, with the thoughtless, to mention in the same connection, universities which are the consummate flower of modern civilization, and the institutions founded by this Society,—Hampton Institute, Berea College, Fisk University, Atlanta University, and others elsewhere in the South; but in their spirit and work they are worthy to inscribe upon their seal the motto of our own Harvard, "Pro Christo et ecclesiae." They were born of the same noble and earnest desire to perpetuate and extend the blessing of an enlightened Christianity; and their design is to furnish trained and sanctified talent for the Master's service.

God has signally blessed the efforts of this Society in past years in both these directions. The pupils in her schools have not only exhibited a remarkable progress in intellectual acquirements, but conversions among them have been frequent. The Holy Ghost seems to have presided over these schools to such an extent that few are sent forth to their life work without feeling upon their hearts His consecrating power. We rejoice in this as a clear token of God's favor resting upon the work of the Society; and as indicating the direction in which its future operations shall be conducted. It is natural that this people should look to its benefactors for guidance beyond the school, in forming the institutions of a new and better permanent social order, and that they should readily adopt the principles of the churches which have labored so earnestly in their behalf.

It may be said, this people already possess Christianity, and to a large extent have churches of their own. Yes; among the triumphs of the gospel this is not the least, that to this down-trodden and long-oppressed race there should have come from the gospel of their oppressors the light of a hope of deliverance whose fulfilment is the romance of modern history. The slave-songs of this illiterate people have touched the hearts of the Christian world, with the pathos of their faith as well as with its singular clearness and strength, and have given new meaning to the words of the Saviour, "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." But we cannot overlook the fact, which is apparent to all, that the faith of this people is still lacking in many of the essentials which go to make up the best Christian manhood. They need instruction for a better conception of that gospel to which in the years of their bondage they clung so eagerly, and with such tenacity of faith. From the beginning, this Society has endeavored to so shape its operations as to secure this result. Its constant aim has been the training of men and women to a full appreciation of the characters required of those who profess to be members of Christ, and who might in time so elevate the standard of personal faith, that to faith they should add temperance and godliness. The churches founded by this Association have not been remiss in enforcing Christian discipline against such of their members as needed it; and much has been done in this way, we believe, to enforce correct living as an indispensable requisite to church membership.

Aside from this general purpose of aiding in the more thorough Christianization of the freedmen, it is not unworthy of our attention, that the advantages of the polity which we maintain, and which so largely has developed this freedom of spirit which characterizes the Congregational Churches, should be planted among this people, whose future influence upon our country and the cause of Christ, no man can predict. If the people of this race are to be, as everything seems to indicate at no remote day they may be, the instrument God is fitting by their hard contact with the highest civilization of the world for the conversion of Africa, by giving them the principles of our faith we may be sowing seeds which shall blossom all over this vast continent. It is possible that the influence of the truths which the Mayflower bore to these shores may, through this people, be again borne across the ocean, to help form the future of Africa, opening so rapidly to missionary work.

It is with great pleasure, therefore, that we note in the Theological department, an enrolment of seventy-four in course of training for the work of the ministry of Christ, and that four new churches are added to those reported last year. Fifty-nine churches with a membership of 4,014 is not, it is true, a large number, when we look at the great breadth of the field to be covered; but we trust this is but the advance-guard of an ever increasing number of Congregational Churches at the South.

The return of the descendants of those who were torn by violence from their native land, ladened with the spoils of their home of bondage, seems to be one great factor in the solution of the problem, who shall convert Africa. It seems wise to your committee that the American Missionary Association relax no effort to press forward in this department of its work. The best and most permanent results of its extensive educational effort will be secured in the establishment of churches which may be permanent centres of light to the communities in which they are placed, and from which, we trust, great numbers of missionaries for Africa are yet to come forth.

And we should remind ourselves that this large and hopeful field for Christian work will not be allowed to lie fallow, if we refuse to enter it. The Church of Rome, as Mr. Gladstone says, "with policy forever in her eye," is laying her plans to grasp for herself the future power of the freedmen in our own land. She is busy, untiring, in this as in every work to which she sets herself, sending her priests and planting her educational institutions everywhere through the South, and offering great inducements for the colored men to enter her schools. It is her boast that in no distant future she will be the church of the majority in New England. With sleepless vigilance she is pressing into every open field. We meet her emissaries everywhere, East, West and South; but, perhaps, she is nowhere so likely to be successful, as at the South. Our faith in the future of a free and pure gospel can only be fulfilled by renewed and enlarged efforts to cover the vast missionary fields which lie West and South, every inch of which will be contested by the power of Rome.

We feel after reading that part of the report which refers to church work in the South, that it cannot stand still, but ought to be advanced so far and so fast as the means furnished by the churches shall warrant. The emergency is pressing. The future of the colored man is rapidly taking shape. Even with the ballot in his hand he is powerless to assert his rights unless you give him intelligence and that force of character which Christianity alone confers. What is to be done must be done to-day.

We call most earnestly upon the churches to come to the help of this Association in this great work. It is an opportunity which the Lord has seldom made for any people. It carries in it the seeds of large and noble victories for Christ. What has already been done commends it to our generous support; and what may be done hereafter, if there is a willing heart, will hasten the day when "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ: and He shall reign for ever and ever."

After singing the hymn, "Saviour, teach me day by day," an address was made by Rev. Temple Cutler, of Chattanooga, Tenn., on the same topic.

A paper prepared by Rev. Dr. Bevan of New York City, on "The Mutual relations of England and America to the Inhabitants of Africa," was read by Prof. H. S. Bennett of Fisk University.

The Nominating Committee recommended the appointment of C. A. Richardson, Esq., of Boston, and Rev'ds R. B. Howard, G. M. Boynton, G. A. Rawson and E. W. Root, a Committee on the American Missionary, the organ of the Association, as to its future form and place of printing, and they were constituted such committee.

The Association then adjourned till 2 o'clock P. M.

At 2 o'clock P. M., the Association was called to order by Vice-president Hammond. The session was opened by singing the hymn, "Jesus, lover of my soul," and with prayer by Rev. J. C. Holbrook, D. D.

President Tobey then assumed the chair, when Rev. W. B. Brown, Chairman of the Committee on Educational Work, made a report as follows.

"The Committee to which was referred that part of the annual report relating to Educational Work submit the following:

We are rejoiced to find that notwithstanding the "hard times" now prevalent everywhere, and pressing heavily upon this Association, its work for the past year has not been diminished in quantity, while, by a more carefully systematized plan, it has improved in quality. The higher grades of schools have lost none of their former efficiency, while some of them—for example, the important Theological department at Talladega—have been more effective than formerly, and their prospects are still brightening. The lower grades of schools, in which there may possibly be somewhat less of popular enthusiasm and novelty than existed immediately after the proclamation of emancipation, are yet doing a most excellent and necessary work.

When it is said that the Association has 134 teachers in the Southern field, this does not at all measure the actual work of teaching that is there performed; for, besides the teachers actually employed by the A. M. A., there are more than 1,500 colored teachers in the South who have been qualified for their work in our schools; so that there are now nearly 100,000 pupils receiving instruction in schools of this Association, or by teachers that these schools have sent into the field. Perhaps the indirect work of the Association at the South, in stimulating a desire for knowledge, and in substituting a standard of morality for that of religious fervor, equals in value what it accomplishes directly and of set purpose.

We are glad to find that the work of the A. M. A. at the South is coming more and more into favor with the better class of the Southern people; that our schools are conceded to be second to none others in those regions, and that they are often spoken of and copied after as model schools.

What seems to be necessary to the efficient carrying forward of the educational work is practical wisdom, patience and perseverance on the part of the Association, and adequate funds from the Christian public. The task that has been taken in hand is great and difficult, and requires the prayerful and prolonged labor of all who are in any way engaged in it. But its inherent difficulty, and yet, on many grounds, its imperative necessity, is the great motive for patient continuance in well-doing. And your Committee count it a happy circumstance that so large a responsibility for this work has fallen into the hands of a society so fitted of Providence, and by its history, spirit and principles, for carrying it to a successful issue, as the A. M. A. has in the past shown itself to be, and as it doubtless will be in the future if properly sustained by the prayers and contributions of the churches.

Rev. James Powell, Dis't Sec., then addressed the Association at length, and was followed by Gen. S. C. Armstrong, Principal of Hampton Institute.

Rev. W. A. Robinson, of Homer, N. Y., read a paper prepared by Col. J. T. L. Preston of Virginia, on "The Prospect before the Colored People in the United States, and the best Mode of Aiding them."

The Minutes of the first day's proceedings were read and approved.

After some remarks by the President, Rev. D. W. Marsh, D. D. addressed the Association, after which recess was taken till 7:30 o'clock P. M.

At 7:30 o'clock P. M., President Tobey called the Association to order. After singing by the choir, Rev. Temple Cutler offered prayer.

On motion of Colonel Hammond, Rev. P. S. Knight of Salem, Oregon, was substituted on the Committee on Indian Missions for Rev. J. J. Hough, who had left the city.

Rev. M. M. G. Dana, D.D., Chairman of the Committee on African Missions, made an extended report.

A. S. Barnes, Esq., Chairman of the Committee on Finance, presented its report.

"Your committee appointed to consider the financial condition of the Association, respectfully submit the following report:—We have carefully examined the statements submitted by the officers of the Treasury, including assets, liabilities, appropriations and expenses, and we heartily commend the clearness and completeness of the various accounts. We also commend the ability and faithfulness with which the various properties of the Association have been managed. We judge that prudence has been combined with courageous promptness.

Of the assets of the Association, amounting in the aggregate to $274,968.35, we find $13,200 in property in the South not now used, and not needed in the future. We recommend, in accordance with the understood intention of the Executive Committee, that so soon as a reasonable opportunity occurs, this property be sold. We recommend the same disposition of lands in the North, valued at $28,900. Still other assets will become similarly available at the decease of the donors. Of doubtful assets the amount is only $3,271,01, and these will naturally be watched with care by the Association's financial agents.

The liabilities are such as your committee deem to be justifiable in both their nature and amounts. For the most part they are free from doubt or litigation. Upon the permanent class of liabilities, time and the already signified benevolence of holders will work a continual reduction.

Your committee have given careful attention to the appropriations as set forth in the official statement. They have gone over the items one by one, and have not perceived wherein they could with safety be materially diminished. The call is for increase and not for diminution.

With reference to administrative expenses, your committee are of the opinion that the total is surprisingly small. We find, upon inquiry, that the work which was formerly done by the lamented Secretary Whipple has, since his death, been performed by the remaining officers of the Association. Even the clerical force has scarcely been augmented. We are gratified with the consequent reduction of current expenses, yet we almost fear that it is purchased at the peril of the honored Secretary who now stands alone, and the overtaxing of his associates. We trust that the event may prove our anxiety to be groundless. In a single particular your committee would suggest to the Executive Committee the possibility of a wise reduction, viz: in respect to the financial agency in England. There can be no question that that agency has been warranted in the past; but your committee, in view of the present and prospective outlook, have doubts with regard to the propriety of its continuance.

And now we make grateful and special reference to the large reduction which has been made in the debt of the Association. One year ago, we were confronted with an indebtedness of $93,232.99. At present, owing to bequests and the sale of available assets, that amount has been reduced to $62,816.90. We feel that hearty thanks are due to God for the kind ordering which in such manner made the large reduction possible. We should have been even yet more thankful could we have seen that at least some part of the grand result was due to a general increase of interest in the Association's work, leading to a corresponding increase of the regular supplies. In point of fact, the past year has witnessed a slight falling off in the gifts from the churches. Your committee do not forget that these are times of financial depression. They do not overlook the fact that other and kindred benevolent organizations have experienced a still greater diminution of support. Yet they plead none the less earnestly against a continuance of the sad reduction. They call attention to the cause itself.

They bespeak a fresh consideration of the urgent needs of the Freedman, the Indian and the Chinaman. They ask the great constituency of the Association to remember how the national welfare, and the destiny of the Republic, and the whole progress of Christ's kingdom within our borders and, so far forth, in the world, is bound up with the evangelization of the so-called alien races. Your committee would call upon every pastor and every individual friend of Christ and humanity to do his utmost for the work entrusted to the care of this Association. Now, if ever, the watchword should be, "Let us go up at once and possess the land." In spite of financial depressions, we are able to do it. The Lord of hosts is with us! The blessing which has been ours in the past will still be vouchsafed to us. Let us humbly, and in personal consecration to the cause, resolve that when this Association again assembles in annual meeting, the glad tidings shall be sent forth that the work in the field has been enlarged and the last dollar of indebtedness paid!"

At the close of the report Mr. Barnes added a few earnest words regarding the necessities of the Society, and expressed the hope that some measures would be taken speedily to relieve the Association of its debt.

The hymn "Now be the gospel banner" was sung.

Rev. L. T. Chamberlain, of Norwich, Conn., made an address, and was followed by President Tobey and Vice-president Hammond.

Rev. Dr. Strieby made the announcement of exercises for Thursday; the hymn "Hail to the Lord's annointed" was sung, the benediction was pronounced by Dr. Strieby, and the Association adjourned until Thursday morning at half-past nine o'clock.

Thursday, October 25th.

A prayer-meeting was held in the Chapel from 8:30 to 9:30, conducted by Prof. H. S. Bennett.

At 9:30 o'clock A. M., the Association was called to order by Rev. W. L. Gage, one of the Vice-presidents.

After singing the hymn "O Sun of Righteousness, arise," prayer was offered by Rev. C. L. Woodworth.

The Minutes for Wednesday were read and approved.

Rev. J. E. Rankin, D. D., of Washington, read a paper entitled "Education in the South," followed by Rev. Geo. Harris on "The Discovery and Success of the True Method of Giving."

On motion of Rev. O. Miner, this paper was referred to the Executive Committee of the Association for publication and circulation as they may deem best.

The following Resolutions were then presented by A. S. Barnes, Esq.:

I. That in the opinion of this Association, the debt of $62,500 should be paid during the current year, and that early steps should be taken to secure this great object.

II. That it is the sentiment of this Association that its sphere of usefulness should continue to be enlarged, and that the amount of funds required for the coming year, to prosecute successfully the work before us, is at least $300,000.

III. That it should be the policy of this Association, so far as it is consistent with its operations, that no debt shall be incurred beyond its ability to pay during the financial year.

The Resolutions were adopted.

Prof. H. S. Bennett presented the following resolution:

"That the Secretaries of the American Missionary Association be invited to seriously consider the question of placing in the field at the South, as a general missionary agent, a suitable man, to be selected from among the graduates of the schools of the Association." The Resolution was adopted.

Rev. W. E. Park, of Gloversville, N. Y., Chairman of the Committee on the Chinese Missions in California, read an extended report.

This was followed by remarks from Rev. Chas. H. Pope of California.

On recommendation of the Committee on Nominations, Rev. E. W. Root and Rev. J. H. Crum were appointed to preside at the Lord's Supper in the afternoon, and Deacons Eddy of Fall River, Mass., Shelton of Birmingham, Conn., Barnes of Brooklyn, N. Y., Richardson of Boston, and Hobart of Homer, N. Y., to distribute the elements.

After the announcements for the afternoon by the President and the benediction by Rev. Dr. Dana, recess was taken till 2 o'clock P. M.

At 2 o'clock P. M., the Association was called to order by President Tobey.

Rev. F. E. Fellows of Bozrah, Conn., offered prayer.

Rev. Geo. M. Boynton read the report of the Committee on Indian Missions.

"The Committee to which was referred the work among the Indians, submit the following report:

The American Missionary Association has not attempted to do a large or general work among the American Indians. Requested by the Secretary of the Interior to nominate fit men to fill six Indian agencies, the Association accepted this responsibility. Further than this, it has only undertaken the Christian church and school work in these agencies where they were not already in operation under the auspices of other organizations. Of these, the Mission at Red Lake agency has been given over into the hands of the Protestant Episcopal Church under Bishop Whipple.

Two churches with thirty-seven members, and five schools with 287 pupils, sum up the work of the Association, at an expense during the last year of only $950. In proportion to the limited effort and expense, the results are gratifying. The school attendance has increased, and some among the boys and girls have shown the influence of their contact with Christian truth and life. Progress is evidenced in morality and the arts of civilized life; and what is most significant, manual labor is coming to be considered more and more honorable—fit for men and not for women only—and the Indians have done more sowing and reaping, more work on farm and in forest than ever before.

It is a question in the minds of your committee whether this limited work may not be wisely merged in that of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, whenever the way shall appear open for such a transfer, that the American Missionary Association may concentrate its thought and effort upon the almost unlimited wants of its great Southern field.

In regard to the general relations of the government and of the Christian people to these earliest inhabitants of the land, your committee would say in brief:—There has been long enough an "Indian question" in this land unanswered, and it is high time that the Indian question should give place to an "Indian policy," fixed and consistent.

The fact as to the diminution or increase in numbers of this people is not clear enough to affect the outlook. That they are fewer than they were a century ago is indisputable, but some of the best authorities assert that for the last twenty-five years their numbers have actually increased. Certain it is that the lessening has not been where they have been taught the arts of civilization, and have learned to live like those who have come into the possession of their lands.

The one essential condition that the Indians may become a civilized and Christian people, is that we first come to consider and recognize their individual manhood. The tribe has been regarded as the unit with which the nation has had to do. That unit should be henceforth, as with other races, the individual. This must include a recognition of individuality in the matter of responsibility to law. To obey or to receive the penalty of disobedience, should be the alternative for every man. It includes his individuality of rights, and especially the right to labor (which, though often unappreciated, is yet the best inheritance of our race,) and the right to secure the results of labor. On some of the Indian reservations even, they have been refused the privilege of cutting and selling timber. "No general law provides that Indians shall select allotments in severalty," and his title to a homestead, earned by his own industry and built by his own hands, is always dubious and insecure. It includes his individual claim to that which alone can make him a man indeed, the right to education and instruction in the Christian faith.

Public opinion needs to be formed in these directions until the pressure shall come through it upon those who make and administer the laws, until this great end shall have been reached.

A most significant statement made by the Hon. John Q. Smith, late Indian Commissioner, in his last annual report, is worthy of a constant remembrance, that our Indian wars have cost more than all the foreign wars in which the nation has ever engaged. But the question is not of spending or saving money, nor of killing or not killing the Indian. The command of Christ is to the Christian people of this land, that they carry the gospel of light and love to these men of a common humanity.

The following communication from the Dakota Mission has also been put into the hands of your committee:—

REV. M. E. STRIEBY, D.D.,
Secretary of the American Missionary Association.

Dear Sir:—"The Dakota Mission," at its annual meeting held at Fort Sully, D. T., September 13, 1877, prepared the following paper for the consideration of the American Missionary Association, with the hope that the Association may approve of the same and aid in bringing these principles before the country. The same paper was considered by the American Board at its meeting at Providence, and the Prudential Committee of the Board were instructed to communicate with our National Government in regard to it.

Yours respectfully, ALFRED L. RIGGS,
WASHINGTON, D.C., Oct. 11, 1877. Secretary of the Dakota Mission.

A PLATFORM OF PRINCIPLES IN THE MANAGEMENT OF INDIANS.

The experience gained in prosecuting the mission work among the Indians of this country during the past sixty years, constrains this Association to adopt the following platform of principles, which we think should represent the Indian policy of our country:

I. Indians are men—not much differing from others, with the same wants, and governed by the same impulses as other men.

II. Since there is, under our government, no legal arrangement for the adjustment of wrongs among the Indians, the first and great necessity on their behalf, even in the savage state, and much more as they emerge from that state, is the protection of law and subjection to its penalties. In their native state they are lawless, and often need to be restrained by force. So far the military power is a necessity.

III. So long as they remain the wards of the government, dependent to a large extent for support and help, the necessary education in books, in agriculture and in mechanic arts, should be made compulsory. No more Indians should be raised.

IV. It is certainly more economical to feed Indians than to fight them, as well as more humane and Christian, and the Reservation System is accepted as a temporary expedient in preparing them for self-support. But great care should be taken that the feeding be not continued too long, and the Reservation should terminate before it becomes a hindrance to citizenship.

V. When life and property are thus protected, and Indians take the first steps towards civilization, they should find all obstacles removed to their acquisition of real estate, by homestead or pre-emption, that by reaching the conditions of self-support, they may take their place among the other peoples who constitute our American nation.

VI. In view of the fact that the Indian service of the Government is one of complex duties, requiring special training, and that removal of its officers works evil, we believe the time has come for the establishment of a true Indian civil service, in which tenure of office shall be during efficiency and good behavior.

VII. To successfully accomplish the objects herein enumerated—to civilize, to enlighten, to educate and bring up to the highest and best style of manhood—we regard the teaching of the gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ as indispensable, and the prosecution of the missionary work among the Indians as imperative.

The document received the sanction of the American Board convened at Providence, and was committed to the Prudential Committee, to be by it in some way brought to the attention of the proper departments of the National Government.

Your committee recommend the approval of the sentiments contained in this paper of the Dakota Mission, and the appointment of a committee, to consist of Hon. E. S. Tobey (President of the Association,) Gen. C. B. Fisk, Hon. A.C. Barstow, Col. C. G. Hammond, and Rev. M. E. Strieby, D.D., to correspond with the Prudential Committee of the American Board, and if it be practicable to unite with them in such action as may to both parties seem wise.

[Signed.] C. G. HAMMOND, GEO. M. BOYNTON, P. S. KNIGHT, F. S. CLARK, DWIGHT O. MARSH.

After an address on the subject by Rev. P. S. Knight of Salem, Oregon, the report was accepted and the recommendation of the Committee was adopted.

C. A. Richardson, Esq., Chairman of the Committee on the American Missionary, the periodical of this Association, made a report accompanied with the following Resolutions. On motion the report was accepted and the Resolutions were adopted and referred to the Executive Committee.

The Resolutions were as follows: Resolved,—

I. That the American Missionary be enlarged and changed to the magazine form.

II. That its printing be transferred to New York.

III. That stated assistance be secured with the view of putting more work into the editorial department, and, at the same time, relieving the Secretary of all care as to details in this editorial work.

IV. That an advertising department be added, with the view of making it a source of income.

The Lord's Supper was then celebrated, the persons appointed for the purpose officiating.

After which, Rev. Dr. Beard cordially invited the Association, if it should be deemed best, to continue its sessions another day, and proffered the continued hospitalities of his congregation.

On motion of Rev. S. W. Brace, D.D., of Utica, it was voted that it be recommended to the Executive Committee that the $2,000 recently bequeathed to the Association by Rev. Dr. Brace, of Hartford, Conn., be applied toward the liquidation of the debt.

Rev. C. L. Woodworth then presented an invitation from the Broadway, the Winslow, and the Union Churches of Taunton, Mass., asking the American Missionary Association to hold their Annual Meeting for 1878, in that city.

The invitation was by vote accepted.

The Minutes of the present meeting were then referred to the Executive Committee for publication.

Secretary Strieby presented the following Resolution:

Resolved, That the papers read before this body may be published in full as provided for by the Committee of Arrangements, with a preface disclaiming responsibility for the opinions expressed therein; and that all the papers be referred to the Executive Committee for the publication of such of them as it shall deem best for the use of the Association hereafter.

The Resolution was adopted.

After some announcements, the Association adjourned till 7:30 P. M.

At 7:30 o'clock P. M., after a voluntary by the choir, Chancellor Haven of Syracuse University read the Scriptures and offered prayer. The hymn was sung, "High in the heavens, eternal God." An address was made by Rev. Joseph Cook of Boston, on "The Unrealized Perils of our Country," with a plea for the work of the A. M. A.

The following Resolution was offered by Rev. James Powell:

Resolved, that the American Missionary Association return its hearty thanks to the Pastor and people of Plymouth Church for the use of their house of worship in which to hold its thirty-first Annual Meeting; to the families of this and other churches co-operating for the generous and abundant hospitality furnished all who have been in attendance; to the choir who have led us in the service of song at our evening sessions, and to the reporters and press of the city for the full and accurate record of proceedings furnished by them to the public.

The Resolution was unanimously adopted.

It was voted that unfinished business found on the Minutes be referred to the Executive Committee with power.

After prayer and the Apostolic Benediction, the Association adjourned.

REPORT

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The Executive Committee of the American Missionary Association in making this their 31st Annual Report would, at the outset, gratefully recognize the goodness of Almighty God, as manifested in the harmony of their counsels and in the success of the work entrusted to them. One member of the Committee has been prevented from attending its meetings during a large part of the year by ill-health —one other was called away in the midst of the year from the scene of his earthly activities and bidden "Come up higher."

OBITUARY.

Mr. Joseph B. Beadle had been for twelve years one of the most regular, faithful and efficient members of the Executive Committee. His interest in the welfare of the Negro race in this country had been deep and practical for many years before. He had entered with hearty sympathy into the wrongs of the slaves; he had rejoiced over their emancipation; and he embraced with ardor the opportunities which opened for aiding them to an intelligent and Christian manhood. He gave not only of his ample means (and he was a constant and generous contributor to our society) but of his time and thought as well. He was rarely absent from his place, or tardy in his attendance at the meetings of the committee. He gave careful thought to all matters which came up for consideration, and his opinions were always listened to with respect as those of a prudent counsellor. He was a faithful friend to our Society and to its work, always and everywhere. In his Christian character he was eminently a man of faith, and in his Christian life a man of faithfulness. During his sickness and amid the sorrows which gathered around his home, he gave evidence that his mind was stayed on God, for he was kept in perfect peace unto the end.

The Rev. Barnabas Root will be remembered by many of the friends of the Association as a lad of eleven years, who came to this country in 1859 from Africa with the Rev. Mr. White. A son of an African chief, he had been under instruction at the Mendi Mission from the age of six. His sweet singing in his own and in our language, and his unusual knowledge of the Scriptures, at that early age attracted much notice. He came again to this country in 1863 to prepare for the ministry. He was graduated at Knox College, Galesburg, Ill. in 1870, and at the Theological Seminary in Chicago in 1873, and proved himself among the best scholars and thinkers of his classes in both Institutions. In November 1874, he was ordained to the work of an evangelist by a council of Congregational Churches in the Broadway Tabernacle Church of New York, receiving not only formal but hearty approbation for his attainments, mental vigor and Christian spirit. His health was, however, already impaired. Bronchial troubles, threatening worse things, were already upon him. He returned after his ordination to his native land. He began his work well, established a school at Debia, preached as he was able, giving his main strength, however, to the translation of the Scriptures. But his work was interrupted, and on the 10th of June, his life blood streaming to his lips, he died.

Three other deaths of those intimately associated with our work we feel called upon to mention.

Burritt H. Fee, son of Rev. John G. Fee, of Berea, Ky., died at his father's home Oct. 1st, 1876. The training of his early life had developed in him great strength of conviction and equal tenacity of purpose. He was full of the missionary spirit, and the aim of his life was to aid in the education and christianization of the people of his own State. A graduate with honors of Berea College, he studied Theology one year at Oberlin, when his health failed him and despite all that could be done, his life ebbed away. "Our disappointments are God's appointments."

Miss Eleanor E. Johnson, a native of Massachusetts, took charge of a colored school of the Association at Evansville, Indiana, as early as 1859, where she continued to reside until her death. For seven years she pursued her work amid much opposition, but with good success, winning the confidence and respect of all who made her acquaintance, while she was loved by the poor people in whose behalf she labored. As a city missionary afterwards and at the head of the Orphan Asylum, she continued to care for the poor. The Home for the Friendless was, however, the scene of her most patient and energetic labors, and the most conspicuous monument to her fidelity.

Levi Coffin was born in North Carolina in 1798. He was very early in sympathy with the wants and woes of the slaves in his native State. At the age of 26 he moved to Indiana, and 21 years later to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he kept a free labor store. He was born in, and lived a member of the Society of Friends. The picture of the old Quaker in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is said to have been drawn from him. He had the name of being acting-president of the Underground Railroad for many years. In 1862, he became the General Agent of the Contraband Relief Society. In 1863, this was merged in the Western Freedmen's Aid Association. In 1864 and 1865, he went to England to raise money and supplies for the suffering blacks. Since that time he has been connected with the A. M. A. as a collecting agent. He died at the age of nearly 78, at Avondale near Cincinnati, Sept. 16th, 1877.

GENERAL SURVEY.

THE FREEDMEN.

Whether the Negro population of the Southern states has materially increased or decreased in numbers since its emancipation, it will not be easy to determine until another census shall have been taken. Doubtless, the first effect of removing the slaves from the care of their former masters was to leave them improvident for themselves and unprovided for by others. They were unsheltered and unfed, and the death rate among them was enormous. But their condition as a whole has been gradually and constantly improving. Necessity has driven them to work with a lash more cutting than the whip of the overseer. Work for self once tried has proved another thing from work for others, and a mild ambition has been aroused in many a hitherto stolid and indifferent soul. Hundreds, who have sent children to our and to other schools, have felt the reflex influence of that contact with enterprise and enlightenment and have been quickened to improvement in cleanliness and prudence. The settled habits of the race and their former constitution make the conditions of the problem of their continuance quite other than those which have determined the gradual diminution of the American Indians. The death rate among them in the Southern cities is often several times larger than that of their white neighbors, but so is the population of the corresponding quarters of the poor in all cities North and South. On the whole, we anticipate that the next official numbering of the people will show a considerable increase of this transplanted and naturalized people. At any rate there will be no decrease for the next ten years, which will warrant any diminution in our efforts or appropriations.

Politically the condition of the Freedman is greatly altered since our last Annual Meeting. For the first time since his emancipation he has been left for a half year without constant special protection from the general government, to find his level and to make his own place among his fellow citizens It seemed very hard at first—he had been held up so long,—to leave him to go alone among those jealous of at least his new rights and privileges. The result is as anticipated. For a time the Negro loses political power. In the management of state and national affairs, he is ignored and sees but little hope in pressing himself into prominence. But this can be only temporary. He will be wanted bye and bye. The right of the ballot is his, even though he does not use it for a time. That right is a magnet, which does not lose its power by lack of use and will attract to it again those who need ballots. But for the present the offence of the ballot has ceased, and from our knowledge of the field we endorse the words of President Hayes, that there have been fewer outrages and oppressions heard of in this past six months than during any like period since the war was ended. And while there is less opportunity for present political action there is more time and quiet in which to prepare for future responsibility when it shall come. It is a favorable time for such work as ours.

Our Educational Work has been prosecuted through the year with vigor and success. Several of our schools have been reported full to overflowing, so that applicants for admission have been of necessity refused. At the same time the standard of instruction and of scholarship has been steadily advancing. We do not claim that as a whole the graduates of our Institutions have laid as broad a foundation, or are as completely furnished as those of the older normal schools, colleges and universities of the North; but we do claim that, taking into account the insufficiency or utter lack of previous preparation on the part of our pupils, the limited time they can give to courses of study and the universal necessity of labor during these few years, the results show as earnest and as intelligent instruction as any schools in the land, and that the products are such as we may be glad to own and hopeful in sending forth. The religious influence of the schools is evidenced by the large number of those who go out from them confessing and following Christ. At more than one of them it has been said, "Every member of the graduating class is a Christian," or "Every scholar is either a convert or an inquirer." Their interest in the cause of Temperance is not abated. Bands of Hope and other organizations of similar character have been maintained in connection with several of the schools.

Very full of hope and encouragement have been the increasing interest and deepening sympathy of the best class of the Southern people, in our schools. This was specially noticeable in the closing exercises of the various schools during this past year, by a large and interested attendance at which they showed their growing confidence and regard. Here, too, we may refer to frequent testimony from school commissioners and others in official positions to the capacity, fidelity and success of our student and graduate teachers.

More and more fully the Southern States and people are providing schools and means for the education of the colored children. Our work is increasingly one of co-operation, preparing competent teachers; in some instances, also, by a careful distribution of small sums extending the number of months of schooling in the year from two to four, or from three to six.

It is the normal school work, therefore, which is for the present of the greatest relative importance. The cry of the South is for teachers: not for mere schoolmasters, but for those who are educated and can teach. They welcome, and, as a rule, treat well, those who go from our schools, and call for more than we can furnish. If we make the teachers, we make the schools. Of the 5,404 students in our 26 schools under the care of 134 instructors, about one-fifth are now directly fitting to be teachers, and probably three-fourths will teach as soon as they are competent. About 1,500 former pupils of these schools have been engaged in teaching during the year.

We invite attention to the plans for industrial training connected with our institutions. Where tried it has been good for the health, character and competence of our pupils, and has in addition enabled them to pay by work a part of the expenses of their living. The only questions in regard to these relate to their economy of cost to the institutions.

But these people are yet very poor. It is too much to hope that they can many of them work their way through even a brief course of education unaided. Scholarship endowments are needed to apply in this direction. One gentleman has given and bequeathed $25,000 for this use in one institution, and there are at least six others which could use a similar endowment to great advantage.

Two of our institutions have suffered during the year by fire. December 13th, 1876, the buildings at Macon, Ga., were wholly destroyed. The Lewis High School Building and the Norwich Chapel were among the most commodious and complete in the South. Another house was occupied by the teachers. Only a portion of the furniture, &c. was saved. Feb. 16th, the Straight University Building at New Orleans, La., was also utterly consumed. The origin of these fires is unknown and must, probably, forever remain a mystery. Fortunately in both cases there was a fair amount of insurance recovered. The interruption in the teaching was only temporary; at New Orleans the school lost but a single day.

Plans are maturing for rebuilding at both these places speedily, as also at Mobile where the Emerson Institute was burned more than a year ago. It is expected that the insurance money, will, at the present low rates of material and labor, almost if not entirely replace the buildings thus lost. Some transfers of real estate and changes of location may also help.

The superintendence of these building operations, as also a general care of the school work, has been entrusted for the year to Prof. Thos. N. Chase, who has been detailed from Atlanta University for this important service.

Our three Theological Schools are well and successfully managed. The results are manifest in the character and attainments of the graduates as well as in the number of young men who have already gone from them into the active ministry. At Fisk University a special missionary course of instruction has been arranged, extending over three years, designed to impart not only the necessary store of biblical and theological knowledge, but to give practical information and preparation for missionary life in Africa. It is in connection with this work that ground was broken for Livingstone Missionary Hall on the 28th of March, a building designed to be at once a memorial of the great African explorer and a training school for missionaries to go forth into that great continent. A considerable fund has been contributed, in large part from friends in Great Britain, who are especially interested in the evangelization of Africa, and by the tuneful efforts of the Jubilee Singers.

Four new churches have been organized under our auspices during the year. The stringency of the times with us and with the colored people has prevented the beginning of many more. Our churches in the South are all young. In 1861 there were but four. From 1864 to 1869 nineteen were organized. Since 1870 thirty-eight have come into existence. These fifty-nine include a membership of 4,048, 625 having been added during the past year, 536 on confession of Christ. That they are given to Bible reading and Bible study is the best evidence of their evangelical character. The Sunday-school is in them all an important part of their organization. They count 7,213 Sunday-school scholars. But our pupils past and present reach many times that number with Bible teaching on every first day of the week.

We hear of some, though not of many, marked revival seasons during the year; it is rather over the improved quality of the converts than of their great numbers that we rejoice. The old excitement gives place to intelligent conviction, tradition and superstition to Bible knowledge, and the mere enjoyment of religion to a missionary spirit. The standard of Christian manliness and Christian living is far higher than it used to be. The desire and effort for self-support is becoming more general in these churches, though their poverty is extreme.

The early history of these Christian men and women is in many cases of thrilling interest, as it reveals the contrast between their past and present and shows how great things the Lord has done for their souls.

These churches are organized into six Conferences, which meet statedly for fellowship and fraternal counsel.

AFRICA.

Perhaps there will be no better time than now, before turning from this Negro race, to mention the changes in the aspect of the work in Africa.

At the beginning of the last year our Mendi Mission was left in weakness. Mr. and Mrs. Burton and Mrs. Billheimer had returned to this land. Mr. Billheimer was only waiting for our permission to follow them. It was not expected that either of them would return to Africa. Barnabas Root was sick and it was evident that his days were numbered. After Mr. Billheimer's return, which was early in the year, this failing man was the only missionary proper on the field. A handful of teachers and workers were there almost alone. Mrs. Mair was sent back from England. Then Barnabas died.

But, meanwhile, we were intently looking for the men to carry out the plan proposed a year ago—a reconstruction and reorganization of that work. We believed that the Lord had need of a man for a leader in that field, of peculiar gifts of body, brain and heart, of the right age, with some experience, yet with the vigor of his best years before him, of the right race if it were possible, and that a Negro of the Negroes, and we trusted that the Lord would furnish him—and we believe he has. While such a man was needed for a preacher and leader in the mission, we wanted other men to go with him and stay his hands and fill important positions. And they have come to us, too, all from different parts of the Southern field, but all we trust from the Lord and to do the Lord's work.

We called them to New York and had them for a few weeks in special instruction in the history of our Mission, and in the principles which should underlie the work, and in the character of the people and the nature of the land whither they were going.

On the 23d of September, they were consecrated to this their chosen work, in the Central Congregational Church of Brooklyn, and on the next day, in the barque Jasper, set sail with their wives and little ones, eleven souls in all, for the West Coast of Africa. Brethren, if there should be no favorable winds but those your prayers invoke, let them not fail her till she shall come to her desired haven.

God grant that there may be great things yet to be recorded of the ministries of Snelson, James and White, all three born into slavery, educated at Atlanta, Howard and Hampton, the minister, the physician, the teacher, all workers for Christ and for a Christian civilization.

We trust them to that climate, which we know has its risks, with far greater confidence than we could those of another race. We look to see them gain a speedier and a surer hold upon the people than white missionaries could hope to do. We expect to add to their numbers from year to year as God and his people shall give us the ability, and, ultimately, to establish there a school for the education of teachers and of ministers, which shall receive the native youth of various tribes, and send them forth again after a while to enlighten and to evangelize their own—to go home to their friends and tell them how great things the Lord has done for them.

It is evident how this work has grown directly out of the educational work at home. Through it these once slave boys have become the missionaries of Christ's gospel. So our work for the Negro reaches to the children, to the churches, to the great continent beyond the sea. The enterprise of men, blessed and guided by Divine providence is opening up the unknown land. What Livingstone tried nobly and heroically to do, Cameron and Stanley, profiting by his experience, and more than all by his failure, have done. The white man has not only penetrated its forests and swamps, but navigated its rivers, bounded its lakes, and marched through the land from ocean to ocean. Commercial enterprise has looked enviously upon its stores of untold wealth on which it could not lay its hand. Railroads are opened and projected from its North-eastern coast far inland. Only let the hand of Christian love be stretched as far to carry its priceless gift as the hand of commerce reaches forth for gain—only let the missionaries of the Cross be as enterprising as the missionaries of mammon, and those who send them forth give them as faithful a support; and Ethiopia shall not long stretch forth her hands begging for the bread of life, but only to bless the Lord and the Lord's messengers of truth and love, for his and their unspeakable gift.

JAMAICA.

In the Jamaica Mission, the transfer of the remaining churches and schools has been completed during the year, so that we shall have no future responsibility for that field nor expense on its account. It has taken these four years wisely and fully to carry out the recommendations made at the Annual Meeting in 1873. We trust it has been so effected that from what we have planted others may reap, the Lord giving the increase.

THE CHINESE IN AMERICA.

To bring the knowledge of Christ to these idol worshippers through their eagerness to learn the English language, is the special work of our mission on the Pacific Coast. The alphabet and the primer lead quickly to the New Testament, which is the standard Reading-book. Whatever may be the questions concerning the Bible in the Public schools, there is no question raised in these. The pupils do not care, so they learn English. The teachers care most that they learn Christ. At first it is mere reading words. Then comes the question, "Understandest thou what thou readest?" thought is awakened, explanation follows, and so at length the glad tidings is told in all its simplicity and fulness.

One sign of progress through the year has been the increased attendance on the schools. Of these 11 have been sustained, attended by 1,155 pupils. The Congregational Chinese Association has enlarged its membership to 125. The Bethany Home has been instituted by the Christian Chinese themselves, no longer contented with the quarters of their heathen countrymen. In it they have a weekly prayer meeting, and gather for Bible study. The consistent Christian living and earnest missionary spirit of the converts have been most gratifying. A few have returned to China and we hear of them as there faithfully testifying for Jesus. A new building has been erected for the Mission St. school in a new location and is now called "The Barnes Mission." It was dedicated July 23rd.

On that same evening occurred another of those unreasonable outbreaks against the Chinamen, which have from time to time discouraged our workers and hindered our work. A meeting of sympathy with the Eastern strikers was turned into a "wash house war." But the Lord protected the buildings and the people gathered at, and returning from, the service. Bethany Church was threatened and an attempt made to fire it, but without success. These conflicts of race and caste, however, always for a time curtail our work, keeping some souls away.

85 give evidence of conversion, while the number of those who have ceased from idolatry is reported as 110. The pupils in Sunday-school average 152 with 92 teachers.

THE INDIANS.

As to the general condition of these Tribes, we can only say that the last few years show an improved administration of a fundamentally bad policy. The Indian Agents have, as a rule, been honester and better men than they once were. One Agent has during the year resigned—with this exception, the agents nominated by the Association have remained and been acceptable to the Government and approved by us.

The Indians have received their rations with fuller measure and more equitable distribution than, perhaps, ever before. But all the while the disabilities under which they live are very great. The inducements to give up their roving life are very few. Until the Indian can as easily and as securely obtain a sound title to the land he improves and the house he builds as the white man, we can hope for but little general and permanent advancement in his condition. The whole system of reservations and of rations, of dealing with the Indians by treaty and by law, as tribes and not as individuals, is the greatest obstacle in the way of their advancement and absorption. To separate the good Indians from the bad; the settlers from the vagrants; the peaceable from the law-breaking; is well nigh impossible until they shall be brought to individual responsibility and dealt with one by one.

Meanwhile, we are doing what we can. Two missionaries have been in our employ the past year, and two churches maintained by them. The Church at Red Lake has been transferred to the Protestant Episcopal denomination. Five schools have been maintained at our agencies and 287 children have been gathered in them for instruction, a large increase over the former year. A free lunch of the simplest sort has been found a valuable inducement to regular attendance.

Patient labors to civilize and Christianize have met with encouraging though varying success. More lands have been cleared and sown than before, fences have been built, and simple forms of industry have been prosecuted.

We are doing but little for the Indian, and that little at great disadvantage, but that little tells and pays. The American people need a more enlightened wisdom for the management and a more earnest zeal for the evangelization of these earliest dwellers in the land.

Thus we are working to uplift into a Christian manhood the people of these three oppressed races, mainly in our own land. The problem is the same in all, though the factors vary. How can they be secured in the possession and enjoyment of their rights? How can there be implanted in them the seeds of a new and better life? How can these classes, dangerous through ignorance and neglect, be transmuted into good and useful citizens? The welfare of these races not only, but of our whole land, depends upon our reaching the right answer to these questions, and upon the faithful fulfilment of our duty to them in this light.

The Lord grant us both the wisdom and the zeal.

FINANCES.

As has been painfully known to the friends of the Association, the burden of a heavy debt has been upon it during the last few years. At the Annual Meeting a year ago it was reported as $93,232.99. The origin of this indebtedness was peculiar to this special work. The emancipating act set free four millions of slaves unable to read or write their names; gave to one-fourth of them at once the right to fight and the right to vote. They realized somewhat, as others did even more, how much they needed instruction. It was a pressure such as the nation had never seen before. The South at first did nothing. The North, feeling its responsibility for the position, gave freely. A vast work was thrust suddenly upon the Association and large means for its prosecution provided. Through the Freedmen's Bureau, the Government offered liberal aid in the erection of school buildings, to such religious and benevolent societies as would purchase the necessary land and hold the property. The Association could not refuse to accept its share in this help and in this responsibility. Out of this sudden enlargement of its work and increase of its expenditure, and also out of its diminished resources when this first outburst of enthusiasm and generosity had somewhat expended itself, the debt (grew not so much as) was projected upon the Association. It could hardly have been avoided. If it showed too much faith in the constancy of Christian givers, it would have shown too little faith in them, and in the God to whom all riches belong, not to have done as much as then was done.

But, somehow, that debt must be expunged. A year ago, a reduction of something over $3,000 was reported, though on a decreased income. It was a little beginning. We hoped, then, as we have been hoping now so long, for more prosperous times, but the prosperous times have not come, and yet, to-day, at the end of this year of almost unexampled severity and general prostration of business and commercial interests, we have the gratifying announcement to make that in addition to meeting current expenses, we have decreased the debt, reducing it from $93,232.99 to $62,816.90.

How has this been done? First, beginning at Jerusalem, by a reduction of $4,319.12 in the expenses of administration. The place vacated by the death of Secretary Whipple has not been filled, and while a heavier burden has thus fallen upon those who have undertaken the work, and while it may after a time prove too great for so few to carry, yet the Committee believe the work has thus far been done with undiminished thoroughness and efficiency.

The appropriations for the Southern field have been carefully scrutinized and kept within the narrowest limits consistent with a faithful prosecution of the work. In this direction the saving has been $15,209.68. This, however, be it borne in mind is a saving not to be rejoiced in—it is one made only of constraint, not willingly. In a work capable of, and clamoring for, indefinite expansion, to cut down the amount expended in the field is to lessen the amount of good accomplished.

These reductions have enabled us to keep the current expenses within the current receipts.

For the reduction of the debt, your Committee has been enabled to use the proceeds of the sale of certain assets, not hitherto available without great sacrifice, and also a large share of a legacy amounting to $15,000.

We feel sure that the removal of so considerable a portion of our indebtedness, and at such a time, not only will be felt as lightening our load, but will also be a stimulus to the friends of the Association to put forth their combined efforts for the entire removal of this burden. It is not a paying for past work which is asked for, but for large and valuable investments, the money value of which is many times greater than the debt, and the moral value inestimable. Many friends have from time to time expressed their desire to help, and have made conditional offers towards the extinction of this debt, but it has seemed almost a hopeless effort. But now, with so good a beginning, and with a debt already so much more easy to handle, will not these friends come forward, one by one, with large gifts or with small ones, as they may be able, to wipe out the rest, dollar by dollar to the last? Brethren, it can be done. Will you, then, untie our hands from these shackles, and unload our backs from this burden, that we may give ourselves wholly to the work before us?

Meanwhile the policy of careful economy will be continued, until and after this relief shall have been accomplished.

THE FREEDMEN'S AID SOCIETY has continued its mission of securing funds for that part of our work which has direct relation to African evangelization, helping to educate students in preparation for that field and contributing to the building of Livingstone Hall. Gen. Fisk spent some weeks in the early summer in stimulating this agency by his presence and his words. The intense interest of the English people in the Bulgarian atrocities, later in the war still in progress, and all the year in the hard times, has made their contributions smaller than heretofore.

The Jubilee Singers are still abroad. They meet with success, the most marked of the year being during a short trip to Holland, in which it was demonstrated that the interest in their songs was not lost even where the words could not be understood. They reaped a rich harvest there. It is expected that they will spend a considerable portion of the next year in Germany. They are working now especially for Livingstone Hall.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

has been published, as our friends all know, in a new form during the year, having been printed as a newspaper rather than as a pamphlet. We receive varying advice in regard to the future. We hear from some quarters that it is more read and more attractive to readers in its present form; others tell us that it is not so pleasant to read, nor so easy to keep as it, used to be.

It has been printed at Hampton, Va., instead of at New York as heretofore. We have been very glad thus to assist to a small degree in providing work for the compositors and pressmen among the students there, but from the experience of the year, are conscious of serious disadvantages arising from the distance of the printing-press from the office of publication.

The Committee desire advice in regard to both the form and place of printing for the future, and refer these matters to this meeting for decision.

THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY

has not failed in its usual kindly and liberal co-operation. We have never been refused any request which we have made for copies of the word of God to be used in any part of our field.

BEREA AND HAMPTON.

Berea College and Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute are under the direction of their own Boards of Trustees and not organically connected with the A. M. A.; but having been founded or fostered by it, and in closest sympathy in aims and efforts with it, we include in the report the usual details of their work.

WOODBRIDGE.

At Woodbridge, there is no regular pastor. The teacher of the day-school is also a true missionary, and the result of her labors the past year is embodied in the following extract:

"God is pouring out his Spirit upon us in answer to prayer, and seventeen have already found peace in believing, while the convicting power is resting upon every unsaved soul in the community so far as I have been able to ascertain. Every young man and woman in the school has found Jesus, or is seeking him. I can only say, GLORY to God. We have meetings every night except Saturday, which with our large school, tax our strength to the utmost; but God has promised "As thy day so shall thy strength be," and we believe it. Pray for us that all these convicted ones may be brought into the fold and believe in Christ."

At a later date Miss Waugh adds:—

"The Lord is still present with us to heal and to save. Since I last wrote you, five have found peace in believing in Christ—three young men and two young women. Wonderfully has the Lord answered prayer, proving his promise true—"Ask and ye shall receive," and we would give him glory while "we call upon our souls and all that is within us to praise His holy name."

"He answered all my prayer abundantly,
And crowned the work, that to his feet I brought,
With blessing more than I had asked or thought;
A blessing undisguised, and fair and free."

WILMINGTON.

"The first Sabbath after our return, the Sunday-school lesson was upon JOHN, 15: "Christ the vine; His disciples, the branches. A deep impression was made upon the mind of one of the girls, who had always been apparently unmoved. She went home thinking: "I am not a branch. I am not abiding in the vine; and unless I abide in the vine I shall be lost." For days and weeks the thought pressed on her mind, "till" as she said, she "couldn't sleep," she "felt so mighty troubled." But one night, as she lay thinking she was lost, something seemed to whisper, "Jesus came to save the lost." "Then why can't he save me?" thought she. "I reckon he can." Joy came into the troubled soul, and now she says: "I am a branch; I am abiding in the vine."

And thus abiding, she feels sure she shall never be moved. "But what should you do," asked her pastor, "if you should find yourself led into sin?" "I should quit it," was the prompt reply.

"I asked an old aunty, infirm with age and rheumatism, how it was that she was always at the prayer meeting. "Why," said she, "I'se obliged to be there, for to help." If every professing Christian felt a like responsibility, should we have so many thin, cold prayer-meetings?

From Rev. David Peebles, Dudley, N. C.

"By count, I find the average attendance at the Sabbath morning service for the quarter just closed, seventy-five, an improvement over the previous one. I see a decided improvement also in the spiritual condition of the church. Two persons united with us at our Communion, July 1st, one by letter and one reclaimed. * * * The church seems now to be enjoying a rich blessing. I have been preaching to sinners lately as faithfully as I could, and some of the members of the church are under conviction and admit they never have been Christians. Mrs. S. has for a long time conducted a young people's meeting. These are now held on the Sabbath at 5 P. M. They are well attended, and in them the first requests for prayer were made. A week ago I invited the anxious to meet Mrs. S. and myself at the church an hour before prayer-meeting, Wednesday evening. Six came and seemed very much concerned. Sabbath, I went at sundown to the church, thinking some might stay after the young people's meeting and I could talk with them. I found ten waiting for me. Three expressed hope and seemed very earnest. The prayer-meetings are full of life."

Rev. John Ingle, of McLeansville, writes:—

"The attendance on the preached word and also on the Sabbath-school, has been encouraging during the summer. We have a Sabbath-school at a point beyond Mr. Lindesey's, superintended by one of the members of the McLeansville church who lives in that vicinity. They hold their meetings and Sabbath-school in a grove, with only a little shelter of boards, but are now taking steps to build a school-house, which will render them more comfortable during the winter. I preach here every second and fifth Sabbath. This field needs a regular pastor who can give his whole time to the work."

SOUTH CAROLINA.

CHARLESTON. SOWING AND HARVESTING IN PLYMOUTH CHURCH.
By Rev. W. G. Marts.

Having earnestly sought the divine blessing upon a contemplated series of meetings in Plymouth Church, with the hope that its members would be revived by the more abundant incoming and indwelling of the Holy Spirit, and that sinners would be converted, we commenced to hold meetings about the middle of January. The prayer of faith received its inevitable answer. God blessed the means used. First there was an evident quickening of Christians. Then sinners began in great earnestness to ask what they must do to be saved; and then, one by one, as they learned to repose themselves entirely upon the Great Redeemer for salvation, found peace in believing, and realized joy in the Holy Ghost. Our meetings continued more or less regularly, during six or seven weeks. Sometimes the rain, which falls here quite copiously in February, prevented us from holding more than two or three meetings a week. But this did not interfere until towards the latter weeks of the meetings. They were quite well attended generally. But at no time was there a great crowd of people or the least excitement. A deep interest seemed to pervade the people, and much solemnity.

We adopted the inquiry-room plan with great satisfaction and with success. It was new to the people here. Prayer-meeting was carried on in the main audience-room of the church, while we were laboring with inquirers in the inquiry-room, to which they were directed to repair after each preaching service. About twenty-five persons profess to have received a "change of heart" during these meetings, and are now rejoicing in a Saviour's love. Nearly, if not quite, all of the anxiously interested ones were at first greatly distressed and thought that they must beg the Lord for mercy, and agonize much in prayer, and shed many tears, and then the Lord might be made willing to hear them and grant them their requests. We labored assiduously (and God blessed our efforts) to impress upon their minds the precious truth that they could not propitiate God—but that Christ had done that when He died for us, and that they must just believe that He is now ready and willing—longing to save them. The truly earnest ones, as soon as they saw that Christ was entreating them, ceased entreating God and just believed and were made glad.

Last Sabbath was a blessed day to us all at Plymouth Church. It was our regular Communion Sabbath, and we had looked forward to it with joyful anticipations. We were not disappointed. God's smile was upon the city—in the soft air and beautiful sunshine—and we felt that he was with us in the sanctuary. Seventeen of the NEW members of Christ's great family were added to the church. A number of them were baptized. Much interest was manifested in all the services, and not a little tenderness of feeling pervaded the audience (which was large) at times. It was remarked by more than one, "This is a day long to be remembered." It is often said, too, "We have never had such times since the church was organized." Then they were invariably directed to thank and praise God, and him alone, who has thus blessed them. More of those who are numbered among the recently saved ones propose to unite with us at a subsequent communion season.

We hold a prayer-meeting every afternoon in the school building. Four of the pupils who have attended are now trusting the precious Saviour. Six of the pupils profess conversion—two were converted at the church. We make Tuesday and Wednesday evening meetings at the church revival meetings.

GEORGIA.

MIDWAY CHURCH AND SCHOOL.

Our readers have been pretty fully informed in regard to old Liberty County, Georgia, its Congregational church and community—the removal of the white people at the close of the war, the purchase of the lands in small parcels by the blacks, the transfer of the colored church to the Presbyterian body, and the organization of one new Congregational church a few miles distant. Rev. Floyd Snelson, pastor of that church, is winning the confidence of those around him, both white and black, and is building up the church and school work as may be seen by the following communication from the "Hinesville (Ga.) Gazette," written by Rev. Mr. Waite, the (white) pastor of the old Midway Church, a member of Knox Presbytery, which is connected with the Northern General Assembly.

"Our community of Freedmen are evidently destined to great improvement in prosperity and intelligence. The evidence of their rising prosperity, and the promise of more, is seen in the thriftiness and independence of many families, whose example will soon inspire others to greater industry, skill and providence. The proof of their growing intelligence, is seen clearly in their congregations and schools. The influence of so high an order of ministers as Rev. Jos. Williams, and Rev. Floyd Snelson, is telling powerfully for good on their churches. With such men in all their pulpits, a few years more would show wonders.

"Some time ago, the writer witnessed an examination of Mr. Snelson's school. To say that everything was creditable and commendable, would be but small praise. The corps of teachers, struggling against many disadvantages, has raised the school to an admirable grade. How they have accomplished so much in so short a time, is a mystery to a multitude outside. The school is fortunate in having as teachers, good scholars, good Christians, and good singers. To teach children 'to fear God and keep His commandments,' and to love to sing and 'praise God from whom all blessings flow,' can only make them wiser and better. Many a hut rings with such songs now. Many a little home is brightened and bettered by that school. And the scholars, considering the many obstacles of work, poverty and interruption, in their way, have gained surprisingly in knowledge and manners. Platform speaking is not much cultivated, but some of it was excellent. To estimate what the school has been to the children, their parents and the district, compare them now with what they were three years ago."

A WONDERFUL SABBATH.

Rev. J. H. H. Sengstacke of Woodville, Ga., writes:—

"Yesterday we had grand times. The church was crowded both morning and night. Some people came over seven miles to worship with us, and said they heard that our church was doing evil works, but now they saw for themselves that if the gospel is preached, it is preached in its purity at Pilgrim Church. Those are the leading people who speak this. At the night meeting over forty came forward for prayer. I think we shall yet break the strong-hold of Satan, and build up a mighty work for Christ our King."

The next day he adds,—

"I cannot help writing to you again about our great meeting last Sunday. It was a glorious meeting. I never saw such a thing before. I cannot write for joy. The people have been calling upon me ever since Sunday, and I am greatly encouraged."

ALABAMA.

We commend the following respecting "Tithes" to other than missionary churches.

MOBILE. A WORKING, GIVING, MISSIONARY COLORED CHURCH.

By Rev. Albert B. Irwin.

There are some recent items of our church life here that give us much encouragement. They are indications of a fresh determination of the people for work. The first item is, that we have placed our Sabbath-school entirely in the hands of the church members. The Superintendent for the past year has been one of the deacons, and some of the young people, during that time, have taught classes. Thinking there was sufficient material to carry on a good school by merely giving it our oversight, and acting on the principle of encouraging them to do their own work as fast as they are able, we have placed all in their hands. We have one young man of intelligence and piety who ably conducts the Bible class. The teachers here are, by this means, all enabled to teach in various other schools in the city. All of the present teachers in our Sunday-school are, or have been, our pupils. We hold weekly teachers' meetings to instruct them in the lessons, believing that to be one of the best ways to develop their Christian character.

A second item of encouragement is a move the church has made toward self-support. I preached a sermon on Tithes, impressing the thought of the blessings on that church and people that give most to the Lord. The idea took hold of them strongly. I called a meeting after the sermon, in which much enthusiasm was expressed. I told them I thought they had not done enough in self-support, and that the calling them together was to find out what each one, by God's help, was willing to do. Immediately, a young woman in poor circumstances said, "I will give a tenth." Another, "I will give a tenth." One young man, who supports himself by work in a cotton press, said, "I will give a dollar a month." Four others immediately followed, promising the same. Others said seventy-five, fifty, forty and twenty-five cents a month. One of the older brethren jumped up, saying, "The Lord does bless a cheerful giver; I know it. I came to church once with but ten cents in the world, and had earned nothing for some time. I wanted to give, but thought I couldn't give the last cent I had. Then I thought, it is for the Lord, and I will risk it. I gave it, and by Tuesday night I had earned three dollars." Another followed, saying, "I know the Lord blesses the cheerful giver, too. Once I attended meeting where a collection was being taken, and had two bits in my pocket. I thought 'well, I can't give that,' and for three months after I did not get a bit of work to do. At the end of that time I was at another church where a collection was taken, and when the minister said, 'The Lord loveth a cheerful giver,' I said 'well, I will risk it this time, and see.' And the next morning at daylight there was a knock at my gate, by a man come to offer me a job of work. I made three dollars that day, and seventeen dollars that week. So I believe in giving to the Lord.'

The money pledged by those present, for the year amounted to $114 which with what the members absent will give, and collections, will amount to $150. This is a good sum for the first effort; by another year they may give more.

Last Sabbath night we held a missionary concert, in which we endeavored to impress the idea of the relation of the freedmen to the evangelization of Africa. At the close of the meeting, steps were taken to form a mission band, to be called "The Mission Band of Mobile." A collection was taken, and although the people were unprepared, some saying they would have given had they known before, the amount raised was $3.30. Inclosed please find order for the same, which credit to "Mission Band of Mobile," for work in Africa.

Another gratifying occurrence was the offer of Rev. Dr. Burgett, pastor of 1st Presbyterian Church (white) of Mobile, to exchange pulpits with me. He preached for me yesterday afternoon, and I for him at night. It shows the spirit towards us of the better class of Southerners.

Rev. J. D. Smith, supplying at Mobile, Ala., writes:—

"The attendance at church and Sunday-school has been better than usual. We are holding a series of meetings in our church this week. Five or six have come forward every evening to be prayed for."

L. C. Anderson, of Florence, Ala., writes:—

"We obtained full possession of our house and lot August 1st, and have been worshiping in the building since. Since the congregation has been in the new house, more live Christianity has come to the surface among the people, and the members are working more. There was a little evidence of a revival, and on the 18th, after much prayer and preaching, we made a special effort. Three came forward and we betook ourselves to prayer in their behalf, and in a few days God gave us one soul to rejoice over. The love of God has spread gradually, and now many are almost persuaded to become Christians. Our congregation is on the increase and everything looks encouraging. Prejudice is giving way, and several families who, a few weeks ago, would not let their children attend our Sabbath-school, now send them regularly. Many others promise that they will send theirs in a little while. On our last Communion day three persons were received, one on profession and two by letter. Two composed one of the oldest and most respectable families of this town, the husband about seventy and his wife sixty. It made me shed tears as I read the covenant to this aged couple, and all were melted to tears as they saw the joy that seemed to be in their hearts. On our next Communion two or three more are to be received. Thus you see that God is with us in this work, and causing it to prosper."

MISSISSIPPI.

TOUGALOO. YOUNG MEN CONFESSING CHRIST—A GROWING RELIGIOUS INTEREST.

Mrs. T, N. Chase.

Last Sabbath seven young men united with the college church in Tougaloo. Two others were detained by sickness. Two more unite with other churches, and a few more would probably have joined us if they had not been obliged to leave school lately for lack of money.

You would have enjoyed the morning service of baptism. The school walked some distance through our beautiful grove, which, you remember, is gracefully draped with the Tillandsia or Long moss, till we gathered about the water. Every leaf, which in Mississippi is now in its perfection, had been freshened by a morning shower; and thrown over all was the hallow of a Sabbath May morning. "There is a fountain filled with blood" broke the sacred stillness, and as the seven young men received the seal of baptism it was very easy for us to sing—"Oh happy Day," "Safe in the arms of Jesus," &c.

The prayer-meeting Sabbath evening was what one would expect at the close of such a day. How easy it is to see Jesus when his "passing by" opens our sleeping eyes, and when we see him, how easy it is to work for him! At the close of the meeting there was a large inquiry-meeting, and we have reason to think that others have fully decided to be on the Lord's side. I never, anywhere North or South, saw less excitement, or even emotion, where there was so much religious interest.

Among those who recently united with the church here were three from one family, a daughter, her husband and an adopted daughter. This daughter is an old pupil of the school but she never gave herself up to God's service till laid upon a bed of intense suffering from a frightful burn. She lay perfectly helpless for nearly three months, and for several weeks was daily visited by the pastor, her only medical adviser. It was very impressive to all of us to see this beautiful young wife, not yet able to stand, sitting before the altar with her husband and little Ida, an adopted sister of twelve years. A mother only knows what it must have been to that mother, who had so long watched over her only daughter and at last saw her saved physically from fire and spiritually as by fire. As the pastor gave her the hand of fellowship, tap, tap, tap, went that mother's heel, which those understand who have visited colored churches in these lower Southern States. When service was over and the pastor greeted the mother with—"This has been a good day with you"—it seemed impossible to restrain her feelings longer, and we felt that if there was ever a time to shout, it was when she passed out of the church exclaiming,—"Glory! Glory! Glory! Glory! It is a good thing to wait upon the Lord."

LOUISIANA.

CENTRAL CHURCH.

Rev. W. S. Alexander.

The church, as a body, are looking for a renewal of the precious times of refreshing of last year. Seldom have I been in a prayer-meeting of deeper, more tender interest, than in the one we held last Tuesday evening. Nearly twenty-five took part in the service, and all our hearts were cheered and comforted."

PASTORAL VISITATION.

Among the richest experiences of my ministry in New Orleans, are the visits to the families of my congregation. I recall one with the greatest interest. The family are French Creoles. At the outbreak of the civil war, they went to France and remained abroad several years. When they left Louisiana they were Roman Catholics, but in Marseilles the father went into the Protestant Chapel, under the care of a godly minister. He was impressed with the truth, and in good time became a true child of God. His wife soon came to share his faith and joy. I have received a new view of the piety of the evangelical church of France, and the faithfulness of their ministers, from the religious character of this beloved family. In our late revival, the oldest daughter and a young nephew were converted. At my last visit they sung some of the sweet religious songs from the Geneva collection. While we were bowed at the throne of grace, and I had commended them to God, the father in a few tender words thanked the dear Lord that he had sent "our brother to comfort us and pray with us."

THE SABBATH SCHOOL.

We were very happy and grateful over the prosperity of our Sabbath-school. On the 14th inst. we had 151 in attendance. We have been compelled to divide nearly all our classes, and to seek faithful teachers to care for them. With the attractive series of International Lesson papers—with the "Well-Spring," and the "Child's World," and especially with Sankey and Bliss's "Gospel Songs" the interest of the children is constantly on the increase. We have monthly Sabbath-school Concerts, which attract the parents and friends of the children. At our last concert, given in the audience room of the church, 250 persons were present, who fully appreciated the recitations and songs of the children. It is like the awakening to a new life in the children, and we feel sure the school is to become a mighty power for good, and that it will win its way to the hearts of all classes.

THE WEEK OF PRAYER

Was a very precious season to us. Every evening we gathered in our Conference room. The audience ranged from thirty to sixty. They were like revival meetings. On some occasions nearly every Christian took part in the service. We shall long remember these meetings, and many, I trust, will date from them, the beginning of a higher consecration to the Redeemer.

NEW ORLEANS, June 1st, 1877.

Since the meeting of the South-Western Conference in January, I have been watching for an opportunity of visiting the brethren in their churches and homes. A few days ago the coveted opportunity offered itself, and was eagerly welcomed. At an early hour in the morning, I took the train on the Morgan Railroad, which runs between New Orleans and Morgan City, a distance of eighty miles. The road passes through a section of country very beautiful and productive. The luxuriant vegetation is almost tropical. The forests are filled with live-oak, and the superbly flowering magnolia, with all species of palm, and other trees and plants peculiar to the South. Nature has been lavish in her gifts, and the scene is one of wild beauty and fertility. Our first stopping place was at about fifty miles from New Orleans. It is situated on Bayou Lafourche where there is a sufficient depth of water for steamers and schooners of light draught. There is but a small settlement at this point. Here we found one of our little churches, organized in 1872, and having a present membership of thirty. A licensed preacher is in charge, while the church in all its arrangements is under the superintendence of Mr. Clay of Terrebonne. He appoints the local preachers, and removes them when it seems best, and is really the bishop, whose judgment and authority is unquestioned. We held an evening service here, preaching to an attentive and grateful audience. After the sermon they questioned me for nearly an hour upon matters of church polity, presenting their difficulties, and asking to be guided. In the afternoon, three or four local preachers met me at Henry Armsted's house, and asked a "thousand questions" more or less, with regard to the duties of ministers and church officers, and difficult passages of scripture. I called it my theological class, and after a Socratic method I instructed them as well as I could upon points where they needed instruction. This much should be said of our brethren in these churches who are trying to do the Lord's work: they are deeply conscious of their ignorance, and long to be directed and educated. The next day we went on to

LAFOURCHE CROSSING,

TERREBONNE.

At Terrebonne Station there is a Congregational church of thirty members under the care of Benjamin Field, an old licensed preacher. He is an old man of seventy years of age, of average ability, and, I should judge, of more than average piety. He was a slave till the war, and now earns his bread by daily toil. The church is owned by the proprietor of the plantation on which it stands—a Christian man thoroughly benevolent and kind to the negroes. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon I met the Sunday-school children in the beautiful new church of Rev. Daniel Clay at Terrebonne. The children all turned out in their Sunday suits. They sang, recited their catechism and Scripture lessons, and then I gave them a little talk. In the evening the church was crowded to its utmost. They came from miles around. Seldom have I ever enjoyed preaching more. The eager, crowded assembly, all so glad to see me, furnished abundant inspiration. At the close of the service they made a contribution of $5.10, towards my travelling expenses, which has been credited to them as their offering to the A. M. A. This is a live church, of 145 members, situated in the midst of the richest farming section. During the past year they built a convenient and really beautiful chapel at a cost of $1,000—and paid for it, without one dollar's aid from outside. They have since added a $60 bell, and that is paid for. There is not a dollar of indebtedness on the church. Mr. Clay, a man of 65 years, a slave till "emancipation," owns a good farm with convenient dwellings,—he is educating his children (he has 11 living) and devotes his best energies to those three churches, which owe their very existence, under God, to him. He is respected by all classes, black and white. He is a good citizen, a consistent Christian, and a faithful minister of our Lord. You will be surprised to learn that he cannot read a word, and the only word he can write is his own name. He has his secretary or assistant who reads the scriptures and the hymns, and he preaches and prays.

I reached New Iberia at midnight, and after a few hours' rest, leaving an appointment to preach on my return in the evening, I took a private carriage to Lake Peigneur, sometimes called Lake Simonet. Here Rev. Wm. Butler has organized a church of sixty members. It stands on the open prairie, centrally located for the people who attend upon its services. The local preacher who occupies the pulpit in Mr. Butler's absence at New Iberia was ploughing in the rear of the church, illustrating the mode of life of our country ministers. They are all poor men, ministering to the poor, and so they work hard for the support of their families, and give the people, on the Sabbath, the best thought and instruction which under these unfavorable circumstances they are able to give. It shows the heartiness and sincerity of these men, and should make us charitable in our judgments of these infant churches so far as their organization and methods of working are concerned. Beyond Lake Peigneur, fifteen miles, is the new church of Abberville, to which Brother Charles E. Smith, recently ordained, ministers. It starts off with a membership of seventeen, and an attendance of one hundred. They are trying to build a small chapel for present use. If they can get a loan of $100 to buy the lumber, they will do all the work themselves, and the enterprise is sure to succeed.

Between Lake Peigneur and New Iberia lies Petteance, where we have a church of twenty-five members, with Rev. Anthony Copy as pastor. At New Iberia I had a good audience gathered at short notice. The church is united and happy under Brother Butler's ministry. They report a membership of seventy-two. The church building is attractive; the congregation unusually intelligent, and everything looks hopeful and promising.

I shall not forget my welcome wherever I went among the dear brethren of our Conference. My affection for them, and my interest in their growth, strengthened at every step of my journey. Good things are in store for our little band of churches. The great need of the present and the need of the next twenty-five years, is an educated ministry. Hurry on the glorious work of raising up good men, STRONG MEN EDUCATED MEN to feed the church of God among the freedmen!

TEXAS.

GOLIAD.

Rev. B. C. Church.

A foundation must be laid for a purer religion than much we see. The increased interest in Bible knowledge is encouraging. Bible-reading meetings and Sunday-schools are steadily growing in size and interest. Besides, the people are becoming more self-reliant in all temporal matters. Many of them have given up the use of tobacco, as well as of whisky.

We carried the local Option temperance law by over one hundred majority; nearly every (colored) person voting for it. This stops all sale of intoxicating drinks on the 10th of March in this county. Nearly all adjoining counties have passed the same law. The druggist cannot sell without a written prescription from the physician. A detachment of soldiers in southwestern Texas to aid Co. sheriffs in making arrests has revolutionized all this country. Caste is trembling on his throne; life and property are safer than ever before the war.

Our little church here is far behind what it ought to be; but with $200 aid from the A. M. A. we built the first meeting house in this city. And now without aid, we have procured the best bell of five that ring the call to worship God. "Now what wait we for but for Thee, O Lord, to pour us out a blessing till there shall not be room to receive it?"

Rev. W. W. Mallory, of Memphis, Tenn., writes:

"It has pleased the great Head of the Church to favor us with something of a revival. The fruit has been a quickened church and eight or ten conversions. Four of these are to unite with the church on next Sabbath, and two others, intending to unite two months ago, making six."

Later he adds,—

"It is my privilege to report more favorably than my last indicated. Yesterday was indeed a high day with the church. Ten joined our Communion, one by letter, nine by covenant. Seven received baptism. Many others are tender, and we are hopeful of yet further results."

REVIVALS IN INSTITUTIONS.

Some of our Institutions have received such evident tokens of the Divine presence that we devote a page or two to reports of revivals in these schools apart from the general account of our church work.

The first extract is from the pen of Rev. Richard Tolman, who has for many years been the pastor of the church at Hampton, Va., and has labored faithfully with the pupils of the school as well as among the surrounding people.

"Our school has been favored this year, as in years past, with the tokens of God's renewing and saving grace. There have been, among the girls, several interesting cases of hopeful conversion to Christ. One of these is that of a girl, who, for three years, had been looking and longing for light to guide her to heaven. The ignorant colored preachers, those blind leaders of the blind, afforded her no help. She joined the school this year, animated chiefly by the hope of being instructed in that pertaining to her spiritual welfare. And now she rejoices in the long sought for peace in believing. All but one of the girls of the present graduating class—and that one but recently united with the school—encourage us with the hope that they are the followers of Christ. We cannot be too grateful for the blessing with which God is crowning our endeavors to train Christian men and women for the great work before them among their ignorant and degraded race.

Among the candidates for admission to the church next Sabbath is one who graduated a year ago last June, and is now teaching in the neighborhood of Norfolk. He entered the school a wild, reckless young man; and, during the first year of his course, was quite a trial, because he was, as he now describes himself, very wicked. But he gradually became more serious and thoughtful, and ere he left was under deep religious convictions. Yet he tried to hide those convictions, and refused to take an open stand for Christ. But though he thus left Hampton, there followed him an influence for good which he could not shake off. When, in particular, he thought that he ought to open his school with prayer, and guide his pupils heavenward, he became more deeply impressed with the importance of becoming a Christian. Nor could he feel at all satisfied until, during the last summer, he consecrated himself to Christ. Since then, so far as we can learn, he has been a diligent and faithful worker in the Lord's vineyard. This is one of a class of converts who greatly cheer our hearts. We may not see the full result of our labors during their connection with the school; but as 'the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain,' so we must wait for the fruit of God's grace in the salvation of souls."

REMARKABLE CONVERSIONS IN THE GRADUATING CLASSES AT HAMPTON AND FISK.

Letter from Rev. R. Tolman, Hampton, Va.

The blessings of Divine grace with which Hampton Institute has previously been favored, have descended upon us, in an unusual degree, during the past year. The largest class that ever graduated here, fifty in number, received their diplomas May 24th. Forty-five of these were boarding scholars, who have the advantage over the day scholars, in that they come more directly and fully under the molding influences of the school. All these forty-five have, as we trust, entered upon the new and nobler Christian life; the last one of the number turning his heart and steps heavenward during the Sabbath morning service, immediately preceding the anniversary. He entered the sanctuary that morning with bowed head and depressed spirits, but went home with beaming countenance, rejoicing in Christ as his Saviour and Lord. Thus God answered the prayer that went up weekly from the teachers' meeting, that our graduates might go forth to their life-work baptized with his Spirit and clothed with his salvation.

Letter from Miss Henrietta Matson, Nashville, Tenn.

We have just closed our commencement exercises, which have been of wonderful interest. We have been asking the Lord to give us his Spirit through these exercises, and this he has done in an especial manner. The conversion of one of our students, on the very last day of school, before examination, gave a tenderness of spirit which has been breathed through all the exercises.

The young man had held out against God all the year, though powerfully wrought upon by the Spirit, passing through terrible conflicts, in which his strong will refused to yield to the claims of God. One week before school closed he decided to leave school, as there seemed an opening for him then, for summer employment. He bought his ticket, engaged an expressman to take his trunk, and went to the depot. He left us very reluctantly and sadly, but with no thought of returning. He waited at the depot till train time—but his trunk did not come, the expressman had forgotten the order. He returned to the Institution, intending to take the morning train, but that night was seized with a conviction that the Lord had sent him back to save him, and that now, if ever, he must give himself up to God. The next day, in the noon prayer-meeting, he asked for prayers, speaking with an earnestness which thrilled every heart. That night he yielded himself to God, and Oh! how entire was the consecration; Satan had desired to have him, and the conflict had been fierce and strong, but when at last he gave himself into the hands of Jesus he was as a little child. The token by which we knew that peace had entered his soul, was the perfect quiet which came over him; he rose from his knees and simply said, "I am saved," but his face wore the look of those who have entered into the most holy place. Ever since, he speaks of rest, such rest in God, and his clear, ringing testimony of what God has done for him touches every heart. He says he can never see that trunk without thinking of what almost miraculous means the Lord used to bring him to Himself.

ATLANTA UNIVERSITY. REVIVAL IN THE INSTITUTION.

From Rev. C. W. Francis.

We have for some weeks been rejoicing because of the indications of God's power to save, manifested in our school. The week of prayer was observed, and brought its blessing, and on the day of prayer for colleges, a great increase of thoughtfulness was manifested, and many were soon inquiring for the way of life. Many Christians have had their purposes greatly quickened, and some who had wandered have been reclaimed, and a deep, serious spirit of inquiry seems to pervade the whole school. There is no opposition, and no outbreaking sin carried on, and all acknowledge the power and presence of the Spirit. There has never been in this school more earnest attention to the truth, or more earnest seeking to know the path of duty. And this work goes on with few extra meetings, and no manifestation of excitement, and no interruption to regular work; but rather a quickened zeal for study and a more cheerful submission to authority, which seems to indicate that kind of "religion in common life" which is at once the fruit and seal of a genuine consecration to the Lord. We do not yet count up results by numbers of converts, but believe that quite a number have really chosen Christ, and we are hopeful for many more. Three will unite with the church on the next Sabbath, while others prefer to wait till another season, and others still to unite with churches at their homes. Many of our ordinary meetings have been of thrilling interest as one after another testified to his love to Christ and confessed wanderings, and sought the prayers of those who prayed. Such was the one two weeks ago on Sabbath night when twenty-six arose in this way for personal testimony within an hour and a quarter.

One thing which God gives us to cheer our hearts is the evidence from time to time that the seed sown bears fruit after pupils are separated from us. Not a few, who did not yield while here with us, have found Christ when brought face to face with the difficulties and responsibilities of their work, and have been made to feel that he alone could hold them up. But we are anxious to see them firmly anchored before they go out to meet the tremendous temptations of the positions they have to occupy. Pray for us that we may have the faith and patience to reap the harvest which our God seems to be making ready for us.

At Tougaloo University, also, there have been many conversions, and several have joined the church from the school.

THEOLOGICAL CLASSES AND ORDINATION OF EVANGELISTS.

To those familiar with the need of an educated ministry among the colored people, one of the most encouraging features of our work must be the Theological Classes in connection with some of our Institutions, and the ordination and sending forth of colored evangelists and preachers. By the aid of our good friends in great Britain, we have been enabled the past year, as for three years previous, to assist many of these young men in their preparation for the gospel work. The small sum of $70 or $80 a year has enabled many a student to continue his studies, who, without this aid, must have left school and abandoned the thought of teaching or preaching.

LOUISIANA.

NEW ORLEANS. EXAMINATION OF THE THEOLOGICAL CLASS AT STRAIGHT UNIVERSITY. EVANGELISTS ORDAINED. TWO STUDENTS LICENSED.

"There have been fourteen young men in attendance upon the theological lectures during the term. A part of them have been constant and devoted to the studies of the course, and others, members of the Legislature, have attended when their other engagements permitted. The subjects of study during the year have been the being and attributes of God; the Bible; its history, authenticity and inspiration; Exegesis; occasional lectures on Pastoral Theology and Ecclesiastical History, with a general review of the studies of the last year in Doctrinal Theology. The class has made satisfactory progress, and there has been a marked growth in earnestness and enthusiasm. The annual examination occupied two hours and was well sustained. A majority of the class are native Louisianians. One was born on Turk's Island and one in Jamaica. Several of them have been for two years or more licensed preachers.

ORDINATION.

"At the earnest request of the Morris Brown, the Spain St., and the new Congregational church at Abberville, a Council was called by Central Church, to examine, and if found qualified, to ordain Isaac H. Hall, Henry A. Ruffin and Charles E. Smith. Their examination which was faithful and thorough, was most heartily approved, and these young men were ordained on the evening of June 4th. The sermon was preached by Rev. W. S. Alexander (Moderator); the ordaining prayer was offered by Rev. M. C. Cole, and the charge and right hand of fellowship were given by Rev. C. Hunt (colored) of New Orleans. A good audience was present, and the occasion was one of deep, tender interest. Mr. Thomas E. Hillson and Mr. William H. Bolding, of the theological class, were, by the same Council, licensed to preach the gospel for the term of three years. Of the young men ordained, Mr. Hall has served the Morris Brown church with great acceptance, and Mr. Ruffin, the pastor of Spain St. church, is greatly loved. Mr. Smith, who was formerly a student at the New Orleans University, has organized a flourishing Congregational church of seventeen members, with an audience of one hundred, at Abberville, in Vermilion Parish. It is a most hopeful enterprise, and Mr. Smith, with his ordination vows fresh upon him, enters upon his work with true enthusiasm, and with great promise of success. No one who has not travelled through these parishes, and had personal knowledge of the profound, appalling ignorance of the colored churches, from the ministers down, can conceive of the urgent demand for educated and devoted preachers. True progress will begin only when the churches are supplied with preachers and teachers, who are something more than blind leaders of the blind.

COLORED EVANGELISTS ORDAINED—YOUNG MEN LICENSED TO PREACH.

"Geo. W. Moore and Laurine C. Anderson, students of Fisk University, were ordained May 20th, in Nashville. Rev. T. Cutler, Moderator of the Council, preached the sermon; Rev. H. S. Bennett gave the right hand of fellowship; ordaining prayer by Prof. F. A. Chase; address to the candidates by Prof. A. K. Spence. Both of these young men are in the theological course of Fisk University."

GEORGIA.

ATLANTA. ORDINATION OF JOSEPH E. SMITH.

By Rev. C. W. Francis.

Another accession to the ranks of our laborers from the company of students, brings rejoicing to the hearts of many. Joseph E. Smith, a recent graduate of Atlanta University, has been set apart to the work of the ministry by appropriate services, and has gone to have the care of the church in Marion, Ala.

The life of this young man, thus far, is very suggestive, and well illustrates the work of the American Missionary Association. He was a native of Virginia, but was early "sold South," and thus separated from his mother and all the family, none of whom have since been seen by him. It is only recently that by accident he learned of the existence of a brother in Arkansas. Being in Georgia when the war ended, he ran from his master (who still claimed him) and came to Atlanta secreted under a freight car. He then led for a year or two a free and irregular life, under circumstances not at all favorable for moral or intellectual culture. He was found by some of the early teachers of the American Missionary Association eight years ago, in some missionary visits, and persuaded to attend the night school. He was then a waiter in a hotel and unable to read. He soon became interested in education and devoted all spare time to study, and then began to attend Sunday-school and the preaching service, and thus, step by step, was led on until he yielded to religious impressions and united with the church, a humble, earnest Christian. From the first, he felt called to devote himself to the work of helping up those who were still down, and began study in earnest. Taken into the boarding school in 1870, his own exertions supplemented by the aid of a few friends, which was secured for him by the intercession of teachers, have carried him through a course of study, which gives him a fair preparation for his chosen work. He has already made trial of his gifts by service with the churches in Andersonville, Ga., and Montgomery Ala., and by several months service in Savannah, including the period of Yellow fever visitation. He remained at his post and was taken down by the disease, but recovered, and with a fresh baptism of the Spirit and a new consecration to the work, asked for the commendation of his brethren and the commission of the church. At a council held Dec. 19th, he was duly set apart to the work, the sermon being preached by Rev. Temple Cutler of Chattanooga, the other parts being by Rev. S. S. Ashley, Pres. E. A. Ware, and Rev. C. W. Francis, most of whom had stood in very intimate relations to the candidate as pastor and instructors and had watched his career from the first."

THEOLOGICAL CLASS AT TALLADEGA COLLEGE.

This institution is beautifully located and has a character of its own. Not so advanced in classical studies as is Atlanta, it yet has a theological department, and is the center of a wide-spread and powerful religious influence. It is pre-eminently a missionary institution. The church here is in excellent condition, and the strongest I have yet seen in the South. The Sunday-school of three or four hundred scholars is in all respects a model. Besides this central school, the institution sustains various mission schools scattered throughout the region. In these schools they have collected over a thousand pupils; and several of them have already grown into churches, and are supplied with preaching chiefly by the students of the theological class. The class the past year numbered twenty-five, and some of them are men of special promise. Their examinations in theology and in New Testament history were every way creditable both to themselves and to their teacher, Prof. Andrew.

CHURCHES ORGANIZED.

Four new churches have been formed during the year—at Marietta, Ga., Florence, Ala., Nashville, Tenn., and Abberville, La. The chapels, also, at Savannah and Atlanta, Ga., have been so far completed that the congregations now occupy them.

The Churches at Andersonville and Golding's Grove, Ga., have been united.

ALABAMA.

A NEW CHURCH AND SUNDAY-SCHOOL AT FLORENCE.

Letter from Rev. G. S. Pope.

The Congregational Church at Florence was organized yesterday, with twenty-one members. They were a remarkably intelligent company of Christians. Old father DePriest was the central figure, as they received the Right Hand of Fellowship, and on either side of him stood his children and grandchildren with others. Twelve of the number are heads of families representing eight families. All but two of them have comfortable homes paid for. A Sunday-school was organized in the morning with a good number of children and young people present. In the P. M. I presented the "Mission of our Congregational Churches in the South." Bro. Roberts propounded the Articles of Faith and offered the Prayer of Consecration; Bro. Spence gave the Right Hand to the new Church, and Miss Wells gave the Address to the People. At night Bro. Spence preached, and the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered. It is a fine opening. They are very desirous to have some one to preach who will also teach.

TENNESSEE.

The removal of Fisk University to its new home in Jubilee Hall, left vacant the old buildings. Of these, Howard Chapel, so commodious for worship, was not left long unoccupied; Mr. George W. Moore, a student of the University, who had been licensed to preach during the previous winter, began a preaching service in the chapel, with such good success that it was thought wise to organize a church. Prof. Spence describes the interesting services:

ORGANIZATION OF A CHURCH AT HOWARD CHAPEL.

By Rev. A. K. Spence, Nashville, Tenn.

The council had been held on Saturday, and advised that the church be formed. Sunday, October 29th, came with all the glory of an autumn day in Tennessee. When we reached the chapel at half-past two P.M., we found it nearly full of people. It was a pleasant company to look upon, so decorous, so interested, composed largely of past and present members of the Institution and their parents and friends. It was good to sit down again in the old chapel so full of memories. Its very walls seemed sacred, associated with so many prayers and praises of other days, so many rich outpourings of God's Spirit in reviving power, so many feasts around the table of our dying Lord.

After some baptisms by immersion, we sang, as only colored people can sing, "There is a fountain filled with blood," and the exercises were begun by our young brother, George W. Moore, student, and pastor of the church. Brother Roberts of Athens, Ala, our first theological graduate, who in former times left an arm, his right one, on the field of the battle of Nashville, fighting for his country and liberty, then preached an earnest and thoughtful sermon adapted to the occasion. Next came baptisms by sprinkling, organizing the church, and prayer by Brother Bennett. Then it was my part to say a few words of recognition on the part of the Congregational churches of the land to this little band of eleven members. Brother Chase closed the exercises with some excellent words of exhortation as to purity, fidelity, a missionary spirit, and brotherly love toward Christians of all denominations. We then took the communion with this new little church.

GEORGIA.

GROWTH OF THE CHURCH IN ATLANTA.

By Rev. S. S. Ashley.

The pastor of the church in Atlanta sends us the following encouraging account of its growth, and of the new and commodious edifice which is nearly completed.

On the 26th of May the church observed its tenth Anniversary. President E. A. Ware, Rev. C. W. Francis and Prof. H. Bumstead of the Atlanta University participated in the exercises of the occasion. A large audience was in attendance; and the reminiscences of events connected with the history of the church, and of the persons first engaged in missionary work among the colored people of this city, and especially of the venerable and sainted Ayer, awakened great and tearful interest. The circumstances under which the church was organized, its growth and present condition evidenced that God was in the movement.

The church was organized May 27th, 1867, with ten members, two of whom have passed on to the church triumphant. Two hundred and seventeen persons have been enrolled as members, seventeen have died, fifteen have been excluded, twenty-six dismissed by letter. One hundred and eighty-three joined by profession. For most of the time since December last there has been an encouraging religious interest. The voice of the enquirer, and the testimony of the convert are often heard. Several converts have united with other churches. During the past summer, the interest and attention of the church have been engaged upon the new meeting-house. After long waiting and much struggle and sacrifice a comfortable, and, in many respects, an attractive house of worship has been brought nearly to completion. The expense will be about $4,000. Besides the audience room which will seat three hundred persons, there are in the basement three rooms for the Sabbath-school, Bible-classes and prayer-meetings.

The church is under grateful obligations to the American Missionary Association for pecuniary assistance, and also to the many churches and friends at the North who have taken a helping interest in this work.

A class of young colored people in the city have co-operated in a very liberal manner in furnishing the main audience room. They have thus secured an interest in the house which we hope will lead to an interest in Christ.

The prospect is, that the church will now enter upon a wider field of usefulness—be enabled to do more for the Master.

CONFERENCES.

The Annual Meeting of the Central South Conference was held at Chattanooga, Tenn., November 9th, 1876. The Conference comprises churches in Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi. The attendance was encouraging, and the meetings left a good impression on the people. The double bereavement of the Association by the deaths of Secretary Whipple and Brother E. P. Smith, was recognized in a tender tribute to their memories.

From the report of the meetings, we reprint the following papers:

NARRATIVE OF THE STATE OF RELIGION.

The report of the churches indicate on the whole a growing and prosperous condition of the work. Those fields which seem the most unpromising are such as have been destitute of ministers for some months past. From the various accounts it appears that a high standard of Christian life is held up before the people, temperance and chastity are inculcated as cardinal virtues, and proper methods of worship are observed. Several churches report precious revivals of greater or less power.

In reference to the churches in Alabama, we would report:

Athens—The church at Athens is in a prosperous and growing condition, numbering upward of fifty of the young and middle-aged of the place. They have recently finished a beautiful little brick chapel, with a seating capacity of 250. In the spring a powerful revival led to the conversion of twenty-six persons. The prayer-meetings are well attended, and discipline is enforced.

Anniston, Kingston, Childersburg and Alabama Furnace are churches in the vicinity of Talladega, and are supplied by theological students from the Institute at that place. They report from thirty to fifty members, are supplied with houses of worship, and maintain good Sabbath schools. The work thus accomplished is a most important one, and has furnished a model for other institutions.

The church at Marion, while presenting a most promising field, has suffered seriously for want of a pastor. They have a good building, and would do a good work, but the lack of a pastor paralyzes them. That want will soon be met.

Montgomery—Rev. E. C. Stickel reports some interest; has about seventy members; maintains a flourishing Sabbath school, and two or three mission-schools.

The church in Selma is in a good condition, Rev. H. W. Carter, pastor. A revival during the year added twenty-five to the church. The Sabbath school numbers 180. The church supports six mission-schools about Selma, in which 400 pupils are taught. The pastor, during the last year, held a normal class of Sabbath school teachers. They have various committees—on visiting the sick, Bible distribution, etc. They have a fine reading-room for the use of the whole city.

The church in Talladega, Rev. G. S. Pope, enjoyed an extensive revival last winter, which resulted in the reception of thirty-four members. There is a continual manifestation of the presence of the Spirit. The Sabbath school numbers 175. The students of the College maintain about twenty Sabbath schools in the neighborhood of Talladega. The Institution is the center of a great and growing influence.

The churches in Georgia report as follows;

First Church, Atlanta, Rev. S. S. Ashley, reports a steady condition, a good Sabbath school and two mission-schools. The church has no comfortable place of worship. Some conversions have taken place. The church exerts a wide influence in the city. A Band of Hope and Lodge of True Reformers, temperance societies, are in a very flourishing condition. The Sabbath school collections have amounted to $100. The University Church has a healthful life. A good revival during the winter brought in many of the students.

Byron, Bro. H. Watkins, pastor, is in a better condition now than for two years. Six members have been added recently. A Mission Sabbath school is sustained at Powersville, four miles from Byron. Members have been lost because they have had no ordained minister.

Macon rejoices in a new minister, but has been run down because of neglect. About twenty hearers comprise the congregation. A heavy debt burdens the church. The members, about 45 in number, are scattered. This church especially demands our prayers.

The Andersonville church is dead.

In Mississippi, the churches in Salem, Columbus, New Ruhamah and Pleasant Ridge are without pastors, but hold on their way as well as they can.

In Tennessee, the First Church of Chattanooga, Rev. T. Cutler, on the whole is in an encouraging condition. Its prayer-meetings have twenty-five or thirty in attendance. The Sabbath school is very flourishing. The most promising feature of the whole field is the Band of Hope, a temperance organization among the young people, which has existed for years, and has exerted a wide influence in the city.

The Union Church, Nashville, a college church in connection with the Fisk University, is in a hopeful state. Last spring a powerful revival affected the whole University, and seventy students were converted, of whom thirty joined the church. The Sabbath school numbers 100. There are twenty students in the theological class. This class is a very promising feature of the Institution, and has improved very greatly within the past year. The students have entered heartily into mission work in the city and elsewhere.

Knowles Street, Congregational, a new organization of nine members, under the charge of George W. Moore, licentiate student of Fisk University, worships in Howard Chapel with promising prospects. The congregation ranges from thirty to fifty. A good Sabbath school is in operation.

The church on Sand Mountain, Ala., Rev. D. Peebles, is composed of a few Northern people who are poor in this world's goods, with not much prospect for growth.

The Pomona church is virtually extinct.

The Knoxville, Welsh, has suffered from the removal of their minister, and a large number of members.

The church in Moffat, on the Sewanee Mountain, was organized in the summer with ten or twelve Northern Presbyterians and Methodists, who united on the Congregational basis. A female seminary is near by, and projects are on foot for the establishment of a Normal Institute for the training of both sexes for teaching.

REPORT ON CHURCH EXTENSION.

As a Conference of Congregational Ministers and Churches, the matter of Church Extension is to us one of great interest, and demands careful consideration. We believe that our polity is scriptural, and that as an agency for the conversion and sanctification of men, and for the establishment of a true and pure Church of Christ, it is superior to every other. In the old world and the new, it has been the apostle of civil and religious liberty. In efforts for the redemption of the heathen it stands among the foremost of missionary agencies. By its schools of every grade, it is a distinguished educational force.

Believing, therefore, that the establishment, as rapidly as practicable, in these Southern States, of Congregational Churches, is obligatory upon the Congregationalists of the country, this Conference does earnestly desire them to furnish the American Missionary Association with the means to push forward this work with all possible speed.

The Association, in its Schools, Colleges, Theological Seminaries and Missionaries, possesses all the machinery requisite for this work. This machinery is in prosperous operation in almost every Southern State. But as time goes on, new fields are opening, that call for Christian labors, and the gathering of the churches. Consequently, the persons for, and the means of, labor must be increased. Revivals swell the number of those who ought to be, and can be, trained for Christian missionary work; also, they prepare places for the organization of churches. But how shall these persons be prepared, and how shall these places be occupied? Teachers and ministers must be supported, and meeting houses must be built. This requires material means, generally beyond the reach of persons in the interested localities. Help, therefore, must come from abroad—it must come from our brethren of the North; and we would respectfully suggest that it is due from them to the South, first, because this is missionary work, and the command is, "Go ye into all the world;" and, secondly, because in an important sense, it is provision for their own household. Jerusalem must not be forgotten when provision is made for the world.

Our churches can be extended, they are needed, they are called for. We beseech our brethren to come to our relief. Some churches already existing are struggling for existence, and unless help comes to them, and comes soon, they must die. Shall they perish? Shall the places that are waiting Christian ordinances be denied and left desolate? Our cry is, "Come over and help us."

THE SOUTH-WESTERN CONFERENCE OF CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES.

By Rev. W. S. Alexander, New Orleans, La.

At the invitation of the Central Church, this Conference held its session at New Orleans, the 17th and 18th of this month. This was the 4th Annual Meeting of this body, the previous ones occurring in 1870, 1871 and 1873. The meeting was one of deepest interest, and we trust the benefit of it will be seen in the encouragement of our small band of laborers, and in the quickening and enlarging of our churches.

The opening sermon was preached by the Moderator, from II Timothy, 2d: 3d. "Thou, therefore, endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." "A true missionary spirit the secret of life and growth in the Church," was the subject of the discourse.

The special topics of discussion which occupied the attention of the Conference during their sessions were the following: "What can we do to build up the Church of Christ in Louisiana?" "The opening for Missionary labor in the State." "The importance of a sound faith and correct life in Church members —and the matter of Discipline—what it should be when used." "The Sabbath-school—How may its efficiency be increased?" "Personal experience in the gospel work in Louisiana." "Revivals," and "Education." The delegates entered into these discussions with great heartiness, with the conviction that they were vital to the best interests of evangelical religion in our State."

The past year has been one of most encouraging results. Of the thirteen churches in conference, we have reports nearly complete from eleven. From these reports we collate the following facts:

Membership, 581; Received on Profession in 1876, 111; Adult Baptisms in 1876, 40; Infant Baptisms in 1876, 53; Number in Sabbath school, 323.

All but four of the churches are free of debt, and the indebtedness, in every case, is to the American Missionary Association. The church at Terrebonne, under the care of Rev. D. Clay, built, during last year, a neat little chapel, at a cost of $994, and paid for it, without outside help. The Morris Brown Chapel, in this city, is also rapidly paying off its debt. The statistics of the 1st Congregational church of New Orleans, (white) at present without a pastor, and of the churches at Lockport and Petteance have not been received. Many facts of interest might be given in connection with these mission churches."

NEW IBERIA.

The church at this point, if they secure soon a faithful minister, has a bright future before it. The house of worship is neat and attractive, the congregation intelligent, and the surrounding country is beautiful and fruitful. Brother Proctor has been dismissed, and they are anxiously seeking for another pastor.

Ten miles from New Iberia in the same parish is Lake Peigneur, where Rev. Wm. Butler, with great self-denial and faithfulness, has built up a Congregational church of sixty members. By the labor of his hands, he supports his family, and with the zeal of an Evangelist preaches to his people, all of whom are very poor, and who are able to contribute but a pittance towards his support.

Five miles from new Iberia is the little church of Petteance, really a colony from New Iberia, of fifteen members, but with wise management and faithful instruction, giving promise of rapid growth.

TERREBONNE.

In Terrebonne and vicinity, we have three churches, Terrebonne, Terrebonne Station, and Lafourche Crossing, all built up under the ministrations of Rev. Daniel Clay. Mr. Clay has means of his own, and contributes liberally towards the support of these churches, besides preaching constantly. I believe him to be a true man of God, whose whole heart is in this work. His central place of preaching is Terrebonne. When he establishes a branch church like that at Terrebonne Station he puts such a Christian layman in charge as Mr. Beujamin Field, or Mr. Evans at Lafourche Crossing, while he retains the general oversight of all.

MISSIONARY AT LARGE.

It was the conviction of the brethren of the Conference, that if the right man could be found, endowed with the gifts and the piety of an evangelist, who would be willing to make a faithful tour of the State, entering every open door, and preaching wherever the people could be gathered to hear him, congregations could be gathered, and Congregational churches organized throughout the length and breadth of the Commonwealth. I share fully in this conviction. Who will command the advance movement?

I would not forget to mention the very able and eloquent address of Hon. Rufus Waples at the last session of the Conference. He spoke upon the principles and polity of the Congregational church, and its adaptability to the colored race. Judge Waples has been a resident of New Orleans for sixteen years, and member of the 1st Congregational church (white) since its organization.

Rev. W. S. Alexander was appointed delegate to the Congregational Conventions and Conferences of the Northern States. Prof. J. A. Adams was chosen delegate to the National Congregational Conference, with Mr. Alexander as alternate. The Conference adjourned to the 2nd Wednesday of January, 1878.

MOBILE. FIRST ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES OF ALABAMA.

Rev. Albert B. Irwin.

Congregationalism, though of recent date in the South, is steadily growing. Its work has been to establish a pure and intelligent Christianity among the negro race. Its churches in Alabama now number thirteen, and have grown up in the past six years. They are located as follows: one in Montgomery, one in Mobile, one in Selma, one in Marion, one in Athens, one in Florence, one in Talladega, and six near Talladega. In Talladega is the finest school in the State for the higher education of young men and women, with a Theological Department connected, under the American Missionary Association.

These churches organized themselves into a General State Conference one year ago, April 6, 1876. The conference met this year in the tasty and commodious little church building in Marion, Ala., the pastor of which, Rev. Jos Smith, is a graduate of one of the American Missionary schools. The Conference was composed of pastors, delegates from the churches, and American Missionary workers. Its session, lasting from March 30th to April 5th, consisted of the Conference proper, S. S. Convention, and Theological Institute. The narrative of religion showed a steady growth and a precious outpouring of the Spirit on more than half the churches. Seven young men of the Theological school, Talladega, were examined and licensed to preach. They all evinced very careful and thorough training. Their examination would have done credit to candidates for the sacred ministry anywhere. These young men have fields of labor near Talladega.

The S. S. Convention was of great interest, as showing the good work done in the various schools, and in the earnest discussions of all the practical problems relating to a good Sabbath school.

The Theological Institute, for inciting the ministry to a deeper Biblical knowledge, and more practical efficiency, was in the highest degree interesting and profitable.

The kindly feeling and appreciation of the meeting of the Conference by the citizens of Marion is indicated by the following brief notice from the Marion Commonwealth:

"The Alabama Conference of the Congregational Church has been in session here during the week. The Rev. Mr. Andrews of Talladega was chosen Moderator. The church here with which the Conference is holding its meetings is composed of some of the most intelligent people of our town. Several of our citizens have been present and expressed themselves as much pleased with the proceedings of the body. The examination of some eight or ten colored men now being educated in Talladega for the ministry, showed that they had been efficiently and faithfully trained for this noble work, upon which they are soon to engage. Our people are not indifferent to this Christian effort among the colored race, and the best evidence we can give of this fact is to welcome and encourage all who come among us with the sincere and earnest purpose to advance the cause of Christ in preaching to this people."

The Christian courtesy and fellowship manifested by the citizens and churches of Marion were repeated by the Southern Alabama Presbytery, held in Selma the following week, which invited Rev. H. W. Carter of Selma and Rev. E. C. Stickel of Montgomery as corresponding members. An account of their reception is given in the following extract of a letter from Mr. Carter:

"Rev. E. C. Stickel of Montgomery and myself were invited to sit as corresponding members of the South Alabama Presbytery and to give some account of our work. We stated that our motives and work are indicated by the words at the head of the American Missionary, viz., 'A monthly journal devoted to the Christian welfare of the negro,' etc.; that we are not here to engage in politics, or to cultivate a spirit of antagonism between blacks and whites, but to do what is in our power to advance the distinctively Christian welfare of the colored people. Many cordial expressions of sympathy were extended to us by the gentlemen present, among whom was Doctor Burgett of Mobile, a leading minister of that city, who gave strong evidence of his own and his people's sympathy with our work, by exchanging pulpits a few weeks since with Brother Irwin, pastor of the A. M. A. church at that point. This is the first exchange of the kind that I have known. We have had our pulpits supplied occasionally by Southern ministers or Y. M. C. A. workers, but an exchange is almost unknown. At the Presbytery, after we had spoken with reference to our work, Major Hardie, whom some may remember as President of the National Y. M. C. A. Convention of 1875, and who has shown himself for several years, in many and substantial ways, the foremost friend of our work here, introduced the following resolution, which was passed by unanimous rising vote,—

"'Resolved: That we have heard with great pleasure from Rev. E. C. Stickel of Montgomery and Rev. H. W. Carter of Selma, both of the Alabama Conference of Congregational Churches, about their work among the colored people, and we rejoice to recognize in them the spirit of the Master, and their work as the work of our common Lord; and we hereby express to them our hearty sympathy with them and their colleagues of like spirit, and do hereby commend them and their work to the sympathy and prayers of our people.'"

TEXAS CONFERENCE.

Rev. B. C. Church of Goliad, Texas, writes:

"We had a pleasant meeting of the Association in July in this church. Rev. S. M. Coles preached the opening sermon to a crowded house. Rev. A. Gray from Paris was present and represented four churches in Lamar Co. which with himself were received into the Association. We planned for an effort at San Antonio and Austin, and other places are on our list. Our churches are in a prosperous condition."

THE ANNIVERSARY AT HAMPTON.

Rev. Geo. M. Boynton.

The anniversary this year was, as usual, an occasion of much interest. The Trustees of the institution gathered on Wednesday to hear the full reports from each department, to lay plans for another year's work, and to fill vacancies; for it could not fail to be remembered, that two of the most highly honored names associated with Christian and educational work among the Freedmen must now be stricken from the roll of the Trustees of Hampton Institute:—the Rev. George Whipple, D. D., President of the Board, and Rev. E. P. Smith, who died in Africa last summer. Judge F. N. Watkins of Virginia, Rev. J. H. Means of Boston, Elbert B. Monroe of New York, and Rev. A. N. Arnold of Illinois were elected as the new members of the Board. Secretary Strieby was chosen President in place of his deceased colleague. A large crayon portrait of Dr. Whipple, presented to the Institute by Miss Longstreth of Philadelphia, was hung over the centre of the platform of Virginia Hall, and decorated with running vines; and a tribute of love and admiration was uttered by Dr. Strieby before presenting the diplomas to the graduating class on the afternoon of Thursday.

On Thursday morning the friends of the good work gathered from far and near. Boston and vicinity was represented by Deacon Ezra Farnsworth and George Brown, Esq, and the Rev. Messrs. Southgate, Edwards and Harding; Connecticut, by Mr. H. Foster and wife, from Meriden; New York, by Frederick Marquand and E. B. Monroe; Virginia, by Hon. J. B. Goode, and a large representation of the élite of Norfolk and vicinity. An unusual interest attached to the attendance of Mrs. Rutherford B. Hayes, the wife of the President of the United States, and Col. Rogers, his private secretary, who came from the White House, expressly to be present, under the escort of Mr. Charles L. Mead, a cousin of the President and one of the Executive Committee of the American Missionary Association.

The examinations of the morning reflected great credit on both scholars and teachers. Gen. Armstrong has succeeded in attracting around him, and inspiring with his own enthusiasm, an unusually gifted and earnest corps of instructors. And either the 250 pupils gathered together at Hampton are quite unlike the mass of the colored people of the South, or the latter are demonstrably capable of education. The General says, that if their average mental power be less than that of as many whites, their zeal for education is enough greater to make up for that deficiency. The exercises in reading, history, philosophy, grammar, spelling, arithmetic and algebra were not only well conducted and well recited, but were so animated and animating, that the students seemed unconscious of their visitors, and the visitors almost ready to hold up their hands in token that they knew it too.

The results of the industrial training were displayed on every hand. The well-tilled fields covered with the early planting; the stock in pens prepared for exhibition; the printing-press in operation, and knitting machines, and the sewing machines at rest; almost everything, indeed, to the very bricks of the walls told of the work done on the ground, and by far the larger part of it by the students. Indeed, they earn nearly $1,000 a month by their labor.

The afternoon was spent in Virginia Hall, the students occupying the body of the room, and the visitors overflowing the large platform, and occupying several rows of seats at the front below. Ten addresses, compositions and recitations were given by the graduating class; and were simple and practical in their themes, well expressed and intelligently delivered. Three prizes were awarded through the generosity of Dr. R. H. McDonald of New York, which were gracefully presented to the girls by Mrs. President Hayes; and to the young men by Mrs. Commodore Stevens.

Hon. John B. Goode, U. S. Representative from Virginia, came forward to announce the decision of the committee on awards. He was received with very hearty demonstrations of applause; to which he responded in part, as follows:

"I am glad to be here to-day. I have had rare enjoyment in witnessing the exercises on this occasion. It is impossible to over-estimate the advantages of an institution like this. It teaches you to think, to reason for yourselves. It prepares you for the duties of life which await you. There is as much difference between the educated and the uneducated, as between the ore in the mine and the gold in the polished product of art. The one shines and sparkles, the other shows none of its inherent beauties. You cannot tell how important it is for you to improve these precious opportunities. If you fail in this, you may sooner or later mourn like Esau, because you cannot regain them even with tears."

Col. Rogers, the private secretary of President Hayes, being called upon by Gen. Armstrong, said:

"We have seen and heard so much to-day, that I should trespass upon your time; I fear, if I should comply with the request of my friend, Gen. Armstrong; and yet, I certainly should do injustice to the emotions of satisfaction with which I have listened to and witnessed the exercises in this beautiful Hall, and in Academic Hall, unless I should in some brief way respond. I have been thinking much to-day; and certainly there is a theme for very earnest thought and feeling here. Interested as I have been for many years in the system of normal schools, I have never attended the exercises of any, where the pupils gave marked evidence of more thorough training, or the teachers of a more conscientious discharge of their duties, than here to-day. I have been accustomed to think of the normal school as first in importance in our school system, not only on account of its influence in the intellectual training of those who are to be the teachers of the land, but on account of its influence upon their characters. I looked on the map, on which the stars were dotted all over the State, showing where your graduates are teaching schools, and I said: Well may the State of Virginia foster, as I understand she does substantially, this institution. She has no other interest within her borders, South or North or East or West, comparable to this. I mean every word of it. She has no institution comparable to that whose exercises we have witnessed here to-day. Allow me to trespass a moment more. I was glad to hear your post-graduate say, in his address, that his duties were larger than those limited by his interest in his own race. For while race distinctions are important, they are far less so than those qualities which make us one in a common humanity and in a common inheritance. We have all races represented in our land. Let us remember that one flag waves over us, and that we have a common interest in that flag. The time is coming when it will be realized more deeply. In the name of those who are here with me, I desire to thank you—officers, teachers, pupils, of this institution—for the great satisfaction and pleasure you have given us to-day."

The Rev. Dr. Ryan of Norfolk addressed the students with words of eloquent and earnest counsel; after which the students separated and the invited guests returned by steamer to Old Point Comfort, those going North to take the steamer to Baltimore.

The graduating class goes at once into a three weeks' normal institute, to be trained in practical teaching by an accomplished expert, Prof. Johannot of New York. Ninety-five per cent. of all the graduates devote themselves to teaching. The State appropriates $250,000 per annum to the schools for colored children. The white people pay two-thirds of the cost of negro education, and all the cost of the white schools. Many of the colored schools are as yet in the hands of incompetent teachers, and the graduates of Hampton are in great demand. They teach from four to six months, receiving from twenty to twenty-five dollars a month, though they have to sell their certificates of pay often at a large discount. The school training fits them for other work in the interval, and they are happy in the sense of useful work and honorable self-support. The leaven is working in the mass.

THE ELEVENTH ANNUAL COMMENCEMENT.

Prof. L. V. Dodge.

The Annual Commencements have always been occasions of great local interest, and large crowds are in the habit of assembling to listen to the exercises. In the absence of a suitable building, the grove has been used as the place of meeting, and not unfrequently the rain has interrupted the speaking and scattered the crowd. This year a tabernacle, made of rough lumber, has been constructed and proves a very great convenience. It is one hundred and twenty feet long and eighty feet wide, capable of accommodating about two thousand people.

The village of Berea is small, and the surrounding country not especially noted for the literary tastes of its people, but more than enough people assembled on the 27th ult. to fill this spacious tabernacle.

The orations and essays of the "A" Rhetorical class, twenty in number, occupied the afternoon session from 9.30 A. M. to 12 M. Of these twenty speakers, fifteen were from Kentucky, four from Ohio, and one from Indiana. Seven were young women and thirteen young men. Fourteen were white and six colored. Some never knew of the Pierian spring until manhood's years were reached. There was not a break or hesitation in the presentation of the exercises; and so clear and emphatic was the enunciation that there was very little excuse for a failure on the part of any to hear every speaker.

At noon there was a basket-dinner on a large scale; and at two o'clock, P. M. the audience assembled to listen to the further exercises. Gen. John M. Harlan, who had been advertised to be present, was unavoidably detained by professional engagements; but the time was well occupied by other speakers. President Fairchild made a statement of the condition and aims of the Institution, emphasizing its peculiar principles as to providing equal opportunities for all without reference to sex or color.

Rev. Dr. J. H. Heywood of Louisville followed in an admirable address, in which he eloquently eulogized the work which is being done by Berea College, expressing his great surprise at the range and thoroughness of thought evinced by the productions of the students, as well as the natural and effective style of their delivery. And this surprise existed notwithstanding he had heard the exercises, here, four years ago. After Dr. H., brief remarks were made by Capt. Todd, a native of this county, but now of California; Rev. Mr. Dennis of Richmond, Ky.; Prof. Dodge; Prof. C. G. Fairchild and Rev. John G. Fee.

All feel that June 27th was a field day for Berea, and that a new impetus has been given to the cause of impartial education in the South. We are full of enthusiasm and hope for the future, and propose to press the work with renewed earnestness. May God's blessing attend.

To remind us that opposition is not all removed, we have just heard that one of our students, a young woman of unexceptionable demeanor, but slightly colored, while on her way home was refused admission to the ladies' car, and was forcibly dragged into the smoking car. With becoming spirit she refused to occupy a seat there; and it is proposed to inquire whether there is any law in the land for the protection of human rights.

From the Nashville Daily American, May 25, 1877.

Commencement week closed at Fisk University yesterday. The weather was cool and delightful, and everything contributed to render the occasion a most enjoyable one. By the time appointed, the chapel was filled with citizens and friends. On the platform sat Dr. D. C. Kelley, Judge Smiley, Dr. Leftwitch, J. J. Cary, Rev. B F. Brooks, Judge Nichol, Rev. C. S. Smith, J. P. White, Geo. L. White, Dr. G. W. Hubbard, Rev. Wm. Green, Dr. J Braden and others, together with the Faculty of the University.

A duett, "Die Entfrihrung," by Mozart, was beautifully rendered by Mrs. F. A. Chase and Miss R. Massey.

Prayer was offered by Prof. A. K. Spence, and an anthem was sung, "Cast thy burden on the Lord."

Young A. Wallace, a graduate from the scientific course, delivered a well-prepared address on the subject—"Public Virtue the Basis of National Prosperity." Mr. Wallace proposes to teach for a time after graduation, and at the same time pursue a course of law study. An essay was read by Laura S. Cary, a graduate of the classical course, subject, "The Ideal Character." Both of the performers were delayed with showers of bouquets from their admiring friends as they retired from the stage. * * *

After a few words of explanation, Y. A. Wallace received a diploma from the Scientific Course, and Miss Cary one from the Classical Course.

Thus have closed most successfully the exercises of a fruitful year of labor. In making a summary of the year, the number of students in attendance, male and female, reached two hundred and forty-six. Of these fifteen are in the College Course and fifty-two are preparing for College. Eighty-three are studying Latin, thirty-nine Greek, fifty-four the Higher Mathematics, twenty-nine Botany, and thirty-two Theology.

During the past week several important Faculty and Executive Committee meetings have been held. At one of these it was resolved that a missionary course should be established, which should embrace three years, in which instruction should be given to its members in those practical and literary branches that would be required to prepare missionaries for African fields. In this course some elementary instruction will be given in medicine, the common trades, such as blacksmithing, brick-making, house-building, etc.

It is not to be supposed for an instant that the institution is to be turned into a training school for missionaries and nothing more, for the training of teachers and ministers for the South will always be a prominent part of its work. The missionary course will be in addition to those already established.

The work of the year is now over. The teachers and students are preparing to leave for their homes and places of labor, and Jubilee Hall will be silent for the next three months.

LIVINGSTONE HALL.

BREAKING GROUND FOR THE NEW MISSIONARY BUILDING AT FISK UNIVERSITY, MARCH 28TH.

The ceremonies attending the breaking ground for the new missionary building of Fisk University came off yesterday. Livingstone Hall, named after the great African explorer, is to be built from funds to be secured in England by the leaders of the Jubilee Singers. $12,000 has already been collected. In the morning at 11 o'clock, Rev. G. D. Pike delivered before the faculty and students, an address on "Recent explorations and missionary efforts in tropical Africa." In the afternoon, at 2 o'clock, a large audience gathered in the chapel, among whom many of the white citizens of the city were to be seen. Gen. C. B. Fisk presided over the gathering. Prof. H. S. Bennett read some appropriate passages of Scripture, and prayer was offered by Prof. F. A. Chase.

GEN. FISK'S ADDRESS.

This occasion marks the steady progress vouchsafed by God to the University. We come to-day to prepare for our new building. The demand upon us calls for increased accommodations, and although the world may say that it is unpropitious to start such a building now, yet we shall walk by faith and erect this building to the memory of that great explorer, David Livingstone. My hope is that we may have such great faith as David Livingstone had from the first of his career to his grave. Forty days before his death, Livingstone writes in his journal these words: "Nothing on earth shall cause me to despair of finishing my work. Encouraged by the Lord my God, I will go forward." David Livingstone was a poor boy, the son of a poor shopman, of whose father it was said, that "he was too honest to get rich," and who bound David to a weaver, who, as he drove the shuttle, was weaving the grand web of that life which he lived in Africa. England did herself honor when she provided that David Livingstone's remains should repose in Westminster Abbey. The spirit of missions is the spirit of the Master. It is the genius of Christianity. It is a philanthropy which needs constant propagation to attest its genuineness.

PROF. BENNETT'S ADDRESS.

Mr. President and Friends: We are performing an act in which three continents have a deep interest—Europe, America and Africa. The funds for the erection of Livingstone Hall are given on condition that it be dedicated to the training of missionaries for Africa. Our work is of God. He has been with us in every step we have taken since the institution began. We are summoned to a higher faith as we erect Livingstone Hall. The Christian world has said Africa must be redeemed. That purpose grows deeper and stronger. Fisk University must have an adopted plan to play in the great work.

Gen. Fisk introduced in a few happy words Dr. J. B. Lindsley, as one who was present at the opening of Fisk school, more than ten years ago, and who had been a fast friend of the institution. Dr. Lindsley expressed the hope that the time would soon come when all the colored children of the State of Tennessee would have equal privileges with those who were then gathered in Fisk school. He had no hesitation in pledging that the people of Tennessee, the old masters of the colored people, would engage with enthusiasm in the great work of educating the colored people within our borders. His thought went across the sea to Africa, and he anticipated grand results for that vast continent.

A POETICAL TRIBUTE TO LIVINGSTONE.

Prof. Spence read the following brief poem:

Build to the name of a glorious life,
Build to prepare for the coming strife;
Build in memory of sighs and tears,
Pains and sicknesses, toils and fears;
Build in faith of the coming day
Something to catch its distant ray,
And cast it back into Africa's night,
And darkened millions shall see the light.

He needs no shaft of glittering stone,
Telling of death, sepulchral, lone;
He sleeps with Britain's most mighty dead,
His heart in Africa's heart was laid;
But build a prophesy, build a prayer,
Build a temple, strong and fair,
Where many a warm young life shall be Offered as his, Oh God, to thee.

ADDRESSES BY STUDENTS.

The presiding officer made some happy remarks, introducing some of the boys and girls of the institution. Albert Miller said that Livingstone Hall would prove a source of inspiration to the students of the institution. He saw the millions of colored people in the United States and Africa lifting up beseeching hands for help. At home and in Africa there was work to do in all things.

Another student, Laurine C. Anderson, said that as the two flags of England and the United States were entwined in loving embrace on the staff of Jubilee Hall, so might the hearts of all Christians in Europe, America and Africa be united in the work of redeeming Africa.

EVANGELIZING AFRICA.

Rev. C. S. Smith, representing the Nashville Preacher's Union, spoke a few words on the subject of evangelizing Africa by the colored men in America. Some colored men did not recognize their obligations to Africa. It was the call of God and humanity which was uttered to the colored young men and women to gird on their armor and prepare themselves for the work of lifting up Africa. He thought that Africa was for Africans. For that reason he liked Fisk University, because it sang Africa and talked Africa and had Africa in its heart.

After singing, the audience resorted to the site of the future Livingstone Hall, when Rev. G. D. Pike was introduced and spoke as follows:

ADDRESS OF REV. G. D. PIKE.

Mr. President and Friends: Not many men like David Livingstone are given to the world in a century. They mark the history of epochs when they come. They inaugurate dispensations. I cannot speak of his explorations here. I only wish to allude to the object he had in making them. "The end of the geographical feat," he says, "is the beginning of the missionary enterprise." The great purpose of his life was to open up Africa to missions.

Soon after the Doctor's death, the Free Church of Scotland raised sixty thousand dollars for planting a mission bearing the name of Livingstonia, which, in the autumn of 1875, was successfully founded on the shores of the Nyassa. And now our British friends are proposing to build another monument to perpetuate the name and influence of their great explorer at Fisk University, and to-day we break the ground for the Livingstone Missionary Hall. We know the history of the past. No one of us would have ventured to prophesy that so grand a building as the Jubilee Hall would ever be built on these grounds; perhaps no one of us ever fully desired the like of it; but he who said, long ago, "For your shame, ye shall have double," seems to have ordained that those people who, for so many years had the very worst this country afforded, should have at last some goodly specimen of the very best, and "the ways of the Lord are true and righteous altogether." By the side of Jubilee Hall, it is fitting there should be a Livingstone Missionary Hall—a memorial of the great missionary explorer, and a promise to the world of the intent and purpose of the Fisk University to achieve what seems to be its high destiny in behalf of the negroes in this country and their fatherland.

THE CLOSING EXERCISES.

After the address of Mr. Pike, Gen. C. B. Fisk, in behalf of the Board of Trustees, Rev. G. D. Pike, in behalf of the American Missionary Association, Minnie Tate, in behalf of the Jubilee Singers, B. M. Thomas, in behalf of the British Aid Society, Nathaniel Nurse, as student of the University from Africa, in behalf of Africa, J. D. Burrus, in behalf of the Society for the Evangelization of Africa, E. H. Anderson, in behalf of the students, each threw a spadeful of earth from the place designated. Prayer was then offered, the doxology was sung, the benediction pronounced, and the exercises were closed.

(From the Atlanta Constitution, June 22d.)

"Yesterday closed the annual course of the Atlanta University. The first three days of the week were passed at the fine University buildings in a series of thorough examinations on the entire course of study which the students had pursued during the past year. There were present at these tests of progress and scholarship a large number of cultivated and representative Georgians, some of whom conducted the examinations. Governor Colquitt attended one day and came away highly pleased. The scholarship attained by the upper grades surprised many who heard the evidences of advanced education which the pupils displayed. Geometry and algebra were thoroughly explained. Geographical and rhetorical studies were carried to a fine degree of thoroughness. The classics were also shown to have been carefully studied. In Latin some of the pupils were well versed in Virgil, and in Greek some read the smooth narrative of Anabasis quite fluently. Close questions showed that these studies had not been learned by rote, but that their principles were understood. On the whole, the result of the three days' examinations was highly honorable to the pupils and the faculty. Yesterday, at 9 o'clock, the pupils of the university met at the buildings of the institution and proceeded to Loyd Street Methodist Church, where the annual commencement exercises were to take place. The church was by 10 o'clock completely full. A very large number of white people, among whom were many of our most influential citizens and distinguished visitors from different parts of the state, occupied seats near the stage. They were shown every courtesy by the students and everything possible was done for their comfort. There were also present a large number of colored visitors who came to the city to witness the graduation of their friends. The graduates were from various parts of the state, Atlanta, Augusta, Macon and Savannah furnishing most of them, while others came from the Carolinas and other states.

Concerning the essays and orations one remark may be made which will include all. They were remarkably good. The general style was pure, and they expressed their ideas in a clear, concise manner. The reading of the female graduates and the speaking of the males is deserving of especial praise. Without any exception, they spoke in a plain, deliberate manner which showed fine elocutionary training.

Everybody knows how the colored race can sing. Yesterday they sustained their reputation. All the parts were well carried and the chorus was strong and well trained.

After the delivery of the last oration, the graduating class, consisting of seven young ladies and four young men came forward and received from President Ware the regular diplomas and certificates of the university.

President Ware announced that, with pleasure, he presented as the orator of the day, Rev. Wm. B. Brown, of Newark, N. J., who made the address before the university, just six years ago. Mr. Brown spoke in a clear, strong manner. His theme was, "Intelligence and virtue, the two pillars of society." He began by a high tribute to the capacities of the colored race, and prophesied for the efforts to educate the race, a rich harvest of success. He then entered into the discussion of his theme, and interested all his hearers. His general line of thought was that education, refinement and strengthening of all the mental powers, is absolutely necessary to fit man to meet the great exigencies which fall to the lot of all. The great powers for controlling thought were enumerated, the press being named as among the highest and most powerful instruments of the human intellect. The conclusion of the address was an earnest appeal to each of the pupils to devote his or her life to careful training of the powers given by God, and to the accomplishment of some good object through the means thus furnished. An appeal was made in behalf of Africa, the fatherland of the race, which now lies in heathen darkness awaiting the coming messengers of light who shall dispel its gloom. This was proposed as a high privilege and duty for those educated colored men and women who are fitted for the noble task.

During the past year, two members of the board of trustees have died. President Ware introduced Sec. Strieby, of New York, who spoke of the eminent services and devoted lives of George Whipple and E. P. Smith.

The doxology was sung finely and the benediction pronounced, and the large congregation dispersed."

The following account of the progress of six years is from the pen of Rev. E. C. Stickel.

Six years ago I was present at the first Anniversary exercises of this child of the American Missionary Association. I am now present at the seventh Anniversary exercises of the same school—the same and yet not the same; the same in name and place, but six years have left signs of wonderful progress. A mighty change has been wrought, not only here, but in all this State—in all the South. Six years ago! What then—what now! Then, the school here was but an experiment—now, it is an established fact; then, the numbers were few—now, greatly multiplied; then, the material was in the rough—now, it is greatly refined. There are many and most encouraging evidences of real refinement in manners, of great progress in intellectual and moral culture.

But what about the closing exercises? Briefly this: Last Sunday A. M. Rev. Wm. B. Brown, of Newark, N. J., preached a grand sermon from Dan. 6: 10, on a Life of Principle—good principle as opposed to impulse. In the evening, Rev. M. E. Strieby delivered a missionary address before the students, in which he referred to the gathering of the nationalities of the earth on this continent as an indication of a new development in the history of American missions.

On Monday began the annual examinations of the various departments of Talladega College. For the most part these examinations were conducted by topics upon the subjects studied during the year. I can give you only a bird's-eye view, but I wish it understood that the view was with my own eyes and not with the eyes of a bird. The classes showed a degree of discipline and careful drill most gratifying to pupils, parents, teachers and friends from the town and from abroad. The attendance upon the examinations was, I think, unusually large and the increased interest on the part of visitors was manifest. A class in Physiology evinced in the course of their examination careful study and a very thorough mastery of the subject. From essays presented subsequently by several of the young ladies of the Literary Society, it was evident that the weightier matters belonging to Physiology had impressed themselves upon their minds. These people, so utterly without a knowledge of how to take care of their bodies, need to study such a subject with this practical side in mind and in heart. The examination of the class in Natural Philosophy was conducted by topics illustrated by experiments which added greatly to the interest of a most creditable examination.

There is here a Theological Department under the efficient management of Rev. Geo. Andrews. It numbers twenty-five young men of various degrees of culture in training for the Christian ministry. I wish the friends of this work —and enemies too, if there are any—could have witnessed the examination of the class in Systematic Theology, on Tuesday morning. They would have been most fully convinced of the ability of these young men to grapple in a masterly way with the most profound subjects. Those who were present at this examination do not hesitate to compare it favorably with examinations in Theological Seminaries of the North. Yesterday a class in the same department was examined in New Testament history. The assignment was by topics. The young men showed a familiarity with the history and the geography of the Bible truly wonderful. How can they fail with consecrated lives, a sound Theology and an unsealed Book to carry the gospel to a people beclouded with superstition and error? With this closed the examinations.

At 2.30 P. M. the chapel was crowded to its utmost capacity, to listen to the "First Anniversary exercises of the Theological Department." The orations compare favorably with commencement orations in other schools of like character. Three young men—Messrs. Benson, Fuller and Jones, though they had not received the full advantage of a complete literary training, were presented with certificates of approval, authorized by the Trustees and faculty, and they leave the school to enter upon their life work, with the prayers of their friends, and we trust in the power of the Master.

Dr. Strieby's address to the young men and to the people made a deep, and, I trust, an abiding impression upon us all. Other short addresses were made. Rev. Mr. Boggs, pastor in charge of the Presbyterian (white) church of this place, spoke in warm commendation of the work among the colored people, and referred to a similar school at Tuscaloosa, Ala., where young colored men were being trained for the ministry.

A few prominent Christian men of Alabama were invited to be present at the Anniversary. Prof. Andrews read letters expressing regret at their inability to attend, and uttering words full of sympathy with the work. These brethren meant every word they said. To us engaged in this work, they are most encouraging and refreshing.

After tea the young men assembled on the grounds for cadet drill. This is a new, interesting and beneficial feature of the school. The influence on the general bearing of the young men is very marked.

Last evening at 8 o'clock, Rev. Wm. B. Brown delivered a most admirable address to a packed audience (not in the sense in which the New York juries are packed) of attentive and interested listeners. His subject—The Two Pillars of a Christian Civilization (Intelligence and Virtue)—was most appropriate. It was my pleasant lot to hear Mr. Brown's address here six years ago, on the New Departure of the African people. So far as this school is concerned, no one can compare the then with the now, with the least shadow of doubt that the departure has been, along the line of intelligence and virtue, onward to a high Christian civilization.

Again, this forenoon, the chapel was crowded to listen to the prize speaking of six young men, and the prize essays of six young ladies. A year's tuition was offered to the victors. A half year's tuition to the second best. This offer has stimulated a healthy and energetic competition.

At 2.30 there was a gathering of the former teachers and students. A collation and the renewal of friendships rendered this a very pleasant meeting.

At last came the Annual Concert—the closing of the Anniversary week—long to be remembered.

CLOSING EXERCISES OF TOUGALOO UNIVERSITY, TOUGALOO, MISS.

From the Daily Times, Jackson, Miss., June 15, 1877.

"On Tuesday morning, at 8.45, the students assembled in the study hall to undergo examination. An air of intelligence filled the room. After the usual opening exercises, the examination began. Though the pupils at first labored under those feelings of embarrassment which always attend such occasions, yet on the whole they did credit to themselves and their teachers. When the examination of the reading, arithmetic, geography, grammar and history classes was ended, the pupils engaged in a spelling match. Miss Pope Tevault was the successful speller. About 11 o'clock a. m. Messrs. Wolfe, McGill, Hemingway and Lowd, who had been appointed as visiting committee arrived from Jackson, each of whom addressed the pupils, saying they were well pleased with what they had seen and heard. Mr. Hemingway's remarks were specially interesting. He said he had been, now is, and expected to be, a Democrat, that he, on the battle field had opposed the citizenship of the negroes, but now seeing that they were citizens, he was willing to do all he could to make them good citizens. He said he was an advocate of educating the colored people. He wanted to see them become good and intelligent citizens, and he believed that what he said was the echo of the sentiments of nine-tenths of his people. He said he felt that at the next session of the Legislature he could give in a favorable report of the educational work at Tougaloo.

On the next day (Wednesday), a large excursion train packed with colored people arrived at the University to witness the commencement exercises. These consisted of beautiful songs, historical recitations, dialogues and essays by the students. The essays were very well composed and well read.

During the exercises on both days the very best order was observed by the students. They possess high respect for their teachers, are courteous, and well behaved and anxious to move on. It is exceedingly pleasing to sit, as I more than once have done, surrounded by a number of the young men, and hear them tell how anxious they are to become educated men, so that they can render their illiterate people service, by helping to lead them out of the dark domain of ignorance. Many of the pupils regret that they cannot attend regularly, on account of not being financially able to do so. The whole Board of Faculty, though contending with mammoth disadvantages, has done real good work. The Tougaloo University, it is hoped will give to a great portion of Mississippi its future teachers."

Early in the spring our school building at New Orleans was burned to the ground. The school went on with but the loss of one day. A new lot has been purchased and the speedy erection of another building, more commodious and more convenient, is contemplated.

Concerning this great loss, Rev. W. S. Alexander writes as follows:

Our friends have doubtless been advised, by the daily press, of the destruction by fire of our beloved University; but they cannot know with what a weight of sorrow the calamity has fallen upon us in New Orleans. The burning of a schoolhouse, an academy or a college, even in the North, is regarded as an event to be deplored, viewed simply as an interruption in the work of the year; but here in the South, the burning of a university, supported largely by benevolent funds, is a calamity of the first magnitude.

The facts may be briefly given. On Friday afternoon, the 16th inst., at 4 o'clock, when the day scholars had been dismissed, and the boarding students were at the dinner table, the flames were kindled, and in one brief hour the doomed building fell in hopeless ruins. The room where the fire started was unoccupied for school purposes, so that there was no possibility of the fire originating there from natural causes.

Straight University, during the seven years of its history, has accomplished a blessed work for the colored race. I know not how many hundreds have been educated within its walls; but no one will question the fact, that a mighty impulse has been given through its influence to the cause of education and Christian culture. How urgently such institutions are needed for the freedmen none can adequately understand who have not looked into the prevailing and appalling gloom of ignorance that still hangs over them. God only knows how slowly and wearily the night wears away, and how profound and unyielding is the darkness that still broods over the common mind.

The general feeling in this city, among the friends of the institution, and especially the representative colored men, is, that STRAIGHT UNIVERSITY must be SPEEDILY REBUILT. The demand for such a school was never more urgent and intelligent than now. I shall be greatly disappointed if the colored people of New Orleans and the State at large do not respond to the appeal for a new building, GENEROUSLY and HEARTILY, and to the extent of their ability. On Tuesday evening last, a public meeting was held in Central Church, to give opportunity for an expression of feeling on the subject. The meeting was largely attended and of the deepest interest throughout. We were fortunate in having with us at this juncture Rev. James Powell, the District Secretary from Chicago. In a vigorous and eloquent address upon the parable of the "Good Samaritan," he gave tone and direction to the conference that succeeded. Deacon Straight, whose honored name the University bears, was called to the chair, and made appropriate and tender remarks. As Mr. Straight is a man of "deeds" more than of words, what few words he spoke were listened to with peculiar interest. He was followed by Lieut. Gov. Antoine, Senator Landry, Rev. M. C. Cole, Mr. Stoddard, Governor Pinchback, and by the Presidents of Leland and New Orleans Universities—Rev. Dr. Stone and Rev. Dr. Godman. A committee was appointed to draft resolutions expressive of the sentiments of the meeting. I append a copy of these Resolutions:—

WHEREAS: The religious and educational interests of this State and the Southwest have sustained a great loss in the burning of the Straight University, therefore be it

Resolved: That the trustees of that Institution, and through them the officers of the American Missionary Association, be assured of the sympathy which the friends of the University in New Orleans feel for them in this hour of trial. That what to them is a misfortune is to us a bereavement for which there is no consolation save restoration. Also be it

Resolved: That in the judgment of this assembly the work and influence of the University is of so vital a character to the immediate and future welfare of the people that have been the beneficiaries of its bounty, that even a temporary abridgment of its activity will prove to them of incalculable injury. Be it further

Resolved: That not only the rebuilding, but the enlargement, of the Institution should at once engage the attention of the Board of Trustees and the American Missionary Association. That to encourage them in the execution of this purpose we pledge our active support, co-operation and earnest prayers, being fully persuaded that the benevolent and friendly everywhere will deem it a privilege to assist in this great work. And in conclusion be it

Resolved: That the exigencies of the times, recognized in the peril to our country from ignorance—to humanity from superstition and infidelity, and to society from relaxed morality—impel us to urge, with all the power and influence we can command, the immediate restoration of the University buildings, firmly believing that the Everlasting Father whose spirit prompted the thoughts that gave us the school, will still influence other hearts to come to our assistance, that the restored University may become more potent for good in the future, than it has been in the past.

SIGNED: C. C. Antoine, P. Landry, M. C. Cole, Rufus Waples, J. Ross Stewart; COMMITTEE.

We will not question that there will yet be discovered "a silver lining" to this dark storm cloud. If, in the providence of God, the NEW UNIVERSITY shall rise in grander proportions, and be endowed with increased abilities to welcome and care for the thousands who, in the coming years, shall flock to its gates, their smiles will chase away our tears, and hope will reign where sorrow is now an unwelcome guest.

The following, written by Prof. Adams, shows the enthusiasm of the teachers and scholars to go on with their studies.

The school lost but one day and then went right on with the work. Most of the boys are comfortably quartered in a large two-story building, which I rented for about thirty-three dollars per month.

I was never so well satisfied with the school as on the morning before the fire. A couple of teachers were present from Tougaloo, and, naturally enough, our thoughts were turned to the condition of the school. As I stood in the presence of the school at the morning devotions, heard the full, strong voice of song, looked into the many earnest faces, and thought of the talent which we had gathered from near and from far, of the noble ambitions which had been awakened, of the lofty aspirations which were stirring generous hearts, of the truth and the honesty which were getting deep down in many consciences, of the scholarship, the discipline and the self-control, of the manhood and the womanhood becoming so strong and so beautiful—my heart swelled with pride and I felt that our work was indeed successful. It grieves me that none of you [officers of the A. M. A.] saw the school as it was that day. It grieves me, too, that you did not see the change made upon the buildings [in the recent alterations,] the beautiful chapel made out of the former useless galleries, and the rooms for fifty boys, where before there was little more than empty space. But it is gone now; and yet only the material part, that which was built by carpenters and masons. All that was built in mind, in heart and in conscience still remains. All the prestige and the fame, all the old love and all the new hopes still live to bring back the students to the new building, which I feel must rise before another winter.

Our scholars are very much in earnest; from the very moment of the fire they would hear of nothing but to go ahead. When I asked them what I should do with them, they said, "Anything; just so you keep the school going." "Shall I put you in the barracks?" "Put us anywhere, but let us go on with the school." One young lady, a graduate, came to see us a day or two after the fire, and told us that she was willing to work and give half her wages for the rebuilding of the University. It will be very difficult in our new quarters to maintain proper discipline among the boys and to secure the scholarship we have had; but we will hope for the best, and try to be patient if we don't accomplish all that we should like.

STRAIGHT UNIVERSITY. EXHIBITION AND COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES.

By Prof. J. A. Adams.

"The school year of '76 and '77 closed May 1st. In many respects the session has been very prosperous. The attendance from abroad has been greatly increased, numbering more than three hundred, where three years ago there were not twenty-five. The boarding house has been filled to overflowing, and after doubling up and crowding together we were at last compelled to say 'we cannot take you.' Students have been present from as far up as Jackson and Vicksburg, thence across Northern Louisiana to Shreveport, and from different parts of Texas as far away as Austin and Eagle Pass on the Rio Grande. This is an immense scope of territory, as you would perhaps more fully realize, if you had been with me in my late trip across this vast growing State, which Sam Houston once called 'an Empire.' To supply such a region with teachers, and ministers, and leaders of society, is a work which should satisfy the ambition of the most zealous friend of the race.

There has also been a marked improvement in the character of the students. They are more ambitious, more faithful and more talented than heretofore. Many promise to wield a greater influence among their people. The closing exercises consisted of the examinations, the annual exhibition, and the commencement. The exhibition was largely attended and very highly appreciated. The State Superintendent of Education, as soon as the exercises were over, clasped me by the hand, exclaiming, 'I am gratified, exceedingly gratified; what a blessing such an Institution as this is to the community. I do not think I have ever attended an exercise of this kind which gave me more pleasure.'

The commencement exercises drew together a large concourse of people. Orations were delivered by the graduates, and an address on Human Progress by Prof. Adams. Two young men were graduated. Both were good students, one remarkably talented, handling Latin, mathematics and metaphysics with the greatest ease. Indeed, it was always difficult to find work enough for him to do. His examination essay on Sir William Hamilton's Philosophy compared very favorably with similar productions, which the writer used to hear read at Union Seminary, by much older students.

All who were sent to the State Superintendent by the Principal were given good recommendations to the Parish Boards of School Directors. One student passed a rigid written examination before Col. Boyd, Pres. of the State University, who very highly commended him to the Superintendent.

In conclusion, I need only say that the foundations of the school have been well laid, its influence has taken strong hold upon the community, it has secured the respect of all its neighbors of whatever race, and has extended its name far and wide over this great South-west. Money, talent, toil, and the indispensable years of time, will fill up the measures of its prosperity and make it a means of incalculable good."

During the year, a lot has been purchased, and a charter obtained, for the Collegiate and Normal School. The building will be erected as soon as the money for it can be raised. Meanwhile, a Normal School has been conducted by Mrs. Garland in a rented building with very good success.

An arrangement has been made between the Presbytery of Washington and the A. M. A. for the joint support of the Theological Department of this institution, the joint arrangement to continue for one year. Rev. Wm. W. Patton, D. The number of Theological Students is 28.

Number of pupils, 93; number in Sabbath-school, 150.

The following, showing the lack at this point to be more that of room than of students, is from a letter of Miss Moore:

"Our school is full to overflowing, and we are constantly refusing applicants for want of room, and of time and strength to devote to them. It seems like sending them back to their old ways and habits, thus dooming them to just the life we came here to save them from. Adults are calling for an afternoon and an evening school, and we have to say, no! In view of our national interests this is not less discouraging than our inability to receive the younger applicants; for these men are our voters, whether they can read their ballots or not.

"I find in our pupils many faults—the natural results of slavery—which require the constant exercise of patience and forbearance. Yet on the whole, the school is much pleasanter than I expected, and, I think, would compare favorably with our Northern schools, while in politeness and respect to their teachers the colored children excel.

"Our church work is hopeful, though our numbers are few. And when I see our quiet orderly truth-loving, truth-seeking, and truth-living members, I say the truth has wrought wonders in them. We have cause for gratitude that we have a pastor who teaches the pure gospel, and brings it to bear upon the daily life and practices of his hearers, for while this may not attract the multitude, it will promote the spiritual growth of those who hear."

CLOSING EXERCISES.

"The friends of our education, in this State, were never more encouraged than at present. The minds of the colored people here are turning with great energy and resolution to the work, and our future hopes are indeed high. The Washington School was organized early after the surrender of the Confederate army, under the auspices of the American Missionary Association. Its rapid growth soon demanded better accommodations and more complete facilities, to provide which the Freedmen's Bureau in 1867 erected the present commodious two story building, which was first occupied in January of 1868. Prof. F. P. Brewer was its first Principal. From him, if we mistake not, it passed into the hands of the present able management. Miss E. P. Hayes is the Principal, under whose administration it has attained a character and prosperity beyond the hopes of its most sanguine friends. It has graduated quite a number of our most competent and successful teachers, and if we may judge from present appearances, its day of usefulness has just begun. The past session, 1876–7, was probably the finest of any in its history. The regular attendance was between two and three hundred. The closing exercises took place June 21st, and elicited much interest on the part of the entire community. The scholars acquitted themselves well; fully sustaining the high reputation of the school for thorough training. In reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, spelling, grammar, music, etc., they evinced a proficiency simply astonishing. In the evening all the available room in the spacious hall was crowded to overflowing to witness the musical concert. It was delightful, highly enjoyed, and eminently creditable to both teachers and scholars. Many of our best white citizens were present and the morning papers paid flattering encomiums to the school and its worthy teachers."

Of the closing exercises, Mr. B. writes as follows:

The closing exercises of the Brewer Normal School, for the scholastic year of 1876-7 began with the annual examinations on June 26th, and ended with anniversary exercises June 28th. The examinations on Tuesday and Wednesday were exceedingly satisfactory and creditable to both pupils and teachers, and, what is unusual, they were well attended.

Revs. Robinson and Evans of the Baptist Church, Spearman and Perrin of the African Methodist, and McDonald and Franklin of the Methodist Episcopal church, were present during the exercises and expressed themselves as pleased with the proficiency exhibited. Many of our students who are out teaching, closed their schools for a week in order to be present at our closing exercises. Others would have been glad to be here but were unable to do so. One young man, a Baptist preacher, who had been obliged to leave school and return to his home in a neighboring county, had no money to pay his fare, and so walked thirty miles in order to get here and be examined with his class. The ladies of the village gave our students a supper on Wednesday night. On Thursday night, came the closing exercises, consisting of speeches, recitations and songs, interspersed with dialogues. Our largest room was filled to overflowing and many, who were unable to gain admittance stood in buggies and wagons under the windows and manifested the greatest interest.

Looking back over the past year, there is much for which to be grateful to God in his dealings with this institution. Despite the hard times, the school has been unusually large, and it has been difficult for us to accommodate all who have applied for admission. Another cause of thankfulness is the good work being done by pupils of this institution. Twenty-three of our students are now engaged in teaching, and so far as I can learn, nearly seven hundred pupils are under their care.

Of the religious interest connected with this school, we give the following brief account:

"The Spirit of the Lord has visited our school. We have noticed much seriousness on the part of pupils, and to-day we announced a prayer-meeting instead of regular exercises. Nine pupils arose ere the close of meeting, and believed that they had been born again. They are from among our best pupils. They say they do not think but know that God has forgiven them, and like true Christians, they sought their mates, who were also seeking the light, and talked and prayed until all had found peace. Others are still inquiring, and we hope they may find rest in the quiet of the school-room. They say that they feel nearer the Lord than when in the confused meetings in the churches. It has been a happy day, and the saving of these souls is a happy termination to our year's work."

This school building, together with the Norwich Chapel, adjoining, was completely consumed by fire on the night of December 13th. We are happy to state that a new building is commenced, which we hope will be ready for occupancy by the 1st of January.

The following is from an eye-witness:

"Briefly, these are the facts: Last night, Wednesday, December 13th, at about 10 o'clock, we were aroused from our beds by the cry of fire and the sight of flames. I hurried out, and found a barn, filled with hay, &c., blazing furiously —said barn being in the rear of, and joining the school-house out-closets. The church soon caught, also, and though there seemed for a time a fair prospect for saving it, it was destroyed—and the water supply failing, the parsonage followed next.

"All the movables in church and parsonage were saved, and most in the school house, though in a sadly dilapidated condition. The colored men worked nobly. They stood guard all night over the things, and are now working busily to arrange and save them. They feel very bad over the loss. They are very anxious to rebuild, and hope the A. M. A will not be discouraged and close their work here. They have no other hope for their children. We have had some few expressions of sympathy from the whites, the better class especially."

The following is from a letter written to the Secretary by three of the scholars:

"What a great distress our people are in! The mothers of the children are just weeping and mourning and screaming; their hearts are almost broken, and the men hardly know what to do; but they say, if they can get any help, they will work night and day. They are willing to do with all their hearts. The women some of them have nearly lost their minds. They say, 'just think what your Northern people have done for us, and for some one to burn it up., It has distressed the whole of Macon—I mean the colored people. We can't hardly stand it. We know the loss; our children are wandering about like lost sheep. The little things just cried, as did the teachers. The worst time we ever had is now. We do most earnestly ask you Northern people to help us."

On account of the severe illness of one of the teachers this school was closed earlier than usual, and consequently without the examination. Concerning this, Miss Wells writes:

"We had anticipated a better examination and finer closing exercises this year than usual. Our students have been in better spirits, better condition for earnest study and extra work than is common at this season of the year, and to have the term close thus prematurely and sadly is a great disappointment to them and their parents also. But God knows what is best for us all and we shall seek to follow His guidance."

STUDENTS' DAY—A VERY CREDITABLE EXHIBIT FOR BOTH SCHOLARS AND TEACHERS.

[From the Memphis Daily Appeal, May 4, 1877.]

We yesterday took occasion to visit the Le Moyne Normal School (colored), on Orleans street, to witness the work being done by the school, and especially to note the exercises of "students' day." Agreeable to yesterday's announcement we found the entire school fully in the hands of a student faculty, elected by the pupils from their own number, on the previous day. After a pleasant and graceful reception by the temporary principal, we were shown into the cabinet and library; here were arranged in excellent order several hundred specimens in geology and kindred subjects. A full text-book library is owned by the institution. All books are provided students at a trifling cost. In this room we also noticed a case of philosophical apparatus quite sufficient for the present use of the school. Passing from this room, we were shown into

THE MODEL SCHOOL.

Here were about fifty pupils in three grades under the care of Miss Jackson, a member of the senior class of the normal department. The most commendable order prevailed in the room; one or two classes were called to recite, doing so in a prompt, earnest manner, while all others seemed skilfully kept busy, and so found no time for mischief. Passing into the hall we glanced into the music-room, where Minnie Williams presided as teacher in as dignified a manner as a miss of sixteen could well assume. Passing from here up the stairs we come to

THE NORMAL DEPARTMENT.

In the seats sit about ninety students, intent upon their lessons, from which few look up, on our entrance. The room is pleasant, well lighted and well ventilated. In front of the platform and desk stands a table provided with dictionaries, a set of cyclopædia and other reference works, and a piano for leading in the singing, stands at hand. In this room no recitations are heard. The care of the room is left to the students themselves. We heard classes in algebra and grammar, taught by Louise M'Gill; also classes in arithmetic, by Miss Ellen Dickinson, who acted as teacher in this branch, and as preceptress. Classes in book-keeping, history, language, and natural history were heard by the principal for the day, Mrs. Flora Brown. All the rooms, the halls and stairs were

MODELS OF NEATNESS AND ORDER.

Throughout the day there was not shown the least disposition to take advantage of the absence of the regular teachers, or in any way to depart from the usual order of the school. A considerable number of visitors were in at different times, and the regular teachers of the school improved the freedom they had from their usual duties to visit some of the city schools. The senior class this year at Le Moyne has seven members, those of this number who are able in June to pass a searching examination on the branches studied will be allowed to graduate, and will receive the diploma of the institution.

We reprint the following account of the graduating exercises from the Memphis Public Ledger of June 22d. It is, doubtless, from the pen of the editor, the Hon. Harvey Mathes, who was present and with others made congratulatory remarks. We value very highly such testimony as that given in the closing paragraph:

"LE MOYNE NORMAL SCHOOL."

"The graduating exercises of this institution for the education of colored youth took place in the tasteful Episcopal church opposite to the institution on Orleans street last night. A large and very orderly and attentive audience, including many white people, was present. Dr. George White, Judge Green P. Foute, superintendent of county schools, and several other well known gentlemen occupied seats with the faculty on the platform. The exercises were highly creditable to teachers and students, and had the rare merit of being not tediously long. There were six graduates; their essays were written in a clear, simple style, evincing both intellectual and moral culture. The reading was so distinct as to be heard in every part of the house. The vocal music, accompanied by the piano, was excellent.

"After the valedictory, Rev. Mr. Steele, the principal, delivered an appropriate address to the graduating class and presented the diplomas. Rev. Dr. White and other gentlemen on the platform volunteered short addresses to the students and the audience, expressive of their gratification at the prosperity of the school, the evident progress and proficiency of the students, commending them for their laudable efforts at self-improvement, and giving such kindly hints and advice as occurred at the moment, all of which were well received. The exercises were then concluded with prayer.

"The Le Moyne Normal School is evidently doing a good work and deserves to be encouraged. The strictest sense of morality is inculcated throughout the curriculum and seems to pervade the minds of those who come under the influence of its teachings. We will venture now to predict that very few of the graduates of this institution will become law-breakers, idlers, or useless members of the community in which they may live, but, on the contrary, will do much to ameliorate the condition of their own race, and earn that respect which is essential to good citizenship and to a harmonious and mutual good understanding between the two distinctive races at the South."

III. COMMON SCHOOLS.

VIRGINIA.

Carrsville—Miss M. A. Andrus, Riceville, Pa.

NORTH CAROLINA.

McLeansville—Miss E. W. Douglass, Decorah, Iowa.

The following extract from a letter of Miss D. shows the missionary influence of this school.

"The two girls who have been in the home with me left to-day to commence teaching in districts near. Each will have a Sabbath-school in her district. We thus lose two of our best teachers and some scholars from our school, but many will be reached who cannot come here. Pray for them that they may be successful, and do much good to their race.

"During one of our prayer-meetings, recently, several sat with bowed heads, weeping on account of their sins. At length one young man arose, a new light in his eyes, and went about silently shaking hands with the Christians. They gave expression to their joy by singing 'Shout, shout glory! joy in the heaven to-day.'"

Woodbridge—Miss Carrie E. Waugh, Scriba, N. Y.

A brief account of the revival in connection with this school may be found under the head of Church Work. Miss Waugh at one time wrote us, "Every young man and woman in the school has found Jesus, or is seeking him." She also sends us the following about the Temperance Work:

One of the brightest spots in our work is our Band of Hope meeting, at three o'clock Sabbath afternoon. We admit all who will take our pledge, old and young; quite a number of middle-aged men are members. We take the Temperance Banner, have temperance songs, declamations and recitations from the young people, while we give them short sketches of the temperance work that is going on in our land. Last Sabbath we asked them to give us some of their experience of the few months past. Had they had any temptations to break their pledge? One young man said, "I went to town a few weeks ago with quite a number of my mates; coming home we stopped at the grocery up the road, and Mr. D—— put out the glasses and liquor and invited us all to drink. They all stepped up but me and drank (not any of them members of our Band I am glad to say.) Said Mr. D——, "step up James and take a drink;" said I, "No sir, thank you, I belong to the Temperance Band." Said Mr. D——, "They won't know it;" but I said, "I mean to keep my pledge if they don't." Our secretary, Mr. Williams, went to Newberne, a few days ago. Said he, "While I was in a dry goods store, the merchant sent out and got some liquor and treated his white customers, and when they were through he invited me to take a drink, I said, "I am a temperance man, I don't drink: I have not drunk any liquor since I was a boy." He reached out his hand and shook mine warmly. "Brave man," said he, "I wish I could say as much." God speed the temperance work among this people.

STUDENTS' WORK AND NEEDS.

Under this head we wish to group a few significant facts, leaving them to speak for themselves.

A TESTIMONY.

Hon. Andrew Dunn, School Commissioner for Monroe County, Ga., in a speech to the students of Atlanta University, said that, under his supervision, several of the students of the University had been engaged in teaching in his county, and that he had found them of excellent character, capable, faithful and successful.

TALLADEGA COLLEGE. YOUNG MEN IN EARNEST.

Letter from Rev. G. S. Pope.

"There are young men here very anxious to work. Three came in this afternoon from Columbus, Miss. They walked seventy miles and rode the rest of the way. They want work, are bound to get an education, and thought if they could only get here, they would be all right. One of them has two dollars, and the others have five or six each. One of them is going into the Theological class. What shall we do for these young men?"

TALLADEGA COLLEGE. A PLEA FOR BOOKS OF REFERENCE.

By Rev. E. P. Lord.

"'We are all needy creatures,' as I presume you have discovered before this. Just now the need I feel most is of books. One hundred and twenty-five young men and women, who are fitting themselves to teach, have but one general book of reference, and that a Webster's dictionary. They have almost no general information—of facts, of countries, of men—and literally no way of getting such information but from the teachers. It may surprise you, but the teachers, including the principal, do not know everything, and cannot impart instruction upon points of which they are ignorant. Teachers and scholars do very much need some encyclopædias. If a call were made this once, would not some one at least give his old set as he fills his shelves with the new edition from Appleton's? We could use to great advantage more than one set. It is very trying for so many who have so many things to learn, to have so little to learn from."

EXPERIENCES IN WORK AND PRAYER.

By a Talladega Student.

"During vacation I taught school in Marion Co., Ga., nearly two hundred miles from Talladega. The darkness is very great. But few families have the Bible in their houses. A great many old people had heard of it but had never heard it read. They look upon it as something too high and sacred for them. Not all had an interest in it; and many had no desire to hear it. Now, every Sabbath morning from forty to fifty old people came in to hear me read the Bible.

There were fifteen grown girls in my school who did not know their A, B, Cs, and who could not count a hundred. Most of the young men could count. The work troubled me because I was not educated. I would just cry because of it! There was so much to do, I had many pains because I was not able to discharge the duties that came upon me. I used to go to a place in the field to pray; I had a certain spot to put my knees—I could pray better. The morning before my examination I went out there to pray for help. I was strengthened from that hour. I had a splndid day.

When the time came for me to return to Talladega, I wanted to bring Thomas—one of my scholars—with me, but the trouble was how to get the money, for the County Commissioner told me he could not pay me. I went to him and said I must have some money to take me back to school, for I must be there the first of the term; and if he could not borrow it for me, I must walk there. He borrowed $15 at thirty-three per cent. interest. You ought to have seen me trot through the country to see every one who owed me five cents. I busied around until I collected $5.50; coming home late at night, I lost my pocket-book. I prayed about it, then started out before day and found it.

A man carried me and my trunk two miles to the Cross Roads; there I met Thomas; we were wondering what we should do next, when a white man's wagon came along; we were taken in and carried to Columbus. I offered to pay the man, but he said I might pay the wagoner. I asked the wagoner how much I should pay him, and he said 'A nickel;' I was so glad I laughed and paid him two. This ride of twenty-five miles for two nickels!

At Columbus we got on the train and came to Calera. I was out of money and could not make up my mind what to do. I prayed right peart over it. At last I went to the conductor and told him my condition; he said he would bring us along to T—— free. I began to see the hand of God leading me along the way, and decided he had something special for me."

LETTERS FROM PUPILS ENGAGED IN TEACHING.

Miss Laura A. Parmelee writes of the progress of the pupils in the Le Moyne school and adds the subjoined extracts from letters of the pupils engaged in teaching.

"Ever since the holidays, there has been a steady improvement in the spirit and scholarship of the students. All are working faithfully. The determination to be thorough is noticeable. An increasing taste for reading is one of the good omens for the future. We miss a number of the more advanced pupils who were compelled to teach this term. From a few letters received, within a week, I copy extracts that will show you what they are doing:"

GERMANTOWN, TENN.

I have a school of sixty-five, nearly all of which are small children. I have been teaching two weeks. Ask the scholars to remember me in their Friday evening prayer-meeting. EMMA HILL.

TIPTON STATION, TENN., Feb 5th.

I have a school of forty scholars, all of which seem interested in their studies. One class is in the fifth reader and Dry Measure. My school-room is a hewed log house, very large and very warm, such as we have in the country. My little brother was reading the Children's Letters in the Witness last night, and he liked them so well that he wrote one to New York to be printed in the Witness.

IDA COWARD.

PLEASANT HILL, MISS.

I commenced teaching on the 15th with forty-five scholars, and the number has since increased to eighty. I expect to have a hundred by Monday. I have a Sabbath School every Sunday, feeling that it will pay better than any other labor. What will a map of the world cost? If you can advise an easy way for teaching alphabet scholars their alphabet, it will be thankfully received.

P. M. MARTIN.

MORNING SUN, SHELBY CO., TENN.

My school has about fifty scholars. I am trying to keep up with my class in their lessons. Have worked through Division of Polynomials in Algebra and am going on. J. FIELDS.

CANADAVILLE, TENN.

The weather has been so disagreeable and cold that I could not commence school until yesterday. Not many have entered, as yet. The directors have decided to have school continue only two months. M. C. BROWN.

NOTE: (1) The Eureka school was closed Sept. 30th, 1876, and is not likely to be resumed. The school at Woodland was opened Aug. 1, 1877, and, it is hoped may become permanent and prosperous.

(2) A comparison with last year's statistics shows a greater concentration of labor, and a greater steadiness of attendance, which, while it has diminished some of our totals, has increased the efficiency and comfort of our schools. In fact, until the July riots, the attendance was larger than ever before: but there has been less roving, and fewer of those pupils who after being with us a few days were gone, we knew not whither; and it is this that makes the total number enrolled during the year less than heretofore.

(3) The last two columns contain the numbers given in the August reports. During that month—in consequence of the July riots—the schools were small. We repeat the remark made last year—that "the number whose confidence in idol-worship is shaken and almost overthrown, is doubtless much larger than that given. But it is the opinion of our most experienced teachers, that seldom, if ever, do our pupils cut themselves off from idolatry altogether, until they are truly converted to a better faith." The total number of our pupils, past and present, of whose conversion we have hope, cannot be less than 150. But many of these are now in China; or at distant points in California: or, for other reasons, are unable to attend the schools.

2. The total resources for the current expenses of the mission have been (in coin) $6,642.20. Of this amount $2,396.00 were contributed directly to the treasury of the Auxiliary. This is larger than the receipts of any preceding year (either before or since the organization of the Auxiliary) by about 40 per ct.

3. The Disbursements were as follows: Salaries, $1,597.50. Rents, $1,380. Incidentals, including expenditures for travelling, for lights and fuel, for printing annual report, circulars, song-cards, etc., for water-rates, repairs, postage, &c. $453.10. Total, $4,430.60. The increase over last year is mainly in the rent of our Central Mission House, and adds emphasis to the appeal then made for means to provide one which we may call our own.

4. An epoch in our history is marked, the past year, by our purchases of real estate, and by the erection of the Barnes Mission House. The first purchase,—which was almost a donation—was from Rev. T. M. Oviatt of San Leandro, and consisted of a lot in that village 50x100. It is worth $250, and cost us about $15. It was hoped that, before this, a small mission house would have been erected upon it; the funds for that purpose being furnished, in large part, by the Christian Chinese. But a variety of obstacles have combined to postpone this work for the present. The lot upon which our new Barnes Mission House has been erected is 30x100, and is worth—as adjacent lots are priced—fully $3,000. It cost us, including all incidental expenses of the purchase, $2,596.60. Upon the cost of the building $1,795.35 have been paid. There remain against it bills not yet presented, amounting to about $675. The debt upon this property will be about $4,000, but the income from it, is sufficient to pay interest, insurance, and taxes, and to leave us our fine school-room rent-free.

Central School.

The largest of our schools is the "Central," taught at our mission house in San Francisco. This house, which I am sorry to have to confess is hired and not owned by us, is admirably located for our purpose, not in the loathsome depths of Chinatown, but just on its edge, and overlooking the Plaza,—a green spot, about two hundred feet square, near to the heart of our city. If we may count a rather cellar-like basement as one story, our building is three stories high. In this basement the Congregational Association of Christian Chinese has its headquarters. The main room,—the reception room perhaps we may call it,—about sixteen by twenty, has its floor covered with matting, and its walls hung with divers mottoes and inscriptions, together with some Chinese pictures which are quite suggestive, I find, to those "to the manner born," though meaningless enough to Yankee eyes. In one corner of the room is a small book closet; in the centre a long table, one end of which is fitted up for a sort of pulpit, and the rest of which is loaded with Bibles and Testaments and tracts, some in English and some in Chinese. Around the table and along the walls are benches sufficient, by crowding, to accommodate a company of forty. This is the only place that seems at all like home to most of our Christian Chinese; a place to go to when other places fail; a place sanctified in the thought of many of them by precious memories,—associated as it is with their first open avowals of faith in Jesus Christ.

But it is not this we came to see. We will ascend a steep flight of steps and enter the school-room. It is just 7 o'clock, and but few of the scholars have arrived. We shall have time to look around a little. The room is about sixteen by fifty, some space, however, being surrendered to a staircase in the rear, which leads up to the third story where our helpers have their rooms. In the extreme rear is a low platform with an organ standing upon it, purchased by the contributions of our Chinese brethren. There is also a home-made song-roll with hymns in English and Chinese stencilled on cloth. But the pupils are assembling and the teachers are getting under the pressure of the evening's work. They will have no time to talk with us and point out to us the interesting features of their work. Instead of that, they will propose that we go to work and help them through. And we shall not be able to escape from this, unless we flee from the room. For wherever we sit or stand, some eager pupil will be putting his book over our shoulders and before our eyes, with his long slender finger on a word which we must pronounce for him and explain. Before 8 o'clock the room is packed. The rough benches are so arranged as to give the greatest possible number of sittings which the area of the floor will allow, and you would think that every seat was occupied. Yet if ten more should come in, ten seats would somehow be found for them. Our Chinese friends are used to narrow quarters, and when crowded to the utmost, will still crowd a little closer. A count will be made, by and by, and the teacher will tell you there were 136 or 142 or 145, or some such number, present. Some of them are grouped in classes, but the majority must be heard one by one. Attempts at classification are more successful now than they were two or three years ago, but there are many difficulties still, on account of the great differences in the rate at which the pupils advance, and the many obstacles to their regular attendance. But whether in classes or singly, it is in order for all to be reading at once, and all to be reading aloud. The noise to a critical ear, may make the room seem like a bedlam; but to an ear in sympathy with the work, it has a meaning which puts music into the hubbub and prevents any thought of being disturbed.

We could not run away, and so we went to work. Sitting down by the side of some pupil, we began to pronounce to him the simple words in the primer before him, surprised to find that sounds so easy to our vocal organs should come so hard to his. Our letter R, you find, is an untold trial to them. They strain for it almost ludicrously, but it comes out L, in spite of all their straining. A pupil has made good progress when "rose" ceases to be "lose" with him, or "rice" to be "lice." Our th is another trial; while harder yet than any matters of mere pronunciation, will be your efforts, by various sorts of pantomime, by the pictures in the book, or by substituting some other term in a language to your pupil quite unknown, to give him the meaning of the words he has been reading. Sometimes his bright look of recognition amply rewards your severest endeavor; but at other times you cannot but see that he is quite impatient of this part of your process. At home, he has been taught wholly by rote, identifying sounds that to him were meaningless, with characters quite as meaningless; and with this idea of the right way to learn, he wants to hasten on, pronouncing as many English words as possible in the little time in which he can have your aid.

Before you realize it, it is twenty minutes to nine. The teacher steps upon the platform, and a snap of the fingers or a tap of the bell hushes the noise at once. Instantly three or four or five hands go up high in the air. They are the hands of the pupils that have not yet been taught. Their lessons are attended to as quickly as possible, and then silence is called again. Cards, prepared for the pupils, and containing about twenty hymns on their two sides, are rapidly distributed, and, then, one is selected, read in concert, and sung. Then you, the visitor, if you please, will speak to them for three minutes about "the old, old story," with Fung Affoo to act as your interpreter. Then another hymn—one in Chinese, perhaps, from the song-roll—is sung. The air is familiar, and tells you at once the meaning of the song. Then a prayer in Chinese, in tones reverent and too subdued, you fear, to be heard by all. Then the Lord's Prayer in concert, and the school is closed. As the throng crowds out at the narrow door, and you review the evening's work, your heart burns within you, if it has in it any of the love of Christ. You bless God for this great opportunity, not only to enlighten those darkened souls themselves, but to send through them some scattered but not useless rays to the dark land from which they came.

Bethany School.

Mr. Pond writes:

This school is now in a very promising condition—at the very period of the year at which, heretofore, we have had a vacation of four or five months. The pupils have rented a small building, paying ten dollars per month for it, as a sort of common home. It is made so uncomfortable for them when they have their quarters with old heathen companions that they proposed this, themselves, and are taking great comfort in it. The income of most of them is very small, and ten dollars per month is an amount which they do not easily give. In the main room of their home they have a weekly prayer-meeting and other exercises of Bible-study, etc. But the school is still held in our chapel.

And latter,

We have had some special encouragement in the Bethany school. Not only is it much larger than ever before, but the spiritual interest is deeper, and the precious fruits appear. Two of its pupils were last month, for the first time, reported as Christians. On Sunday evening, April 1st, I was sitting in my study which adjoins the audience-room of our chapel, and as the Chinese Sunday-school was about to close its session, I overheard a Chinaman addressing the pupils very earnestly. I stepped into the room, expecting to see one of our Helpers there; but it proved to be one of the pupils, Ny Gay by name. He has been very persevering in his endeavors to learn English, but as I understood it, not inclined to be a Christian. He is, withal, naturally so bashful and slow of speech, that my surprise at finding him the speaker gave way to a still greater surprise at the freedom and force with which he spoke. It appeared that he was bearing testimony for a recently discovered Saviour. He had begun to live the new life, and he could not refrain from declaring it. I asked one of our pupils who understands English much better than Ny Gay, to write out for me, as well as he could, what Ny Gay had said. He apologized to me for the imperfection of his report. Of course it cannot reveal the earnestness, the real unction of the speaker. But I give it, and will not spoil it by correcting its phraseology: "Dear friends, I am very glad to see so many here to-night. I try to say a few words to you all here, how I become Christian. A few months ago I dislike to hear about Jesus, but after a while I read the Bible; the Bible said, 'Whosoever believeth in Jesus Christ shall not perish, but have everlasting life.' Now I know Jesus came from God; so, now I tell you, as soon as we know Him have power to save our soul, we must pray Him to help us do better. We cannot do good without Him. Now you see the teachers come to teach us Sabbath to Sabbath; they will come, rain or pleasant. Why they willing to teach us? Suppose one of you say, 'Teach us how to speak the English language'—not only that, but teach us the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Now that we know they are so good to us, we have nothing to repay, but the Lord Jesus Christ reward them in heaven for ever and ever." It seems that Ng Gay used to insist that as their nation was the oldest it must be the wisest, and their Scriptures the best in the world. Hong Sing, the brother to whom I am indebted for the above report, told him, "When we want to know whether a coin is silver or lead, we don't look at the date, but listen to the ring." It was during their week of prayer, at the Chinese New Year that Ng Gay began in that way to test the truth as it is in Jesus. He found that it had the right ring. I believe that he has now embraced it with his whole heart. I should be glad to tell of other cases, but I should trespass too largely on your space.

Barnes Mission School.

The new building for our "Barnes Mission School," is now rapidly advancing toward completion. We have been greatly favored, both in the purchase of our lot and in the contract for the house. It is quite safe to say that we should sell our property, when the building is completed, at too cheap a rate, if we were to receive $750 (gold coin) above all that it will have cost. But we have no idea of selling, whatever our profits might be, for we look for such faithfulness and such fruitfulness of missionary service in this house, as shall make it sacred and dear in our sight,—of value to us beyond that which any purchaser could possibly put upon it.

July 23rd the Barnes Mission House was dedicated. About one hundred and fifty Chinese were in attendance, but the empty seats on the side appropriated to our American friends surprised and grieved me. Facts were transpiring which explained this. We had, however, a pleasant meeting, the interest of which was greatly increased by the presence with us of Rev. W. L. Gage of Hartford, Conn., who, through Jee Gam as interpreter, spoke words of rare wisdom and fitness, to our Chinese friends.

It was not till the next morning that I learned that while we were thus quietly worshiping God, a crowd of people, three thousand strong, had gathered less than half a mile from us, and were listening to the incendiary harangues designed to repress sympathy with the railroad rioters of the Middle States, but full of profane execrations of the Chinese. Under the stimulus of these harangues, squads of from sixty to three hundred were moving off in one direction and another to find some Chinese wash-house that they could dare break up and rob, or some stray Chinaman whom they could knock down, maim and kill. For there is a method in the madness of our Anti-Chinese mobs, and discretion is a large part of their valor. These did not venture into our Chinese quarter where, it was understood, a fit reception was made ready for them; and I never knew a gang of hoodlums to attack a Chinese unless they had the advantage of five or more to one, and even then they generally steal upon their victims from behind.

It is a matter of wonder, and speaks to us of a guardian Providence, that of the one hundred and fifty Chinese who returned from that dedication in various directions to their homes, not one was injured. The routes they were led to take carried them out of sight of all the rioters. But on the following evening when we expected to open the school with one hundred pupils, its doors had to be closed, and even the little sign which we had put up was taken down under advice from the Police headquarters and by direction of our Trustees. If the doors had been opened, no scholar would have dared to come. The building was remarked upon as a doomed house, but the Lord watched over it, and during all the days of excitement, no mob passed that way. It is worth noting, however, that the lot on which our former building stood was just on the route taken by a large gang of destructives, and but for its having been removed, it would doubtless have been torn to pieces or burned.

It was easy in those days to realize that we knew not what an hour might bring forth. I myself had whatever "new sensation" a KuKlux letter might impart. It was signed "K. K. K." and its orthography and chirography kept good company with its spirit and design. It notified me to close the Chinese school taught in our (Bethany) Chapel, or suffer the consequences. What purported to be my portrait was chalked on the steps of the chapel, and the warning written under it, —"This Chinaman's church is going to be burned to-night." Some days after, on looking into one of the out-buildings of the chapel we found that it had actually been set on fire, How the flame came to be extinguished we do not know; and do not think it wise very diligently to inquire. It may be that the Lord touched the heart of the incendiary himself, and moved him to arrest the progress of his own mischief before it was too late; or it may be that the design was to see whether charred walls might not frighten us, since paper and chalk had failed.

The following letter from Rev. I. E. Dwinell, D. D., of Sacramento, though private and informal, cannot but interest our readers, and, considering the standing of its author, it is a testimony to the value of our work too important to be withheld:

Sacramento School.

SACRAMENTO, Nov. 30, 1876.

"Dear Bro. Pond:—I was last night in the Chinese school. After the usual closing exercises, I asked those to remain for religious conversation who would like to do so. Quite a number remained, and four, I think, are Christians. One is already a member of your church—Fong Get Loy. He has just returned from China, and wishes me to say to you that he was very sorry he could not call and see you and the school when he passed through San Francisco on his return from China. He wishes to send his regards to you and to request a letter to join this church. He appears well and is ready to help me in finding out how the other Chinamen feel. It is probable that some will join the church on the first Sabbath in January. Mrs. Denton is doing a good work, is earnest and faithful. Her pupils were interested. It was a pleasant sight to drop in upon them (some twenty-five) and find them all earnestly engaged in their studies, and showing great respect for her and the high themes on which she frequently speaks."

Petaluma School.

Miss Anthony of Petaluma writes:

The school seems to get along finely; the only trouble being irregular attendance. One evening nine strangers came in. All wanted books, and all made a good beginning. But in a day or two all were employed on farms at a distance, and they can be with us only at odd times. So it is with others. They love the school and try hard to attend, but cannot be regular. Several of them told me that they pray to God every day to help them, and say that they believe in the Saviour. Four seem to be very earnest. Two of them are merchants, and have closed their stores, or, at least, profess to do no business on Sundays.

Santa Barbara School.

Mrs. Stephenson, who took charge of the school at Santa Barbara about the middle of September, writes:

"Our prayer-meetings are very pleasant, and we begin to feel at home in them. Monday evening is appropriated for this service. Last evening Ah Quin read the Beatitudes in English and explained them in Chinese. Jem followed with 'God gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life.' Twenty-two were present. My own heart is greatly encouraged, and I am joyful in the work."

Stockton School.

The following from Mrs. Mary C. Brown of Stockton, will explain why the average attendance in some of our schools is so much less than the number of pupils enrolled:

"Twelve of my boys are working on the breakwater at Roberts' Island, and can come to the city only on one or two evenings of the week. Eight other boys are employed on the up-river steamers and can only come on one evening in the week. Two others are on the San Francisco steamer and can come only on the evenings in which that boat lies here in Stockton. I do not know but the seed thus sown may spread over the country, but it is not encouraging to the teacher. Still, I have a good school." If Mrs. Brown had been writing for publication, and not in the easy way of familiar correspondence, it may be that she would not have called those young men "my boys." But we print it as she wrote it. Those who know how to read it will see volumes of meaning in those two little words: and they will see nothing more than is really there.

San Leandro School.

Brother Oviatt of San Leandro writes me as follows:

"Accompanying my monthly report, I am glad to send you a word of good cheer. Last Sabbath (i. e., March 25th,) as probably Jee Gam has informed you, who helped us examine them, four of our class came forward, received baptism and were admitted to the church, making in all ten Chinese members of this church. They give the very best evidences of a change of heart and life, and have greatly endeared themselves to us all." A previous report says,—"During the week of prayer, the recitations were suspended, and in lieu thereof, the class and their Chinese friends gathered every night at my house for prayer. The meetings were always full and enthusiastic, the number in attendance, every evening except Wednesday, being larger than that of the whites at the church. Three of the pupils who have been with us for two years could at once be profitably used as Evangelists, if the way were open for their sustentation."

Letter from China.

By Jee Gam.

Our readers will recollect that this faithful servant of Christ went back to China some time since. On his recent return to America he addressed the following letter to Rev. Mr. Pond, giving some interesting details of his experiences on the voyages and at home:

"It is needless to tell you all the incidents that took place during my visit home, for they are too many and my time is short, therefore I shall tell you but a few of them. During my rough trip to China, there were two subscriptions taken among all the Chinese passengers on account of the storm. The first was for the offering to the spirits of the dead when we should reach Yokohama. The committee of this offering went from one passenger to another, soliciting subscriptions, and when they came to Jee Noy, Dang Hong and myself, they asked for the same. We told them we would not subscribe. 'Why?' said they. We replied to them we were Christians. So they left us. A week after this subscription, seeing that the storm still raged more furiously than ever, they were obliged to take another subscription for an offering to God the creator. The night before the latter subscription there were nearly a hundred of the leading pasengers who had met together in a large room, talking about how much they were going to collect from each passenger. When they were half through, one of them rose up and said there were three Chinese Christians on board who would not take any part in the offering. 'They ought to be reasoned with.' So he added, 'I will go and call them down before you.' He then came to me while I was telling that old, old story to the aged Chinese stewardess, and said, 'All the members of the meeting want you to come down and have an argument with them about Jesus.' I replied, 'All right; I will come down directly.' When he went away, I asked the Lord within my heart, and said, 'O Lord, thou art Almighty God; hear my prayer and make me a good instrument of thy hand, so that I may have the victory over those idol-worshippers.' And the Lord heard my prayer. I argued with them from 8 to 10 o'clock, and then Jee Noy came in and joined me; and from that time we argued till 1 o'clock the next morning.

"I visited the different missions in Canton and Hong Kong. In the latter I saw three families that came from the district of Bok Lo, about a hundred and twenty miles distant from Hong Kong. They came there simply to learn more about Jesus and to be baptized. Now, before I close, let me give you a little sketch of what was done in China during the visit of one of our young men, Folk Yuen, by name. He went home two years ago and told his father about the Lord Jesus who died for all men. His father believed this with his whole heart. He was baptized by a minister who had a chapel about twenty miles from his village. To this chapel this old gentleman, nearly seventy years of age, goes once a month on foot; and twenty miles is considered a great distance for such an old man as he."

Christian Association.

Two or three days before the New Year came, we made great preparation in fixing up the "Chinese Young Men's Christian Association" room for the reception of our friends during the holidays. We sent word to all our Christian brethren who were in the country or in other cities in the State to come and spend at least one or two days with us, that by so doing we all might get acquainted with one another.

On New Year's eve we gathered together to watch the old year out and welcome the new year. The hour between 11 and 12 o'clock we spent in thanking God for the kindness and care which had carried us through the year, that death had not visited our members, and that so many more had been added to our Association. From 12 o'clock to half past 1 A. M., we prayed God to give us strength and wisdom this year to do the work which He should call us to do. We did not ask God to help each member to bring two heathen into our Association as we did the year before, but we asked him to help each of us to bring as many as possible. While we were doing these things here, Jee Gam with the Christian brethren in Oakland was doing the same, but they asked God to help each member to bring five of his countrymen to Christ. We retired to bed about half past 2 o'clock A. M, to get rest, that we might have strength to sing and preach on that day. About 6 o'clock our friends and pupils commenced coming to give us New Year's calls; though it was raining still they came; and about noon many of our Christian brethren from the country arrived. We commenced singing and preaching at one o'clock P. M., and though there is a Chinese "Joss" house just four or five doors from our Mission, many of our countrymen left it and came over to hear our preaching of Jesus. Our Association room was filled to its utmost capacity, and many stood out of doors to listen. Seeing so many come made us very happy, and gave us encouragement to preach to them. We got through preaching at half past 4 o'clock. About forty members took dinner here, others were invited to dine by their relatives and friends. In the evening when you came to preach, there were about fifty persons present; all of us enjoyed the preaching very much.

When you left us, we called the meeting to order to form an "Aid Society," which project I mentioned to you some time ago, but at that time many of our members could not attend to it, so put it off until New Year. This Society is to take care of any member who has no means to take care of himself in time of sickness. Each member has to subscribe $1.50 annually. This money cannot be used for any other purpose than the one that is mentioned above.

There is one thing that I want to speak of, that on the Chinese New Year's day a young man spent a whole day with us in our Association room; he took part in singing, and helped us receive visitors. I thought him a member of our Association at that time, because he has been coming to our school for some time, but he was not a member, and I did not know it until a few days after when he came to me and told me that he wanted to be a Christian and become a member of our Association. I asked him many questions and told him all our regulations, and he said he knew a great deal about the doings of the Association, that he had heard much of the doctrine of Christ ever since he had been coming to our school, and that he had given up worshipping idols some time before, but was ashamed to ask to become one of our members; but he felt ashamed no longer, and wanted to be a Christian. So I presented his name to the Association, and a week after he was examined and admitted to membership. We hope that there will be many like him during the year which we have just entered.

We spent the whole New Year's week as a week of prayer, holding our meetings every evening, and we feel that the time thus spent has given us new interest in our work, and increased strength to perform it.

Yours truly, FUNG AFFOO.

THE INDIANS.

RED LAKE AGENCY, MINNESOTA.

R. M. Pratt, Agent.
Rev. Francis Spees and Wife, Missionaries.
Miss M. C. Warren, Teacher.

The Reservation is about 95 miles wide, by 115 long. The population at last enrolment was 1,191 besides about 18 whites belonging to the families of the employès. The missionary work continued under the charge of Rev. Francis Spees until January, when the little church was transferred to the Prot. Epis. Board and two young Indian clergymen were assigned to this field. We are happy to be able to report a good degree of progress in the educational work at this Agency, a boardiug school, which was very much needed, having been established and kept in operation for six months.

We make the following extracts from the report of Agent Pratt:

This Reservation contains about 3,200,000 acres, of which 1,000,000 are tillable, the remaining portion being grazing, wooded and worthless. The timber is pine, with considerable bodies of hard wood. From this hard wood the Indians obtain their sugar. The soil, likewise, is of superior quality, wherever the hard wood grows. The crops which were reported one year ago were of decided utility not only here but at other points, especially at White Earth, where owing to loss of crop, our hardy and really excellent quality of corn was of the greatest benefit, both for food and for seed. A failure of crops was never known here.

The crops raised by Indians are about as follows: Corn, owing to an extremely unfavorable season, only 5,000 bushels, wheat 175 bushels, potatoes 2,500 bushels, other vegetables 450 bushels, hay 250 tons, maple sugar 40,000 lbs., berries 300 bushels. They have caught 650 barrels of fish, $6,600 worth of furs, and woven 750 yds. of rush matting.

Education—Owing to the assistance rendered by the Indian Department, I was enabled to keep in operation for six months in the last year a Boarding School, at least in part. Some ten girls were taken into the boarding house, where they were quickly changed from dirty, ragged little savages, uncouth, wild and verminous, to clean, neatly clad young misses, attending diligently to their studies, and neatly doing housework and knitting or sewing. The change was indeed wonderful. Unable as yet to board and keep the boys, they were given a dinner each day they attended school. I deem myself fortunate in having secured the services of Miss Mary C. Warren as teacher. She has had several years experience in such schools, and is master of both languages, which gives her very decided advantages for the position she fills. The results have been very gratifying, and when the new boarding house is opened, of which more particular mention will be made under the head of "Progress," all the signs indicate a full and successful school.

Morality—While the Indians are far from perfection, are addicted to polygamy, licentiousness, gambling, loafing and some pilfering, yet they are superior to many white settlements in this, there is no burglary, highway robbery, murder, riots or strikes. They are more peaceable, having very little quarreling, very kind to the sick and fond of their children.

Missionary Work—This consists of a combined Chippewa and English service and Sabbath-school, besides one or more evening services during the week, also a general visitation and instruction in religious matters at their homes. Thirteen Indians have been baptized and eight confirmed, and others are expecting to receive baptism soon.

Progress—Among evidences of progress here, may be mentioned the increasing willingness on the part of the Chiefs, braves and others, to engage in manual labor, which is traditionally degrading to a man. Nearly all seem anxious to get employment, and will work well for prompt pay, but living "from hand to mouth" they dare not do much for themselves in the way of clearing up and cultivating new land, and wait for their wages until a crop is raised. This is one of the most serious obstacles to rapid progress. About three-fourths of them wear citizens' dress, and all would if they had the means. They desire stock and are getting a moderate amount. They now have about 150 ponies, 22 swine, 20 head of cattle. They have cleared up considerable land, about 50 acres of new land having been broken for them by Government teams this season.

During the winter the miller with his help cut and skidded over 100,000 feet of logs, near our former lumber camp, when, owing to a total lack of snow suitable for moving logs, he went some ten miles up Mud Creek and cut 150,000 feet of logs, expecting to drive them down to the lake as soon as the ice left, but owing to lack of snow there was a resultant lack of water, and it was not till the heavy rains in May and June that the logs could be driven to the lake and boomed at our dock. Even then a furious storm broke the boom and scattered the logs.

I am happy to report the completion of a boarding house to accommodate our pupils. It is 28x38 feet, two stories high, the upper floor a dormitory for the boys, a wing 24x32 feet one story high, with a good drying room for clothes on upper floor, and a good cellar. The house is well plastered and has one coat of paint. It can accommodate 20 pupils—ten of each sex—and 30 if deemed advisable. In this school, the boys will be taught not only how to read, write and cipher, but also to labor at different kinds of farm and shop work; the girls will be taught culinary and household work in addition to their books. In this way we shall make a grand beginning in civilizing and raising to the plane of self-support this interesting people. I apprehend that this is one of the most progressive and important achievements gained since the treaty was made.

A neat, small, frame house has been nearly completed for the farmer, and a similar one for the carpenter. Several houses are in process of building by the Indians. The mill is now in active operation, cutting out lumber for the Indians.

LAKE SUPERIOR AGENCY, WISCONSIN.

Dr. I. L. Mahan, Agent.
Robert Pew, Teacher.

This Agency embraces seven Reserves: Red Cliff, Bad River, La Courte D'Oreille, Lac Du Flambeau, Fon Du Lac, Grand Portage and Bois Forte, extending over an area of 838 square miles, and including 526,756 acres. The Indians number 4,630, and their total individual wealth is estimated at $41,500. Four day schools and two night schools have been maintained, the most important being the Odanah Mission School of the Presbyterian denomination. The reports from this Agency are so full and so good that we find it difficult to select the little for which we have space. We will give first an extract from the Agent's report, and follow with clippings from the reports of the farmers or teachers at the different reserves.

From I. L. Mahan, Agent.

The prospects are very favorable for the best crops the Chippewas have ever had. Never before in the history of these Indians have they made such a general effort to plant all the seed furnished and never have they come so near succeeding. Eight hundred bushels of oats, eight hundred and seventy bushels of corn, two thousand six hundred and seventy-five bushels of turnips, five hundred tons of hay, eighty bushels of peas, and over two thousand bushels of potatoes, besides smaller produce in large quantities, it is estimated, will be harvested. When told, last fall, that the Indians were to receive the goods and supplies in payment for labor performed on their 80s, they saw in this the answer to their petitions that the Government would assist them to clear off and open up farms in this wilderness, and they went to work with more real enthusiasm than I ever witnessed before, each striving to outdo his neighbor, and all to have the very best crops that hard work and good seed would produce upon not over excellent soil, and their highest hopes have been realized.

The schools number seven, five day and two night schools. The one at Vermillion Lake is now suspended for want of a house and a good teacher. By far the most important of these schools is the Manual Labor Boarding School at Odanah. On the 1st of July, 1876, I inaugurated, at Red Cliff, a system of lunches for the children attending school. This lunch was very plain, bread and butter being all that was allowed. The school was doubled in a few days. The lunches were continued during the year with entire satisfaction. Mr. Baird, of Odanah, made a similar trial of his day school with the same grand result. He issued to each child who had been in attendance all day a little sack containing about a quart of Indian meal. I recommend this plan to the study of those seeking the best mode for securing daily attendance. We have had an attendance upon our schools of two hundred and two children.

By far the greatest need of this Agency is civil law. Indians must be made to feel that there is a power in the Government, and that so sure as they tear down and burn up their neighbors' fences, just so sure will they be punished. Give us civil law and power to execute it.

As soon as you directed me to commence work on the 80s, every Indian on the reserve was up and ready to bring war upon the tall pines and massive oaks. They seemed as eager to work, and more so, than most white men. I took each Indian who owned an 80s, and with two men to help him, set him to work clearing, grubbing, &c. preparatory to planting. Each one had from twenty-four to thirty days to prepare his ground for the seeds, and I am proud to say they did almost as much work in that time as white men could have done. We were considerably detained for want of facilities to get the heavy timber of the clearings. We have only one yoke of oxen, and they were worked so hard that before we had half completed our work they had nearly given out. Our horse team is a very poor excuse for one, yet they have plowed about sixty acres of ground besides hauling rails for timber and fences. We have built during the past year between five and six miles of fencing, good, strong and substantial, that will last for years, unless the Indians burn it down during the coming winter, which I have positively forbidden them to do. Each Indian on the reservation has a vegetable garden of from a quarter to a half acre; everything came up nicely and bade fair for a fine crop, until one bright morning we arose to find the horror of horrors doing the work of destruction. The potato bug had arrived, and with him the cut worm and a small bit of a bug a little larger than a flea that eats a small hole in the stem of a plant, and kills it at once. The liberal offer you made for potato bugs has gotten all the women and children to work, and you can see them up with the sun with a quart can in the potato field hunting for bugs. I have burned nearly five bushels of the pests.

There has been a decided improvement in the mode of living in the past year. All look clean and tidy, and the prospects are fair for a civilized people in a short time.

And the following from the Farmer at Bad River has not one note of discord.

I think the civilized Indians have never been so prosperous as at present. They have planted large crops of potatoes, corn and garden vegetables, and they have had constant employment in the logging camps the past winter. A number have sold the pine timber on their allotments, and in nearly every sale consulted me in regard to the price, and I think they have all had the full value of the pine sold. Some have squandered it, but most of them have bought horses and cattle, and some have used the proceeds to improve their farms.

Mr. Robert Pew, the teacher at Red Cliff, writes:

The number of children of school age residing on the Reserve is fifty-eight. Of these, I have on my school roll forty-seven, and nearly all have attended regularly since I commenced giving them a lunch at dinner time, unless they were needed at home to work, or were obliged to leave for the hunting ground or fishing camp. It is a heavy tax on my time to prepare the lunch, and a qualification in teaching which I have had to learn, for they did not give instruction in bread-making at the normal school in which I was trained. The number in attendance this year one month or more is thirty-six. Nine have attended nearly seven months. The Chief's adopted daughter has attended seven and a-half months. The largest attendance during any one month is thirty-eight. The school has been in operation nine months, the scholars are doing nobly and the parents manifest a lively interest in the school. Chief Buffalo, who is the foremost in school matters, expressed his happiness in meeting the Commissioner and his good lady at the school, and hopes he will repeat the visit next year, so that he can see for himself the advance we are making in civilization.

GREEN BAY AGENCY, WISCONSIN.

Jos. C. Bridgman, Agent.
W. W. Wheeler, Farmer and Teacher.
Mrs. W. W. Wheeler, Matron.
Miss S. B. Dresser, Teacher.

This Agency includes three tribes, the Stockbridge, Oneida and Menomonee, with headquarters at Keshena, Wis. It extends over an area of 482 sq. miles, and embraces 308,740 acres, and the Indians number 3,030. A special interest connects with this Agency in the establishment during the year of a Boarding school among the Menomonees, for which an appropriation of $5,000 has been made by the Government.

The Agent writes:

The Stockbridge Tribe, as a rule, are a law-abiding, religiously inclined people, and their condition similar to that of an equal number of whites in any community. Rev. J. Slingerland, the pastor, is faithful and earnest in his attempts to promote temperance, and advance the cause of Christianity. The school has been carried on only six months and the attendance has not been as large as it should be. There is much to contend with, because of the indifference of parents to the higher interests of their children, and progress is necessarily slow.

The Oneidas sustain two schools; one under the care of the Episcopal, and the other of the Methodist society, as hitherto. These have been but fairly attended, owing, as the parents claim, to their extreme poverty. The teacher of the former reports one hundred and ten children in attendance, with an average of forty-six, while the teacher of the latter reports an average attendance of twenty-six. Rev. S. W. Ford, pastor and teacher of the Methodist society, has done a good work in holding an evening school for adults. We regret that we cannot speak more hopefully of the condition of this tribe, and although we notice from year to year a decided change for the better with a few, who are rapidly approaching the time when they may justly ask for the rights of citizenship, the masses seem content with their indolent life. They, like the Stockbridges, will petition the next Congress for citizenship, but unlike the latter, as a tribe they are not ready for so radical a change.

The Menomonees, about equally divided between Pagans and Catholic, have no religious teaching save that of the Priest. An attempt was made by the Priest to prevent the children from attending the school, excommunicating the parents of those enrolled. As the school must necessarily be unsectarian this interference was promptly rebuked, and he was assured that unless he confined himself to his legitimate work, he would not be allowed to remain on the Reservation.

The Boarding-school, started this year, was sustained for nine months with W. W. Wheeler, teacher, Mrs. Wheeler, matron, and Miss S. B. Dresser, assistant teacher. The experiment has proved a decided success. Commencing with two boarders, who have continued through the year, it increased till one hundred and one names were enrolled with an average attendance of sixty. The tribe are specially pleased with the school, and enter heartily into the erection of a new day and boarding school building, for which an appropriation of $5,000 has been made by Government. This we hope will be ready for use the coming winter.

There have been, the last year, two additions to the number of employès stationed here, Miss Dresser, as above stated, and Dr. Samuel J. Marshall from Ohio, who has been secured as physician. He and his wife prove a valuable addition to the little circle of Christians here.

There has been less drunkenness than usual, and a decided improvement in the homes of this people. Although the religious privileges are less than those of the other two tribes of this Agency, their condition really seems more hopeful. They are docile, tractable, and, although indolent by nature, are ever ready to work when opportunity is offered, that thus they may obtain an honest living. The three tribes have been specially favored, the past year, in the general good health which has prevailed, and crops with the exception of potatoes have been good.

My experience for three years among a people that for so long a time have been considered as unsusceptible to good influences, increases my faith in the Christian policy of our Government, and it is my belief that if it is heartily and sincerely sustained by the people, the next decade will witness a decided step in their advance in civilization.

SISSETON AGENCY, DAKOTA.

J. G. Hamilton and E. H. C. Hooper, Agents.

A change of Agents has occurred during the year; Mr. Hamilton resigning and Mr. Hooper only recently taking his place.

The following is from the present Agent, Mr. E. H. C. Hooper.

Having entered upon the duties of Agent here as late as the 3d of September—less than three months ago—my report will necessarily be confined to operations and observations during this period.

On my arrival here, I found the Indians had come in from the distant portions of the reservation, and were quietly and patiently awaiting the September issue. From conversation with them I learned that they deferred preparing the ground according to their custom, until spring, but I found no difficulty in persuading them to go to work at once, and the result has been that three times as much ground has been prepared as ever before at this season of the year.

The wheat crop the present season will be only about 6,000 bushels—over half as much as is required for home consumption—only two-thirds as much as the lowest estimate made by our farmer in September. This amount would have been doubled had it not been for the destruction caused by the grasshoppers—though this season they destroyed much less than during the three past years.

There are quite a number of cases where the Indians have threshed upwards of 250 bushels each—and many from 75 to 125 bushels—while a number of 25 acre lots were not cultivated this year for want of seed. Considerable corn, and some barley and oats, together with garden vegetables, were also raised. And in a short time, with an average season for crops, they ought to be able to support themselves without any Government aid, and can be made to do this if proper instruction and encouragement is given.

CHURCHES.

There are five churches on the reservation where preaching is maintained and Sunday-school services held regularly every Sabbath, and a school-house on the northern portion of the reservation where the same services are held on alternate Sabbaths. In addition to these places, a sermon is read every Sunday P. M. at the room of the "Manual Labor School." The children from this school attend the morning service at "Good Will Mission Church" in company with their teacher, and constitute a majority of the scholars at this Sunday school. All of these places are as well filled with attentive listeners as the average of churches in the white settlements. And I take great pleasure in stating that, so far as my observation extends, the Sabbath day as one of rest from all secular employments or amusements, is strictly observed by the Indians here.

SCHOOLS.

The Boarding school appears to be increasing in numbers and will soon be filled. Assurances have been given me by the Chief that he would insure 20 to 25 scholars for another day school in a house originally built for this purpose, if a teacher could be provided, (this would not interfere in any manner with the boarding school or be detrimental to its success). I have made a request of the Department for funds necessary for this purpose. I am satisfied that the importance of educating their children is being appreciated by the Indians, and they are more willing to have them taught the English language than heretofore, and if the necessary funds for the payment of teachers can be provided, if for only six months in the year, I think the vacant school-houses on the reservation might be well filled, except, perhaps, during the planting and harvesting season.

S'KOKOMISH AGENCY, WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Edwin Eells, Agent.
Rev. Myron Eells, Missionary.

This Agency extends over an area of 8 square miles, containing 4,987 acres, and the Indians number 825.

The Agent writes as follows:

The past year with us has been fraught with the usual vicissitudes of life on an Indian Reservation. Previous to the settlement of the Presidential election it was up-hill work. So much uncertainty existed in the minds of both employés and Indians that there was no enthusiastic interest in anything. With the Indian, a person is entitled to respect and obedience in proportion to his apparent power. As the Agent's tenure of office seems uncertain, just in that proportion is he considered of little consequence. It is the same with all about him, and his and their moral and religious influence wane in the same ratio. Upon the final adjustment of this question, a new impetus was given to all departments of improvement, and, during the spring and summer, work has been encouraging and pleasant.

The school has been somewhat crippled by the long delay in appropriations and the reduction of $300; still the attendance has nearly equalled that of last year, with certainly as much progress in studies. Religious interest has been awakened, especially among the children, in an unusual degree. A weekly youths' prayer-meeting has been observed, maintained chiefly by the boys, eight of whom take part in leading and carrying it on. At Dunginess the Indians during the spring and summer maintained regular Sabbath services among themselves, and are doing exceedingly well both morally and industriously.

The greatest need of those on the Reservation at present is a good individual title to their lands. Great labor is required in clearing land and rendering it available for agricultural use. It costs not less than $50 an acre to clear and subdue the land. For the Indians to do this willingly, when they have no security that they will not ultimately be driven away and lose their labor, is more than white men would do. Any influence that can be brought to bear to induce Government to pass suitable laws for their protection in this respect, would be effectual labor for their benefit. Soon the treaty will expire. If by that time the Indians have no individual ownership in their lands, they will many of them leave the Reservation and lose the good of the past six years of toil and labor. Their present condition is hopeful, but in such soil the roots do not run deep, and it needs the protection of good surroundings and influences to prevent the storms of Satan's vengeance from uprooting all the good.

The following incidents in connection with the church at S'Kokomish are furnished us by our missionary there, Rev. Myron Eells.

A young man, twenty-two years old, a full-blooded Indian, but brought up by a white step-father, and whose home was thirty miles away, had been in our school less than three months. Before he came here in January last, he had never been in school or in a church in his life. He had saved his money that he might attend school. He was very studious, persevering and attentive to religious teachings, and I frequently held conversations with him on religious subjects. The day after one of our church meetings, he was found quite desirous of uniting with the church. He had felt like saying so at the meeting, but it being the first of the kind he had ever attended, he did not have the courage to do so. It seemed best that he should not wait longer as he was soon to leave school not to return till the next winter, so another church meeting was held, which voted to receive him. His own was the first baptism he had ever witnessed, and that was the first communion at which he had ever been present.

In my last, I spoke of some smaller school-boys who had become interested in religion. At first, there were only three boys who came to my house, and they hardly dared to pray where any one could hear them. They talked privately with the other boys, and one or two more came to the meetings, but still they were almost afraid to pray for fear of the sport that might be made of them. But they grew more courageous and asked to go to the church so that all the children, both boys and girls, might attend, as they wished to pray with them and show them that they were not ashamed to be known as Christians. What began with three, has grown to be a prayer-meeting of twenty, with a dozen often taking part in prayer. They sometimes open the Sabbath-school with prayer, or lead a children's prayer-meeting, and, lately, they have taken a new step. They wish the older Indians to become Christians, and write letters to them to induce them. The desire of one boy for the conversion of his father, who is now a medicine man, is very noticeable, not only himself writing to him, but asking the other boys to do so. If these boys continue in the way they have begun, I know no reason why they should not be admitted to the church before long.

During my recent visit to Dunginess, I found evident progress there. Two or three of the Indians are on probation in my mind for church membership, their head chief being one of them. They intend before winter to build a church, and it will be done chiefly by their own contributions.

MENDI MISSION, WEST AFRICA.

There are three stations. GOOD HOPE MISSION in Bonthe on the Island of Sherbro Missionaries—Rev. J. K. Billheimer and Rev. Barnabas Root.* Teachers—Elias Tucker and Mrs. During; Buel Tucker, printer; Mr. Jewett, assistant translator for the Mendi language. Buildings—Mission-house, church, school-house.

DEBIA, an out-station from Good Hope, has a school-house and a house for the native teacher, Samuel Goodman, who has been educated in the Mission of Good Hope.

AVERY STATION. Mahno on the Bargroo River. Workers—Mr. James Kirk, Mrs. M. M. Mair and Mrs. Thomas. Buildings—Mission house, church, where school is held, mill, store, shed for lumber and produce, fifteen houses built of slabs for laborers, four boats, one the "Olive Branch," for missionaries when travelling, one small boat and two boats for cargo, and coffee farm.

It will be remembered that in the last Annual Report, the re-inforcement of the African Mission was referred to as in contemplation, and the plan by which it was to be undertaken was set forth. But who should be the man or men to go? This was the pressing question—a leader was wanted of peculiar fitness in his physical, mental and religious make up for the work; one who could endure the climate, who had acquired a sufficient experience in planning and executing Christian work, and who was possessed of the true missionary spirit; he might be a white man, if endowed in a marked degree with all these characteristics, but for this place and work, a man of Negro blood was to be preferred, as especially adapted by nature to both the climate and the people. Others were needed to go with him to fill important places in the work; these to be from among the graduates of some of our Southern institutions.

After patient looking, the men were found—the right men, we believe, and that the Lord has led us in the search. Two months ago we called attention to the fact that they had been discovered, and enlisted for the distant service. Since that time they have spent several weeks together in New York, preparing their outfit, studying the history and condition of the Mendi Mission, and receiving advice and instruction for their important work.

*Deceased.

The return of Mr. Billheimer after some years of service, and the death of Barnabas Root in the beginning of his anticipated usefulness, made the call from that distant land more imperative than ever. We are glad to say to the friends of our work and of Africa, that the three men chosen by us, chosen of God also, we trust, for this work, are on the ocean sailing thitherward, to take the places waiting for them there. God speed the barque Jasper!

The Rev. Floyd Snelson is the leader, the preacher and the general manager of this new missionary force. The beginnings of his education were at our Institution in Andersonville, and his studies were completed at Atlanta University. He was one of the most wise, earnest and successful of our colored pastors in the South. It was very hard for the people of the old Midway church, in Georgia, to give him up, and their earnest and repeated pleas that he might not be taken from them, it was hard to deny. But, weighing the matter well, he thought he heard the Master's voice callling him to this more self-denying work. His wife and three children go with him. Benjamin James, M. D., is a graduate of Lincoln University, and of the Medical Department of Howard University. He will be physician and teacher, and is accompanied by his wife and two children. A. E. White, who has just completed his course of Normal and Agricultural training at Hampton, Va., will be the farmer of the Mission, and assist in teaching. These men were all born slaves on Southern plantations. Educated in our institutions, they are the first contribution of the emancipated race going under our auspices, to the evangelization of the land of their fathers.

So significant an event as the setting forth for Africa of the first colored missionaries born and educated in this land, was an event worthy a special recognition. A farewell meeting, and a service for the consecration of these missionaries to their work, was held on the evening before their departure, Sunday, Sept. 23d, in the Central Congregational church, of Brooklyn. The missionaries with their families were seated in front of the platform. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Henry M. Scudder, D. D., pastor of the church, himself once a missionary, and of a family which had in three successive generations been eminent in that service. The discourse was replete with interest and information, tracing the progress of African exploration from Mungo Park to Livingstone and Stanley, and describing the productions and the people of the country. The preacher spoke of domestic slavery which still exists there despite the efforts of the English Government, and commended the work of the American Missionary Association in educating the children of those who had been brought across the sea in slave-ships, and sending them back to bring to a knowledge of God the heathen tribes inhabiting the land of their forefathers. He wished them God-speed, and prayed that the grace of God might be with them in their work, and that He would grant them health, strength and long life, and make them instrumental in bringing many to a knowledge of the truth.

The missionaries rising received an appropriate charge from Secretary Strieby. A prudent care of health was enjoined, both for the success of their personal work, and as an encouragement to others, who, it was hoped, would in time follow them in larger bands. They were charged to be careful in extending their missionary work, bearing in mind that an army is not always successful by hard fighting alone, but that there must be, also, good generalship. They were advised to act with caution in moving into the interior of the country. Under all circumstances they were to bear in mind that they went forth as the ambassadors of Christ, to preach his gospel, and that if they should do his work faithfully, at the last He would give them the crown of everlasting life.

The prayer of consecration was offered by District Secretary Pike. We bespeak the continuous prayers of the friends of the African race for these our messengers, that they may be enabled to fulfill all our expectation, and by long and faithful service to glorify God in the enlightenment and salvation of their fellow-countrymen.

On Monday, the 24th, they sailed in good health and good heart for the North-west coast of Africa.

Constitution of the American Missionary Association.

Incorporated January 30, 1849.

ART. I. This Society shall be called "THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION."

ART. II. The object of this Association shall be to conduct Christian missionary and educational operations, and diffuse a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures in our own and other countries which are destitute of them, or which present open and urgent fields of effort.

ART. III. Any person of evangelical sentiments,* who professes faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, who is not a slaveholder, or in the practice of other immoralities, and who contributes to the funds, may become a member of the Society; and by the payment of thirty dollars, a life member; provided, that children and others who have not professed their faith, may be constituted life members without the privilege of voting.

ART. IV. This Society shall meet annually, in the month of September, October or November, for the election of officers and the transaction of other business, at such time and place as shall be designated by the Executive Committee.

ART. V. The annual meeting shall be constituted of the regular officers and members of the Society at the time of such meeting, and of delegates from churches, local missionary societies, and other coöperating bodies—each body being entitled to one representative.

ART. VI. The officers of the Society shall be a President, Vice Presidents, a Recording Secretary, Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, two Auditors, and an Executive Committee of not less than twelve, of which the Corresponding Secretaries shall be advisory, and the Treasurer ex-officio, members.

ART. VII. To the Executive Committee shall belong the collecting and disbursing of funds; the appointing, counseling, sustaining, and dismissing (for just and sufficient reasons) missionaries and agents; the selection of missionary fields; and, in general, the transaction of all such business as usually appertains to the executive committees of missionary and other benevolent societies; the Committee to exercise no ecclesiastical jurisdiction over the missionaries; and its doings to be subject always to the revision of the annual meeting, which shall, by a reference mutually chosen, always entertain the complaints of any aggrieved agent or missionary; and the decision of such reference shall be final.

The Executive Committee shall have authority to fill all vacancies occurring among the officers between the regular annual meetings; to apply, if they see fit, to any State Legislature for acts of incorporation; to fix the compensation, where any is given, of all officers, agents, missionaries, or others in the employment of the Society; to make provision, if any, for disabled missionaries, and for the widows and children of such as are deceased; and to call, in all parts of the country, at their discretion, special and general conventions of the friends of missions, with a view to the diffusion of the missionary spirit, and the general and vigorous promotion of the missionary work.

Five members of the Committee shall constitute a quorum for transacting business.

ART. VIII. This Society, in collecting funds, in appointing officers, agents, and missionaries, and in selecting fields of labor, and conducting the missionary work, will endeavor particularly to discountenance slavery, by refusing to receive the known fruits of unrequited labor, or to welcome to its employment those who hold their fellow-beings as slaves.

ART. IX. Missionary bodies, churches, or individuals, agreeing to the principles of this Society, and wishing to appoint and sustain missionaries of their own, shall be entitled to do so through the agency of the Executive Committee, on terms mutually agreed upon.

ART. X. No amendment shall be made in this Constitution without the concurrence of two thirds of the members present at a regular annual meeting; nor unless the proposed amendment has been submitted to a previous meeting, or to the Executive Committee in season to be published by them (as it shall be their duty to do, if so submitted,) in the regular official notifications of the meeting.

* By evangelical sentiments we understand, among others, a belief in the guilty and lost condition of all men without a Saviour; the supreme Deity, Incarnation, and atoning sacrifice of Jesus Christ, the only Saviour of the world; the necessity of regeneration by the Holy Spirit, repentance, faith and holy obedience, in order to salvation; the immortality of the soul; and the retributions of the judgment in the eternal punishment of the wicked, and salvation of the righteous.

Hon. Amos C. Barstow, of Providence, R.I., read the report of the Committee on the Indians as follows:

The Committee to whom was referred so much of the Annual Report as relates to the work of the Association among the Indians, are glad to be able to approve the action of the Executive Committee for the past year, both with respect to its missions and its agencies. They beg also to endorse and emphasize the sentiment—twice repeated in the Report—that "the unsettled condition of the Indians, growing out of their frequent and enforced removal, sometimes for long distances, and at short notice, continues to rob the efforts put forth in their behalf of much of their rightful success."

Like the dove sent out from the Ark, the Indian has found no rest for the sole of his foot. Of the 275,000 Indians, in what is now our country, fifty years ago, 130,000 were east of the Mississippi River, where now but 25,000 remain.

At first we were content to crowd them beyond the Mississippi, but our example at the East has proved contagious among the settlers of the new States west of the Mississippi, and now all these States, by their influence over the General Government, are emptying their Indians into the Territories. The Pawnees and Poncas, and the great bands of Sioux Indians, under those famous chiefs Red Cloud and Spotted Tail—in all 15,000—have been pushed out of Nebraska within two years. The great States of Iowa and Kansas have but 1,000 each remaining in their borders, and Missouri has none. At the present moment, Colorado is making an effort to push the 3,200 Ute Indians, who have always lived upon her soil, either beyond her borders or up into the mountains, 7,000 feet above the sea level, and far above the possibility of self-support.

The Stockbridge Indians, whose original home was amid the beautiful valleys of old Berkshire, in Massachusetts, and who, while there—130 years ago—enjoyed the stated ministry of David Brainard, and afterwards of Jonathan Edwards, were moved west as far as the State of New York, ninety years ago. Since then they have been moved five times, and now a remnant of the tribe occupy a little reservation in Northern Wisconsin. Why should they have been exposed to such perils as haunt a people, thus violently and repeatedly torn up by the roots, and compelled to make new homes far distant from the graves of their sires? Or, rather, civilized and Christianized as they are and were, why should they not long ago have come to individual homestead rights of portions of their land in fee, with citizenship, as do multitudes of foreigners, of far less education? Instead of girding the Indians about with bands of love, and holding them to their ancient homes, where they could be easily reached by Gospel influences, the nation has taken it for granted that the "wilderness and solitary place" was the only fit home for them; and therefore, in the expressive language of Red Cloud, has "kept them on wheels." We have been crowding them before the ever-increasing column of our Western emigration, and even now, the hand of the nation does not spare, neither does its heart relent. The Santee and other bands of Indians, fully civilized, are now petitioners for the right to take up homesteads that shall cover the present allotments already cultivated and improved by them. Their petition is endorsed by the Indian Bureau and Interior Department, and though urged upon Congress last winter, by all the added influence of the Board of Indian Commissioners, nothing was done. Congress has always shown more willingness to feed the Indians than to locate them. To secure progress in civilization, we must locate them—give them permanent homes, with all the motives for industry which they will inspire. To herd and feed them from the public crib permanently, like cattle, is to degrade and pauperize them, rather than to civilize and bring them to self-support.

There is a feeling quite too common in the community, that Indians, after all, are only outlaws, Ishmaelites, savages, "having no rights which white men are bound to respect," and no elements of character which encourage efforts for their improvement.

A popular encyclopædia affirms that, "as a race, the animal propensities in the Indian strongly preponderate over the intellectual, and render their civilization, even with the help of education and Christianity, an event hardly to be hoped for." Neither the experience of Christian philanthropists, nor the facts of history, will justify this sweeping assertion.

We do not claim that they have taken on them the nature of angels. We only claim that they are MEN, and that our Divine Master made no mistake in giving His Gospel to enlighten them, His blood to redeem them, or His command to us to publish that Gospel to them. If Eliot and Brainard and Edwards found encouragement for Christian efforts in their behalf, why may not the Christians of this generation labor for them with hope? Are we wiser or better than they? Or are the Indians worse and their condition more hopeless, than in the days of our fathers?

It is safe to affirm, in spite of all the obstacles in their path, that, under the efforts put forth in their behalf, many of the Indian tribes are making commendable progress in civilization, and large numbers of them are bringing forth in their lives the peaceable fruits of righteousness.

We therefore recommend, not only that the Association continue its work for the evangelization of the Indians, but that it enlarge and extend it, as fast as God in His providence may open the way.

A. C. BARSTOW. REV. A. P. MARVIN.
COL. FRANKLIN FAIRBANKS. REV. GEO. F. WRIGHT.

On motion, it was voted that the report be accepted, and taken up for discussion on Thursday forenoon.

The report of the Committee on the paper of Rev. George L. Walker, D.D. was read by Rev. Samuel P. Leeds, D.D., who opened the discussion of the report, followed by Rev. Samuel Harrison, of Pittsfield, and Rev. Addison P. Foster, of Jersey City. Secretary Strieby was invited to speak upon the pending question. Rev. George Juchau and Rev. David O. Mears continued the discussion.

On motion of Secretary Strieby, it was voted "that the papers read before this body, together with the reports of the committees thereon, be accepted and referred to the Executive Committee for publication at its discretion."

Rev. Benj. F. Hamilton, D. D. gave the report of the committee on the paper presented by Rev. Ebenezer Cutler, D. D. The report was discussed by Rev. Benj. F. Hamilton, Rev. Albert H. Plumb, Rev. Jesse H. Jones, Rev. G. B. Willcox, D. D., and Rev. George F. Wright.

Rev. Jeremiah K. Aldrich, of Nashua, reported in behalf of the committee upon the paper presented by Dist. Sec. Chas. L. Woodworth. The report was discussed by Secretary Strieby, and Rev. Geo. F. Stanton, of Weymouth. The report was accepted, and the following resolution, appended thereto, was adopted:

Resolved, That, as God raised up His ancient people, and made them the repository of the truth, to prepare the way for the advent of the Saviour, when the fullness of time should come, so He has raised up this nation to carry forward that truth to its final consummation, and that it becometh us to put forth every possible effort for accomplishing this work, in humble reliance upon the direct agency of the Holy Spirit, believing that God will bless well-directed, earnest Christian effort, energize and apply the truth by the personal presence and power of a living Christ; and that we regard the American Missionary Association as one of the most direct and efficient agencies for securing this end, and would press its claim upon our churches for an increase in benevolent contributions, that its work may be enlarged and prosecuted with increased vigor.

At 5.15 the Association adjourned to meet at 7.30 P. M. Benediction by Rev. Daniel T. Fiske, D.D.

Evening Session.

7.30—President Tobey in the chair. Rev. Thomas T. Richmond offered prayer. The evening session was occupied by those who were formerly in the employ of the Association.

Addresses were made by Rev. Charles M. Southgate, of Dedham, Rev. Sylvanus Haywood, of N.H., Rev. Martin L. Williston, of N.Y., and Rev. Walter S. Alexander, of New Orleans, President of Straight University.

During the evening the choir sang several of the Jubilee Songs.

Adjourned at 9.30 P. M. to meet Thursday morning at 9 A. M.

Thursday Morning Session.

Rev. D. O. Mears conducted a prayer-meeting at 8.15 A. M. President Tobey called the Association to order at 9.15 A.M. Prayer was offered by Rev. William Mellen.

Rev. Davis Foster read the report of the committee on the paper presented by Rev. Stacy Fowler.

Rev. Daniel T. Fiske, D. D., read the report of the committee on the paper presented by Secretary Strieby.

Hon. Edmund H. Sawyer gave the report of the Committee on Finance as follows:

The Committee appointed to consider and examine the financial statement of the American Missionary Association, covering the receipts and expenditures for the year ending September 30th, 1878, respectfully submit the following Report:

The receipts from all sources have been $195,601.65, or about thirteen thousand dollars less than for the preceding year. The expenses, including amounts paid for church and educational work, publications, cost of collecting funds and cost of administration, have been $167,728.23. There is due the Tillotson Normal and Collegiate Institute, $2,446.31, and there has been paid towards cancelling the debt $25,427.11. Of the amount paid upon the debt, the sum of $17,904.92 was contributed directly for the purpose, and $7,522.19 has been saved from the income of the year. Your Committee are happy to testify, that the administration of the affairs of the Association appears to have been conducted with wisdom, ability and faithfulness. While the work for the year has not been curtailed, the receipts have been less. Yet from them quite a sum has been saved towards cancelling the indebtedness. It is greatly to be regretted, that the receipts during the year have not been sufficient to pay in full the debt, as there still remains unpaid, and unprovided for, the sum of $30,439.79. Certainly it would seem that our churches could easily contribute this sum, which, if done, would give your Executive Committee new courage to plan for the extension of work now so well established and wisely conducted.

Your Committee would suggest that an effort be made to extend the paying circulation of the monthly publication, the "AMERICAN MISSIONARY," which is now so attractive and desirable, communicating as it does, information relating to the operations and needs of the Association, and the progress made in the different fields of its occupation. The administrative expenses seem to us small, compared with the magnitude and importance of the work accomplished, giving evidence that this department is conducted with great economy, and most conscientious fidelity.

When we consider the nature and extent of the work committed to the care of this organization, and that the appeal comes to us as a Christian duty, to help educate and Christianize these millions of our own citizens, now living in a condition of ignorance and degradation, we are forced to the conclusion, that our churches do not realize sufficiently, either their obligation or privilege, to meet the call with liberal and glad contributions.

The annual receipts of this Association, engaged in Christian work second in importance to no other, ought to be greatly increased. May we not ask the Pastors of our churches, to bring to the attention of their congregations, the necessities of those for whom this Association is laboring; and we urge individual Christians to such faithful labor and consecration as will extend a knowledge of the needs and deepen the interest felt in this great and good work, so that contributions may be largely increased.

From an examination of the various statements submitted, showing in detail the operations of the Association, and the condition of the property interests it has in charge, your Committee are prepared to commend it most heartily to the continued confidence and sympathy of our churches, and to recommend that every effort be made to secure enlarged receipts, so that the debt shall speedily be paid and the increased work that so needs to be done can be undertaken.

A. L. WILLISTON.

The report was discussed by Secretary Strieby, District-Secretaries Woodworth, Pike and Powell, Hon. E. H. Sawyer, Rev. George F. Stanton, Rev. Addison P. Foster, Rev. Cyrus W. Wallace, D.D., Hon. Edward S. Tobey, Rev. Rowland B. Howard, Rev. Albert H. Plumb.

Rev. John S. Ewell led in prayer.

On motion, it was voted "that a committee of three be appointed to present to the churches the expression of the Association concerning its debt." The Rev. George A. Oviatt, Rev. George F. Stanton and Rev. William L. Gaylord were appointed such committee.

Rev. Heman P. DeForrest read the report of the committee on "Moral and Religious Education," as follows:

The Committee, to whom was assigned the topic of "Moral and Religious Education, especially among the colored women of the South," offer their Report with a deep conviction of the central and commanding importance of the work thus indicated. The two faculties which, in the Freedman, need chief attention, are his intellect and his conscience. Of these, the moral faculty must take precedence in importance. By the effect of slavery, and its accompanying influences, acting through many generations, a blight amounting, in some directions, well-nigh to extinguishment, has fallen upon his moral sense. His education, under the old system, did not develop this faculty, for it was only the hard education of rough contact with life and with men, which, indeed, sharpened his intellect sometimes, but buried conscience yet deeper under the weight of false teaching and falser custom. His religion did not help him here, for it has been a sensuous and emotional experience, not deemed inconsistent with the grossest violations of moral law. It is the work of Associations like this to solemnize, in his behalf, the marriage, subject to no subsequent divorce, of religion and morality. And it is, we believe, a happy quality of the genius of Congregationalism, that it will not pour oil upon the flame of emotional piety, but will chiefly emphasize the spiritual truths and moral laws which forever underlie all true religion.

But now the question arises, whether, in all our planning and thinking for the Freedman, too little has not been said and thought by our churches in regard to the Freedwoman.

She, like her brother, has been debased by slavery; debased, moreover, in the very citadel of her sacred womanhood, until the instinct on which the sanctity of the home must rest, if it exist at all, has become almost extirpated.

There can be no elevation of the Freedman that does not rest upon the moral restoration of the Freedwoman. The position of woman is everywhere the measure of moral attainment, and here, where she has become the sport and lawful prey of two races, she more than ever holds the key of the situation.

The feeling, gaining strength through all the experience of our missionaries and teachers and superintendents, that an effort needs to be made for her benefit distinctly, now demands expression in the councils of this body.

Your Committee has no new light upon the subject; it has no specific to offer for the evil which makes so great a demand upon our sympathy. We can only appeal to this body, and to the churches, whether now, in the spectacle of two and a half millions of Freedwomen, of whom only a mere fraction are yet under the influence of schools and pure churches, lifting up their cry, not "from Greenland's icy mountains, nor India's coral strand," nor whence "Afric's sunny fountains roll down their golden sand;" but from the sunny half of these United States of America, we have not a call of God, which the dullest ear cannot fail to hear. And we, brethren and sisters, are charged with the duty of responding to this cry, with no uncertain sound.

The Committee feel the responsibility which rests upon them in undertaking to propose new measures, and hesitate to offer too radical suggestions. Yet, they cannot be deaf to the appeal of this kind of work, or content themselves with vague and general exhortations. We hail as a good omen, and as an indication of Providence as to the course to be taken, the fact that already, through the influence of one Christian lady of the Northwest, a lady missionary, specially instructed to labor among the homes of the Freedmen, by personal contact, for the moral and religious education of the colored woman, is now actually at work. Our recommendation is that, following out this beginning, Christian women of mature experience and wise tact be appointed, to such an extent as funds will permit, who shall labor for the elevation of the Freedwomen, by those methods of personal influence which are, of all, most efficient. We believe that in no other way can we strike so nearly at the root of the ignorance and immorality which, in behalf of the Freedmen, we contend against.

But, obviously, it would not be right to take the funds appropriated for education or church extension for this purpose, and thereby curtail a work which needs, on the contrary, to be at once extended. Whence shall the support of these lady workers come, then?

We feel constrained, in reply, to appeal to that large and earnest body to whom we are not wont to appeal in vain, the Christian women of our Northern churches. Suppose that in each church an appeal should be made to the ladies, already doing much in missionary work, and sending generous supplies of clothing and other necessaries to the Freedmen, to assume the responsibility of supporting, either themselves or in conjunction with neighboring churches, these female workers among the Freedwomen. Could they, would they resist the appeal of this sister of theirs upon whom iron despotism has set its mark of deep degradation, through no fault of hers, and who now lifts up appealing eyes, pleading to be restored to the sisterhood of the pure and the holy, to whom manhood owes all that is noblest and highest in its proudest development? We know them better than to imagine any such refusal. We believe the Christian women of the North, when once this channel is opened, will see in it their choice opportunity, and respond in a way that shall set forward our work by a great advance.

And we further offer the suggestion, following again a thought which has been born, and has already, to a degree, taken form, in the field of labor, that in the principal centres of the Southern field, local organizations of women may be constituted, which shall have special charge of this work, and through which the funds raised may be applied to their purpose.

By this three-fold chain of operations—the appointment of Christian women of mature character to special labor among the Freedwomen, the organization of local boards of women at the several centres of operation, and support by the Christian ladies of the North—it seems to the Committee that this important and too long neglected work may be simply and effectually accomplished. And, as rapidly as the developments will allow, we believe the work in the field should be passed into the hands of the elevated and Christianized Freedwoman herself, who, not only by visitation, but by the example of her own holy womanhood, and her own Christian home, shall disseminate the forces of light through all the darkness of the land where she lives.

REV. H. P. DEFORREST.

Rev. G. S. Pope, of Tougaloo, Miss., spoke upon the topic.

The report of the committee on the "Normal Work of the Association" was presented by Rev. W. W. Adams, D.D., as follows:

Your Committee congratulate the Association on the work of the year, as represented in the Report. It is but seventeen years since the first school for Freedmen was opened, and but twelve years since the first Normal school was started. Last year 7,229 pupils were under instruction in the schools of this Association, of whom 1,459 were in Normal schools. The increase in the number of pupils of all grades last year, over the number of the year before, was

1,789; in Normal schools the increase was 126; in college and professional schools, 50. The eagerness of the colored people to obtain at least a rudimentary education has ever been a most encouraging sign. The young man who last year walked fifty miles with his trunk upon his back that he might enter school, recalls the zeal of the late Dr. Goodell, of Constantinople, who, in his youth, also walked sixty miles, with a trunk strapped upon his back, that he might enter the Phillips Academy at Andover. The demand for teachers from the Normal schools—quite beyond the ability to supply them—is one of the surest indications that the schools are meeting an urgent need. But the tendency of some pupils to consider themselves qualified to become teachers, after obtaining the merest rudiments of knowledge, is earnestly to be deprecated and discouraged. It needs to be dealt with as an easily besetting sin. The replacing of the burned buildings by new ones, at a cost within the amounts of insurance recovered, the better location of some of them, the increasing, and increasingly expressed sympathy of the better classes of Southern whites with the educational work of the Association, are also occasions of congratulation. The devotion of a portion of the time of pupils to manual labor is to be commended on grounds of economy, of industrial training, of the best and most diversified moral culture.

We very earnestly commend to the friends of the Association the appeal of its officers for permanent endowments of the higher institutions. The elevation of the colored race must be in large measure the work of colored men and women. But they must first be trained for their work in institutions established among them. Without endowment there is no assurance of permanence in the institutions we have already given them; without endowment they are not established; the labor of the past is not secured from total loss in the future. It needs to be distinctly emphasized, also, that the permanent establishment of educational institutions of a high order is the great work of this Association among the colored men, and the foundation for all uplifting work beside. The continuous training of our schools—intellectual, industrial, social and moral training, all in one—is needed for the development of higher ideals and nobler types of character; and we are happy to add has already resulted in such development in not a few of the pupils. This training is needed as a counterpoise to the operation, otherwise mischievous because unbalanced, of some prominent forces of the African temperament; needed to hold the imagination within the limits of reason and righteousness, to curb emotional excess, to save life from becoming the sport of changeful impulses. Experience has proved that the training given changes the type of piety greatly for the better. It is not less fervent, but it is less exclusively and wildly emotional. It becomes more rational; more consistent; it has more of principle and character in it; it is more truly a service of righteousness, more reputable, more effective for good. In order that church membership may be helpful rather than harmful to righteousness, and that church life among the Africans may be genuinely Christian, there is urgent need of a worthier Christian education of the African ministry. It is peculiarly our work to give that education. The general education provided for through our Normal schools is indispensable; that the colored people may deserve and command the respect of their white fellow citizens at the South; that they may clearly understand their rights as citizens; may know how to secure them and make wise use of them.

It has been truly said that the work of uplifting the colored race is, from beginning to end, a long, slow process of education. In that process the Normal schools and higher institutions of the American Missionary Association have a place second in importance to no other. We have begun a good work; the question now is, whether we shall do it or leave it undone through lack of establishing the institutions we have founded.

REV. WM. W. ADAMS, D.D.
REV. J. W. WELLMAN, D.D.
REV. E. H. MERRILL, D.D.

Remarks were made upon the report by Rev. Edward H. Merrill, D. D.

After singing, the Association adjourned to meet at 2 P. M.

Afternoon Session.

At 2 P. M., the Lord's Supper was celebrated; Rev. Joshua W. Wellman, D. D., and Rev. Cyrus W. Wallace, D. D., officiating.

The Association was called to order at 2.45 P. M., President Tobey in the chair.

The Committee on the Debt of the Association, to which Secretary Strieby was added, presented the following statement and suggestions:

The American Missionary Association at its meeting in Taunton, Mass., adopted the following statement and suggestions respecting its debt:

The debt of this Association has been, and still is, a great hindrance to its progress, preventing that advance which is so much needed along the whole line of endeavors. The Association welcomes, with hearty thanks to God, the report of its treasurer, announcing the still further reduction of the debt, bringing the amount down, if all pledges are paid, to $25,000. An effort having been made at this meeting to secure pledges of $25 each, encouraging responses were made, amounting to over $3,000.

In view of these facts it was resolved that an effort be made for the total extinction of the debt, and the following suggestions are offered as to the methods in which our friends may aid us:

1. Individuals and households, who are interested in our work, may send pledges of one or more shares (of $25 each), as their ability and benevolence may suggest, the more wealthy being asked to remember that if the debt is paid, some of the contributions must be large and liberal.

2. Pastors may invite their congregations to make such pledges.

3. Pastors may (as some have volunteered at this meeting to do) bring the subject before the local conferences, and awaken an interest in securing such pledges.

4. The Day of Thanksgiving is near at hand, and a glad offering for this purpose may be an acceptable gift to the God of all mercies, as well as helpful to the Association.

5. The holiday season, not far distant, may be made the occasion of like offerings. The Association entrusts to its Executive officers the duty of selecting and carrying out the best methods for laying these suggestions before the friends of the despised races of America.

The report was accepted and adopted.

Rev. Edward Strong, D. D., read the report of the Committee on Church Extension, as follows:

The Committee to whom was referred the portion of the Annual Report which relates to Church Extension at the South, submit the following :

We notice that the church work, like the educational, is growing on our hands. Five new churches—especially if each prove a metropolitan or mother church—is a gain for which to give thanks and from which to take courage. Sixty-five churches in all, though most of them are connected with our educational institutions, or near them, is certainly not a bad showing for thirteen years of labor.

We notice also, with pleasure, a cheering growth the last year by conversions from the world. In fifteen only of the churches, this growth gives a total of 358 additions, an average of twenty-four. Have our Northern churches done so well? It is equally gratifying to learn what kind of Christians our churches South are making, or seeking to make; to know our students are pledged to work; what these converts think of the standard of morality enjoined by the Gospel; the honesty, purity and truth—in short, the practical righteousness which God ordains. We rejoice to know that this Association has planted, and is training, these Southern churches to be the salt of that part of the earth—cities on a hill, lights in dark places—so recognized, having the reputation of being Bible Christians—industrious, virtuous, zealous of good works—thus already having obtained a good report.

It is cheering to learn that some of the best of the pastors of these sixty-five churches have been raised not only from bondage, but from all the degradation of slavery—boys picked up in the street, and polished like diamonds, for the Master's use.

We have certainly made a beginning in the matter of church extension, as in that of education. Not the least gratifying feature is seen in the character, the growing influence, and reputation, even among the whites, which these churches enjoy, though some of them are numerically small. By your instrumentality and the grace of God, they have learned what a Christian character is, and that Christ's friends are not those who can sing loud and pray loud, whether they are honest or thievish, tell the truth or lies, are virtuous or licentious; not those who, with these immoralities, crowd sanctuaries and make them echo; but, rather, those who keep the commandments of God.

This Association crowded the years before the war fighting against the extension of slavery; then crowded the years during the war, and those immediately following it, with efforts to teach the colored people to read the Bible; and later, devoted itself to the work of planting higher institutions—as at Hampton and Nashville and New Orleans—in order to make of the blacks men of a higher, nobler type, teaching and preaching men, worthy to lead their host. Shall it now set them to no grand work of evangelization among their fellows?

The question is, whether you, who have always been identified with Congregationalism, and still love it, after long trial and large observation, will give it a fair trial South? We rejoice in your plan to move slowly in this, and wisely. We warmly approve your selection of Dr. J. E. Roy to reconnoitre the whole field, and report.

Palfrey says, "Faith in God, faith in man, and in work," was the brief formula taught by the founders of New England. May we not, the children of the Pilgrims, have faith enough in God and in these men to give them the church polity of these founders?

We are encouraged to recommend the planting of Congregational churches among the blacks, because we have great advantages in so doing. The eager aspiration of the blacks to be men, will help. Congregationalism has a clean record South. Has any other of our leading denominations? There is no prejudice to be overcome by it, as a polity. In the competitions of the denominations on the ground, will not there be an advantage for us? Then, again, the colored people look upon this Association as a tried friend, and trust it. Is not this an advantage? And, further, has not Providence opened the South to our polity, as well as piety, in a marked manner? The work already accomplished has shown the tree to be good, and given it favor widely, even among the old masters. Hence the aid given to our institutions by several of the States. Hence the high hope of many whites, that our work will do much to tone up the blacks in all that belongs to good citizenship, good morality, and proper church discipline. As Mohammedan Turkey, and Pagan Hawaii and India, have welcomed the Christian homes planted among them by the missionaries, and as the mission churches have been a leaven of light in their social and political life, so it has been, and will more and more be, as you establish your church centres over the South.

In conclusion, then, we approve what seems to be the thought of the Executive Committee—to "advance its activities in the direction of saving souls at the South, and organize churches of our polity, as really missionary centres of leavening influence. Let the trial of our polity at the South be a fair and full one, carrying out our ideas of Christian doctrine and morality. Thus, as we pray and believe, will that wilderness the sooner bud and blossom like the rose. We recommend, therefore, the adoption of the following resolution :

Resolved, That this Association approves the plan of its Executive Committee—to make a careful examination of the field at the South, and infuse new activity into its church work, organizing churches where the way is open, on the principles of the Congregational order.

REV. EDWARD STRONG, D.D. REV. D. O. MEARS.
REV. WM. L. GAYLORD. REV. O. T. LANPHEAR, D.D.
REV. A. H. PLUMB.

The resolution was adopted.

Rev. Edward S. Atwood, of Salem, presented the report of the committee upon "Chinese in America," as follows :

The Committee, to whom was referred that portion of its Annual Report which relates to Mission Work among the Chinese in America, would respectfully submit the following :

We recognize with satisfaction the positive and demonstrable success of the Association in this department of labor—a success emphatically evidenced by the 1,500 gathered into the day-schools; the increased usefulness of the Bethany Home; the seventy-five conversions during the year, and the ardent desire of these newly born souls for the Gospel light to shine on their native and beloved land. Were we to stop here and content ourselves with the mere statistics of progress, we should have no hesitation in saying to the officers and the missionaries of the Association, "Servants of God, well done!"

But simple justice compels a larger view of the matter. There is something to be taken into account besides these nominal assets. The chief worth of the work done lies in the fact, that in the doing of it the Association has been loyal to its old and fixed theory, that a man is a man everywhere and always, with a soul to be saved, and a Saviour sufficient for its needs. Questions of nationality are irrelevant. The simple fact of humanity is all that needs to be known in order to institute a legitimate claim for the giving of the Gospel, by those who have it in trust. In this department of work, loyalty has not been an easy matter. The rough unreasoning passions of the mob have glanced fiercely against it. Iniquity, baptised with the name of legislation, has endeavored to thwart it. The conciliatory conservatism of timid, good men, has been eager to dispense its soporific platitudes, and generous in prescribing its universal panacea for all difficulties; "Let us have peace!" The unwarrantable enmity to the Mongolian on the Pacific Coast has been supplemented and reinforced by the unaccountable apathy on the Atlantic shore of the continent. Yet, undaunted by these accumulated obstacles, the Association has said, like the great Missionary Apostle; "None of these things move me." "The waves of the Yellow Sea," it has said, "break on a land peopled by men for whom Christ died. If we can reach them without crossing thousands of intervening leagues of ocean, so much the better." In spite of hostility, often white-hot; in spite of statute books, whose leaves were blistered with iniquitous provisions; in spite of the furious rage of lawless crowds, the Association has passed through the thick and peril of opposition of every sort, and taken by the hand the despised Mongolian, against whom so many scowling faces were set, and so many angry hands raised, and called him "Brother," claiming kinship, and tendering the richest offices of help. For this, especially, the constituency of this Association should say to its management: "Vastly well done." The old banner under which the Society was organized, is still "full high advanced." It is no small honor in these degenerate times to find men who are faithful to their trust at any cost.

But more than this, it is believed that in this department the Association is doing germinal work. The few early ears that have ripened for our encouragement are types and prophecies of a greater coming harvest. In any other view of the matter the religion of the Gospel is spiritual class legislation. It is suited to the needs of the few and not the many. The Cross loses its power under the shadow of the Great Wall; and men scorn, as well they may, such a deduction as that; they are shut up to the only other possible conclusion, that the school, the mission work, the unfolded Word, will effect in the Pacific Coast, and among the Chinese immigrants, just what it effects here and among us. And, therefore, we say to the Association that its high mission in this hour is to push its work. Let it turn a deaf ear to all pleadings to stay its hand, however plausible those pleadings may be, and from whatever quarter they may come. Let it distrust the shallow expedients of so-called statesmen, who are even shallower than their expedients. Let it give no heed to the unreasoning taunts and empty rage of Communism, but push its work; secure in the fact that back of its efforts is the intelligent Christian public sentiment of the land; and still more encouraged by the greater fact, that the God who has made of one blood all nations, and provided one Gospel for all men, is saying with an emphasis that cannot be mistaken, "Go forward."

REV. E. S. ATWOOD.
REV. G. R. W. SCOTT.

The report was discussed by Rev. E. S. Atwood, Rev. Jesse H. Jones, of North Abington, Rev. Geo. E. Freeman, of Abington, Rev. A. P. Marvin, of Lancaster, Rev. S. H. Emery, of Taunton, and Col. Amos Tappan, of Ipswich. The report was accepted, and the resolution adopted.

Rev. Geo. A. Oviatt gave the report in behalf of the committee on the "Work of the Association in Africa" as follows:

Your Committee on so much of the report of the Executive Committee as relates to the Mendi Mission in Africa, beg leave to submit the following:

At the time of the last Annual Meeting of this body, the first company of colored missionaries was on its way to the Mendi Mission. The plan of sending out to Africa men and women of African descent redeemed from American slavery, converted and educated at the South, was long and thoroughly considered before it was adopted for action. Great care was exercised in selecting this first band of colored missionaries, and it is evident that the right workers were sent forth to test the experiment—persons of deep, earnest piety, of more than ordinary common sense, and of sound education, as their communications to the Executive Committee show. In February two other missionaries, and their wives, were sent out to help the too small number of those who set sail for Africa in September. This year's trial has proved two things: (1.) That persons of African descent can endure the sickly climate of the country of which their ancestors were natives, better than white missionaries: and (2) That converted and educated Freedmen and women are equal to the work of wise, thorough missionary labor in the land of their fathers. Everything at the stations to which these brethren and sisters were sent, seems to have been improved under their management. Converts have been multiplied and pupils gathered into the schools in augmented numbers.

The call is for an enlarged number of missionaries to occupy this promising field, and for more ample provisions to enable them to take a larger number of native children into their homes, "to be under their care, as well as removed from the debasing influences of their heathen surroundings."

The Executive Committee express the hope that, with the strengthening of these mission stations, "they may be made the point of departure for a mission into the interior of Africa."

It is a grand, inspiriting idea, that the men and women the best adapted to civilize and Christianize the millions of Africa, are to be found among those who, at the South, were so lately in bondage, and fitted for their work as foreign missionaries in Normal schools, Colleges, and Theological Seminaries, planted and sustained by Northern philanthropists and Christians, not on Northern but Southern soil.

The Executive Committee can only delay to enlarge these missionary operations in Africa on account of the too limited amount of means in the Treasury of the Association.

Your Committee present the following Resolutions:

1. That we recognize with heartfelt gratitude to God, His evident approval of the plan of attempting to evangelize Africa by the sons and daughters of Africans born in this country, brought out of slavery under the Proclamation of Emancipation of President Lincoln, and here converted and educated for this glorious work in their fatherland.

2. That we cannot do otherwise than lay on the churches the responsibility of increasing their contributions in aid of this Association, so as to enable it, at once, to enlarge its operations connected with the Mendi Mission, in the hope of sending, from this, as a centre, bands of laborers into the interior of the continent.

REV. GEO. A. OVIATT. REV. JOHN C. LABAREE.
REV. FRANKLIN AYER. REV. G. D. PIKE.

The resolutions were adopted.

The report was discussed by Rev. G. D. Pike, and was then accepted, and the resolution adopted.

By vote of the Association, the officers named by the committee were elected. President Tobey made remarks appropriate to his election as President.

By vote of the Association, the report of the committee on the Indians was taken from the table, and discussed by President Tobey.

By invitation, Rev. Dr. Rust, Corresponding Secretary of the Freedmen's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, addressed the Association.

District Secretary Powell extended an invitation from the Congregational Churches of Chicago to the Association, to hold the next Annual meeting in Chicago. The Association voted to recommend to the Executive Committee that, if deemed expedient by them, the invitation be accepted.

The Secretary then read the minutes, which were adopted.

After the Benediction by Rev. Stephen M. Newman, the Association adjourned to meet at 7.30 P. M.

Thursday Evening.

An audience filling the church assembled at 7.30 o'clock. The services opened with a voluntary by the choir. Prayer was offered by Rev. Jonathan Edwards, of Grantville, Mass. The hymn "Great God of nations," was then sung by the choir and congregation. Secretary Strieby then read a paper on "The work of half a generation among the Freedmen." The hymn, "The morning light is breaking," was sung. An address by Rev. Dr. Hartranft, of Hartford, followed. The hymn "My country, 'tis of thee," was sung. An address was then made by Rev. Albert H. Plumb, of Boston. The following vote of thanks to the churches of Taunton, for their reception of the Association, as proposed by Secretary Woodworth, was unanimously passed:

The American Missionary Association renders hearty thanks to the Congregational churches of this city, for the invitation to hold its Thirty-second Anniversary in Taunton. Especially to the Broadway church, for the use of its house of worship for the different sessions of the meeting, and of its chapel and parlors for the Committees and friends in attendance; to the Winslow church, for the use of its chapel and parlors for the entertainment of their numerous guests from abroad; to the families of the Congregational churches, for abounding and pleasant hospitality: to the Committee of Arrangements, for wise and generous plans to meet all demands of the meeting and the wants of the guests: to the chorister and choir of this church, for most delightful aid in the service of song, and to all who have contributed to render the meeting a pleasure and a profit to those who have been in attendance.

Also, it renders sincere thanks to the writers of the different papers, and to the Committees and speakers, who have given time and thought, and so greatly aided in the power and success of the meeting.

A response was made by Rev. Dr. Blake, of the Committee of Arrangements. The closing prayer was offered by Rev. A. H. Plumb, of Boston. The Doxology was sung, and, with the Benediction by Rev. Dr. Hartranft, the Association adjourned.

REPORT

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

At this thirty-second Anniversary of the American Missionary Association, the Executive Committee would express devout thanksgiving to the God of Missions for the general prosperity which has attended its operations through the year, for the enthusiasm and harmony of its workers, and for the preservation, to such an extent, of the health and life of its officers and missionaries. But one of each class has been called from the scenes of earthly service to those of heavenly reward.

Rev. Silas McKeen, D.D., of Bradford, Vt., who, for fourteen years, had been one of our Vice-Presidents, and who had ever been a true and eloquent friend of the colored people, having reached the ripe old age of eighty-seven years, has entered upon the glories of the heavenly inheritance. In his two pastorates at Bradford he spent forty-three years. His intervening pastorate of nine years was at Belfast, Maine. A man of great diligence and decision, with tender sympathies and warm affections, true and judicious, his ordinary work among his own people, as well as in protracted meetings and revivals, was eminently successful.

Mrs. James, the wife of Dr. Benjamin James, went out, about one year ago, to the Mendi Mission in Africa, with Rev. and Mrs. Floyd Snelson and teacher White. On the 19th of May last, she was called to exchange her new home for another, of which it is said: "And there shall be no more death."

GENERAL SURVEY.

THE FREEDMEN.

As we approach this anniversary, we realize that our Association has covered with its existence nearly the life-time of a generation. The men who were the leaders in its organization, in its early administration and in its first missionary work have nearly all gone to their reward; but as we look back to those early days, we realize with gratitude to God the great things in the very line of its aim and effort which his Providence has wrought. In 1846, slavery was the recognized condition by importation or by birth of one-sixth of the twenty and one half millions of people in these United States. It was in the interest of their enlightenment and deliverance that the American Missionary Association was founded. The following years witnessed the agitations and the contests over the question of the emancipation of the slaves on the one hand, and of the extension of slave territory on the other. Thirteen years after its organization, in the height and climax of the excitement, the missionaries of the Association were all summarily expelled from the slave states. Then came the period of the civil war, with its opportunities for physical relief as well as for school and missionary work, down to its turning point in the emancipation of the four millions held in bondage—then the sudden opening of the doors of access to this great mass of ignorant minds—made our fellow citizens, too, in a moment, and endowed with the sovereign right of the ballot—then the pressure, the hurry, the rush of responsibility and work to prevent a rapid degeneration of these unprepared citizens from liberty to license—then the settling down to steady work for their training, by education and true religion, up to the stature of Christian citizenship.

So we have come in this third of a century from being protestants against a slave trade, and from making efforts often repulsed to introduce the gospel of liberty and letters to those who needed it most urgently, to being the glad almoners of Christian charity to these free men and women from whose limbs and minds the shackles of slavery have fallen. Our missionaries are free to go any where throughout the land, with the Bible in one hand and the spelling book in the other; and our colleges and churches lift their brick or wooden walls in every State, like fortresses from which to wage war against the powers of darkness and ignorance, with the weapons of light and love. Well may we exclaim as we see the contrast from 1846 to 1878, "What hath God wrought!"

EDUCATIONAL WORK.

During the past year the Educational work of the Association has been prosecuted with vigor and success. In none of our larger institutions has the work been suffered to abate, or the number of those reached by it been lessened. Nor have we ever had reason to be better satisfied with the devotion of our teachers to their work or with their efficiency in it, as indicated by the evident results. In some of the schools the attendance has largely increased, so that temporary barracks have had to be erected for the accommodation of students and various expedients made use of to prevent the painful necessity of denying them admittance. Many of our ministers and teachers, we are persuaded, are as devoted, and make self-denials as great, as any missionaries on the western frontier or in the darkest of heathen lands. And we hear frequently of those seeking instruction, who toil for it as for hid treasure. An illustration of that class was one applicant who walked fifty miles with his trunk on his back to reach the school which he desired to enter.

An important work of the year has been the replacement of our burned buildings. On Sunday night of April 16th, 1876, our Emerson Institute, at Mobile, was consumed by fire. On the 13th of the following December the Lewis High School building and the Norwich Chapel at Macon, Georgia, structures among the most commodious and complete for their purposes in the South, were wholly destroyed in the same way. On the 16th of February, 1877, the Straight University building at New Orleans, was burned. And since our last annual meeting, on the 26th of February last, the Beach Institute at Savannah made the fourth in our list of recent losses by fire. At the opening of the year, Prof. T. N. Chase, of Atlanta University, was detailed to superintend the re-erection of these buildings, and to have some general supervision of the work at the South. We are glad to announce that these school and church edifices have all been replaced. The new buildings are equal to those destroyed in the accommodation they afford for the work, while they are simple in their style and as economical in their appointments as is consistent with thoroughness of construction and durability of material. Their cost, too, has been quite within the amount of insurance money recovered. Two of them are improved, also, by removal to other parts of the cities in which they stand. The restoring of these accommodations will greatly encourage the pastors, teachers and students in these several Institutions; although from their cheerful acquiescence in the situation, and from their disposition to make the best of their inadequate temporary quarters, their work has scarcely been hindered.

One great good which has come to our cause from these calamities, has been the calling forth, on the part of the better class of the Southern people, of their real sympathy with our philanthropic and Christian work in behalf of the freedmen. This has been particularly manifest upon the dedication of these restored buildings, when prominent citizens have been present and have expressed their heartiest good will towards these enterprises.

We are impressed, on looking over the whole field, with the fact that we have been peculiarly fortunate, under divine guidance, in the location of our leading institutions. For healthiness, for accessibility by large populations of the colored people, for such distribution as to secure them from mutual interference, and to secure for them the speediest and most intelligent sympathy of the best classes of the communities in which they are placed, there could hardly be an improvement made by any change, however carefully studied and accomplished.

The general proportion of students in the several classes under our care has probably not greatly varied in this from former years. In the first years of our unimpeded access to the freedmen, we were compelled to take them where we found them, ignorant of the beginnings of learning, and to give them what they needed most, the common school. As the States came to assume more of that work, we gradually withdrew and set ourselves to preparing the teachers and the leaders of this enfranchised race. Still our Normal Department is the one whose need is most pressingly felt, and which is most constantly full. And still the demand for teachers for the public free schools of the South, upon our schools and scholars of this grade, is larger than we can supply. A few more each year are advancing into the collegiate and professional courses. The Law School at New Orleans has been well sustained and has graduated quite a class of students, both white and black. The three Theological Classes at Fisk, Straight and Talladega, have been efficient in their work. During the past year, also, the Association has coöperated with the Presbytery of Washington in maintaining the Theological Department of Howard University, of which Dr. Patton is the President and in which he is an instructor. The arrangement has been harmonious in its working, and successful in its results.

The Industrial Departments of our institutions have been managed also with efficiency and success. In some degree they are self-sustaining, but even though they were a large expense, the physical culture which they give, and the practical training in the arts and industries of life which they impart, would be of sufficient importance to warrant the outlay. We believe, too, that the moral advantage of this occupation for what would otherwise be leisure hours, is of great value as a defense against the strongest temptations of youth, and that to it in a great degree is due the freedom of our mixed schools from even occasional scandal.

In one way the Association has done more in the common school work than for a few preceding years. Many of the free schools for colored children have been maintained at public expense for a very limited time—from three to six months in the year. It has seemed wise to us, in some of these schools taught by the graduates of our institutions, to supplement their funds by small amounts, sufficient to extend the time in each case to nine months or so, thus increasing the inducement to our best pupils to fit themselves for teachers, and the facilities for the education of those whom they are trying to lead into the light.

We notice as encouraging signs of progress in this work, that the standard of scholarship and attainment is advancing year by year, and that the improving tastes and ambitions of the students are shown in the establishment of literary clubs and reading circles for wider culture. The history of the graduates, too, after they have been withdrawn from the immediate influence of their instructors, has been full of cheer, and of the fulfilment of our highest anticipations both in regard to their character and usefulness.

That this educational work is still needed, is evident from the fact that there are still more than three millions and a half of persons over ten years of age in the South who cannot read, over 1,135,000 of whom are legal voters.

Though still dependent, and probably for many years to be dependent, on the contributions of the churches, the great want of these institutions now is of permanent endowments. They are fairly, though by no means fully, equipped with buildings and instructors; but can never be on the best foundation for lasting usefulness, until the income for their current expenses shall be derived from the interest of invested funds, and not from annual collections from changing constituencies of friends, or from the treasury of a benevolent society. It is far better, too, to endow these well established institutions than to found new ones.

Another need, which will continue until the class of those from whom the students come is less desperately poor, is of student aid; and that, other and earlier than can be granted by education societies; this, too, is needed for those preparing to be teachers, and not exclusively for those fitting for the ministry of the Word. It is well for those who give, to know that the habits of industry and prudence which mark those, who, at great self-sacrifices are seeking education, conduce to make a small sum sufficient for the exigency, though that small sum is absolutely essential.

The reach of influence of these educational institutions can hardly be over-estimated. These young people, living for consecutive months, and in successive years, under the constant influence of teachers of cultivation and Christian character, go out with all the habits of their lives changed, without the loss of their simplicity, but with a love of cleanliness and order, and with that self respect which is a mark of character. They carry these influences to their homes, and the evidences of refined tastes and worthier ambitions gather around them there. They impart them to their pupils in turn, and thus they are prepared to take their teachers' places in our schools, with fewer disadvantages to overcome. They make the power of their new ideas felt in their churches and Sunday schools, causing their work to be more quiet and more thorough. And their lives and characters do very much to change public sentiment among the Southern people at large in regard to the questions of their present recognition and their future position.

Nor can we overlook in all this the positive religious influence of the schools. There is only a nominal division between our educational and our church work; for the schools are as religious as the churches. The pastor of the college church has the advantage of other pastors in the aid, through all the week, of a devoted band of Christian teachers. The church and home are working together, instead of apart, as in so many cases And the frequent meetings for prayer and Bible study, as well as the familiar conversations by the way and the daily access to these young hearts, are abundantly rewarded, as is shown by the exceedingly small number of those who go out from the influence of such a life without carrying with them into the world, and the work which awaits them, a Christian faith and a Christian purpose.

CHURCH WORK.

Of our church work proper, some is in most intimate connection with our schools and colleges, and yet by no means all.

We add five churches, organized during the year, to the list of those aided by the Association, two in Kentucky, one in Georgia, one in Alabama, and one in Texas.

Though it may not be always the only or most accurate criterion of the spiritual life of a church, the accessions to its membership from the world furnish the usual and most accessible basis of comparison, as to activity and efficiency. Judged by this standard, our churches have not been dead nor fruitless during the past year. In some of them every year witnesses a large accession. Their growth is steady and their life is full. Several others, which a year ago reported small accessions, this year give a much larger number; on the whole it has seemed to be a year of ingatherings. That we have heard less during the year of marked revival seasons, is, perhaps, due to the fact that the work is deeper and more steady in its progress, and so less demonstrative than it used to be.

Among our sixty-four churches the following have received considerable accessions on profession of faith: Central, New Orleans, 50; Woodville, 39; McLeansville, 32; Anniston, 32; New Iberia, 30; Savannah, 26; Berea, 24; Nashville, 22; Raleigh, 19; Ogeechee, 19; Dudley, 18; Florence, 18; Helena, 16; Childersburg, 12; Golding's Grove, 11. The admissions upon profession of faith to these fifteen churches thus average over 24 to each, and amount in all to 368.

The church work which centers at Savannah, Talladega and New Orleans, has, in some respects, made most marked progress during the year. The circles of mission churches within a few miles of those cities have had a better and more competent ministry, have been wisely managed, with increasing spiritual gains and richer promise for the future.

An indication of advancement in the character of the people is in their increased willingness and desire to contribute to the support of their own churches. We hear of surprise visits to pastors here and there, which show appreciation of their self-denying labors. The debt-paying movement has reached some of these poor churches, where the insignificant amount, as it seems to us, was yet a mighty burden for so feeble a folk to lift. Systematic giving has found its way into some of our colored churches and schools, and the contributions which have been made to help pay the debt of the Association have been a touching expression of gratitude and love.

The Sunday-school work has a large place in the plans and activities of our teachers and pastors. All our churches conduct, we believe, well organized efforts in this direction, and our teachers and students go out into churches of other orders than ours near them, and carry the leaven of the gospel, as we receive it, to thousands. It is stated that in seven years the students of Talladega College alone have organized Sunday-schools in which have been taught over 20,000 scholars.

Nor has the cause of temperance been forgotten or neglected. Through churches and schools, both the danger and the safety have been set forth, the pledge has been circulated and signed, and in some cases all the students have gone out having promised to make this a prominent part of their good work for life.

In regard to our annual table of statistics, it should be borne in mind that our year ends with the 30th of September, a date too near the time of our annual meeting for us reasonably to expect a full report in our possession, and in print, from every place, especially from some of the more distant and isolated fields. The report as submitted, however, where not up to date, shows a year's work and a year's progress since the last report. In one or two cases where we have found the number of members to have been over-estimated by colored ministers, better versed in Christian doctrine than in the science of numbers, and so to have been misleading, in the reports of former years, we have cut the figures down at once to the limits of the exactest truth, though at the sacrifice of apparent growth and gain. We are persuaded that our reports are increasingly accurate from year to year.

The six local conferences of churches have had their annual meetings, which have been carried on decorously and devoutly and in which careful discussion of practical questions has been had to the great good of pastors and delegates.

The extension of the church work by the organization of new churches is one of the most difficult things to do wisely, of all we have to do. It is easy enough to found a church, either North or South, but to establish churches which shall live and grow and be the sources of spiritual power is by no means so easy. And this is especially true in such communities as we have to deal with among the Freedmen. Churches of other orders, too, have been long upon the ground, and their names have a familiar and friendly sound to the colored people. "The Methodists and Baptists have just gone along" they sing, "to ring those charming bells,"—but even if the word were more melodious, we doubt if they would have had the Congregationalists in their hymns. Our churches have grown up slowly where we and our work in the schools had gone before and become known, have spread from these centres through Sunday-school and mission work. But it has seemed as though the time had come when more might be done in this direction; and yet we would almost rather do nothing than do it unwisely and inefficiently.

This department of our work is to receive careful attention in the coming year—indeed the beginning has been already made—through the appointment of the Rev. J. E. Roy, D.D., to the field-superintendency of the Southern work. Having been in earlier years a district-secretary of the Association, and having spent the interval of sixteen years in the service of the American Home Missionary Society, he brings a most valuable experience to this work of church extension. He has already been acquainting himself with the history and condition of the work from the office records, and will be speedily on the field, with Atlanta for his headquarters, our missionary at large among the churches that are, and where the churches may be. It will be his object not to be able to report a large work, at the risk of its proving hasty and superficial, but to become first thoroughly familiar with the facts and the field, so that such enlargement as this work shall have may be permanent and strong. While the superintendent will give special attention to this department of church supervision and extension, he will also be at hand to visit for the Executive Committee such other portions of the work as may seem to call for investigation or advice.

A general survey of the results of labor among the Freedmen is full of encouragement. We have been long enough at work among them to have gathered rich harvests from the early plantings; and to have found that all our reaping is the harvesting of seeds to be sown again. The personal history of some of our most efficient workers illustrates our meaning. Some years ago a poor boy was picked up by one of our lady teachers in a town in North Carolina, taken under her care in a common school, taught his letters, and led along up the toilsome way until he was prepared to enter Talladega College. He is now one of our most efficient missionary pastors in the State of Georgia. Another young man was taken from the basement of a hotel, where he held some very humble position, by one of the Professors at Atlanta. He was educated from the very foundation, until he was graduated from the University, and now has charge of our largest colored church, where he is doing grand work for his Master and for his people. When North, a few months ago, he made a most favorable impression on the intelligent Christian people of New England by his addresses and conversation. The history of one of our missionaries to Africa has been printed at length in the Missionary. It is but a sample of the others, his associates, who, with their wives, have struggled up from the very bottom of the ladder, and have helped themselves far more than they have been helped up. It is this view which gives us our most solid ground for encouragement. Saul, the persecutor, becomes Paul, the apostle; darkness is not only overcome but is made light in the Lord; the resisting mass becomes the pervading leaven.

This, and the fact that, year by year, results appear to be more permanent and set on a more solid foundation of character and culture, give us not only hope but assured confidence in the work which the Lord has given us to do.

AFRICA.

At the time of our last annual meeting our first party of colored missionaries were on their way to the Mendi mission. They reached their field on the 30th day of November, having suffered only such discomforts by the way as are common to such as go down to the sea in ships. Soon after their arrival, Mr. Kirk and Mrs. Mair withdrew from the field in impaired health, thus leaving these new missionaries in sole charge. They entered upon the work with vigor, and we soon heard of preaching services in the chapel, Sunday and day schools re-organized, and careful examination of the property and the work made.

But they were too few in number for so large a field, and on the 8th of February we issued a call for two additional missionaries with their wives, to join this advance guard. The call was responded to from Fisk University. The story has been fully written of the promptness and the spirit in which the answer came from Andrew Jackson and Albert Miller and the Christian young women to whom they were engaged to be married, each saying, "Here am I, send me." On the 17th of February the young men were ordained to the gospel ministry, on the 18th were married, and on the 23d they sailed for Africa by way of England, reaching Sherbro Island on the 28th of March, where they were warmly welcomed by those who had gone before them.

It is only the labors and results of a first year, and a broken year at that, which we have to report at this time. They found the mission seriously crippled and run down. There had been no minister connected with it for some months, since the return of Mr. Billheimer and the death of Barnabas Root; the buildings had become dilapidated, and the supply of books, &c. for the schools almost exhausted. The outlook was somewhat discouraging at the very first; but they took hold of the work practically and hopefully, and we think their report of results is very satisfactory. The church at Good Hope, which had been almost disbanded, has been gathered not only, but 22 new members have been received on profession of their faith. Preaching services and Sunday-schools are also regularly held at Avery and Debia, and churches may soon be organized there. They have repaired such of the buildings as were most essential to the work, have opened schools at Good Hope, Avery and Debia, in which have been gathered 173 scholars, 12 of whom have boarded in the missionary home at Good Hope. It seems to our missionaries of the utmost importance that further provision should be made for the reception of native children into their homes at the other stations as well, to be under their constant supervision and care, and to be removed from the debasing influences of their heathen surroundings. Having themselves experienced the advantages of such training in our Southern schools, they desire to extend them to those whom they are sent to save. Can we authorize them to do this work, and to what extent shall we be furnished with the means to provide for it?

At Avery, the industrial work begun under the care of Mr. Burton has been prosecuted as vigorously as the circumstances have allowed. The mill and mill-shed have been repaired, and such supplies as have been necessary to its effective use have been sent on.

One of the great questions connected with this experiment has been, how will these missionaries of tropical descent endure the hot and malarial air of Africa? It was our hope that it would be shown that they were much more proof against these malign influences than those of our Caucasian race. And, so far as we have gone, we are able to say that our hope is realized. Nine adults and six children have been exposed to this trying climate nearly to the end of the wet season, which is the sickly season, and while they have all been touched by the chilling fingers and the hot breath of the African fever, it has passed over them more lightly than it has been wont to treat those of an alien blood. With one exception they have stood the test. Mrs. Dr. James died, after a short and severe illness, on the 19th of May.

It is our hope and our intention to reinforce and strengthen this work as fully as we may be able. We rejoice that we are not called to do it by the depletion of the ranks of our missionaries, and trust that we shall only have to consider the exigencies of an enlarging work.

It is the conviction of our missionaries that none of the stations at present occupied should be given up, but rather retained and strengthened. In that case, we hope to make them the point of departure for a mission more into the interior of Africa, and among those who are further removed from contact with both the elevating and degrading influences of so called Christian civilization.

But we need the means with which to deal more liberally with this mission, that the men and women who have given their lives to this work may not be crippled for want of mere mechanical facilities, or fail to use their energies most effectively. The rarest and the costliest article with which we have to deal is consecrated men and women. Do not let us sacrifice them to what can be bought with money.

The effect of sending these freedmen to their fatherland has been felt in a great awakening of missionary interest and zeal among the Southern people of that race, and especially in Hampton and at Fisk, from which students went directly to the foreign field. At the schools the students meet frequently to pray for the missionaries, and from the stations the missionaries write often to the students. We have no question but that there will be young men and women ready to our call for this work; many more than we can send for years to come.

THE INDIANS.

Our Indian work has been kept up about as during the preceding year. The necessity of making some changes in the Agencies in our nomination has thrown a large amount of unanticipated labor upon us. For there are not a large number of men of the required standing and character, with bondsmen by their sides, who are eager to go out to these remote agencies and comply with all the conditions precedent. Of those who apply or are recommended, a large proportion after careful inquiry are found to be deficient in some important requisite. Our only compensation for this rather thankless work is the hope that we are thus securing Christian men for these positions, who will not only deal fairly, but in the loving spirit of the Master, with those under their care.

Mr. Eells, our missionary at S'Kokomish, has continued his faithful work, and has received four members into the church, three of them Indian boys, who have given excellent proofs of their true piety. The Sunday-school work has been earnestly and successfully carried on. Mr. Eells has lately printed a little hymn book in the jargon spoken by the people, showing what they sing before they are able to use our English hymns.

The tribes under the care of Agents nominated by us are some of them showing an increasing interest in education year by year. One of them appropriated $6,000, out of their own funds, last year, towards building a school house. But the unsettled condition of Indian affairs, and the possibility of speedy removal at short notice, continues to rob these efforts of their rightful success, through this constant uncertainty as to the future.

The representatives of the various religious denominations had their annual conference with the Board of Commissioners in January, in which they expressed their conviction that the welfare of the Indians was largely bound up in these three recommendations:

"First—The extension of law over all the Indians, so as to provide for the safety of property and human life.

"Second—Legal provision for the common-school education of Indian children by the General Government, until such education shall be provided by the several States in which they reside.

"Third—Definite regulations to secure the Indians the possession of land in fee and in severalty in all practicable cases by titles properly guarded.

"The Convention regards these three things as of the greatest importance, indeed, as essential to the civilization of the Indians, and as calling for the action of Congress without longer delay. Further, the Convention would express grave doubts as to the wisdom of removing Indian tribes to the Indian territory, or to larger reservations, in cases in which the Indians are in a good measure prepared to abandon their tribal relationship, and to enter on civilized life. They should, at the least, have the option of remaining where they are subject to the conditions of citizenship, before they are compelled to remove to distant places, at the great hardship and suffering, and loss of health and life, which such enforced removal always involves. At the same time, this Convention is deeply impressed with the importance of all wise measures that look to early self-support of the Indians as citizens of our common country."

It is quite possible that we may be relieved from this responsibility before another year has passed. The question of the transfer of the Indians from the Interior to the War Department, which has been, and still is, in agitation, would of course wholly remove it from any responsible connection with religious bodies. The House of Representatives last winter passed a bill to make the proposed transfer; when this came before the Senate, the whole matter was referred to a joint committee, consisting of three members of the Senate and five members of the House, who are to investigate and report next January upon the expediency of the change. That committee has lately been in session at St. Louis, and our Association was, by invitation, enabled to make such statements as seemed advisable through its representative, the Secretary.

Meanwhile, we desire to put on record our clear conviction that the peace policy, so called, has by no means been a failure—that the record of the nine years last passed has shown a progress in civilization far beyond that of any preceding period of like duration—that agents nominated and appointed as at present, are far more likely to seek the welfare of their clients than those selected on the old plan—and that we should regard it as a long step in retreat if these people should be given over again to the care of a Department whose place is to be called in as a last resort, to kill and not to cure. If "the only good Indian is a dead Indian," put him in charge of the army. If the good Indian is the Christian Indian, let Christian men care for him, body and soul. Gen. Howard has said, as the result of his personal observation, that "wherever among the Indians there has been faithful teaching of the Scriptures, there have been most abundant and remunerative results in civilization."

THE CHINESE IN AMERICA.

We have been kept in active sympathy with these sojourners in our land by the very outcry which has been raised against them, and the abuse which has been heaped upon them. After having escaped the "perils of waters" on the way, and endured the "perils of robbers" as they landed, they have been compelled to meet "perils in the city and perils in the wilderness, and perils by the heathen" of our western coast, and if, by the fidelity of loving teachers, they have been led at length to call themselves the followers of Christ, they have met "perils by their own countrymen," even to being "beaten with rods."

Race antipathies are deeply planted and hard to overcome. It is a singular fact, that those who now claim this continent most loudly as against the Chinaman, and who were equally fierce in their opposition to the negro, are not its native but its immigrant population.

Meanwhile, the Chinaman works on quietly and patiently, and saves his six millions of dollars a year, while the honest "workingmen" who denounce him are drawing money for their support from protective unions. The Christian Chinaman has in addition to all this to bear the abuse and even the blows of his former friends and relatives. It is not strange that the tidings of such treatment should have reached the other shore, and prevented many from embarking for so unfriendly a land. The most authentic reports seem to show no increase in the Chinese population of the Pacific coast, but rather a gradual but steady diminution in their numbers.

Meanwhile, for another year, our work among them has gone steadily on. Eleven day schools have been maintained with an enrolled membership of 1,492. There are now 164 members in the Chinese Congregational Association. The Bethany Home has been maintained with increasing usefulness as a Christian home for these converted men. 75 have been hopefully converted during the year.

The various propositions which have been made in our halls of Congress in the interests of the exclusion, taxation and oppression of these men of the Malay race, as well as the wild cries of mobs and mob leaders on the Pacific coast, remind us that to be true to our traditions, we must protest loudly and persistently against the false principles which underly both the propositions and the cries. It is ours to stand up always and everywhere for the manhood of man, and for those equal rights which find their fullest recognition in the second great commandment of the law of God.

We can not pass this portion of our work without recording our indebtedness, as an Association, for this useful and successful work, to the Rev. Wm. C. Pond, Pastor of the Bethany Cong'l Church, in San Francisco, who has been our efficient superintendent in it for five years. Without his personal knowledge of the field, and his wisely directed enthusiasm in the work, we could have accomplished very little among this people. And this, especially, as the amount of money which we have felt at liberty to devote to this work has been so small. Certainly what we have given to it, has been made to go far and do much. Bro. Pond has at present 44 Chinese members of his own church. It is said that over 300 have been received into the Protestant churches of San Francisco. Here again we see the close connection between the school-work and the church-work, that the power of the Christian teacher is scarcely second to that of the Christian minister, and that the seed of the word sown in the school is the promise of a harvest to be gathered in the church.

There are many gratifying indications of the depth of piety and strength of Christian character which mark these converts from heathenism. Chief among them is one which we have already noted among the Freedmen, an intense longing and desire for the conversion of their own people in their native land. It is much to wish one's sins forgiven, and to lead a better and a purer life, but when the missionary spirit has taken possession of a soul, and its great longing is to carry this word of life to others, then we know that this is a Christian man, for the spirit of Christ is his.

We anticipate the best of results on this whole question of the Chinese in America, from the new Embassy to this country from that government, under the lead of Ambassador Chun Lan Pin, a gentleman of the highest learning of the Chinese schools, of large experience and wide travel, who, after locating consulates in this country and in Spain and Cuba, will be the resident minister in Washington. Nor is it of small consequence that the vice-minister will be the estimable Christian scholar, Yung Wing, a graduate of Yale, a Doctor of Laws, and to whose enlightened zeal the Chinese educational mission in this country owes its existence and favor with the home government.

FINANCES.

For the third time in annual succession your Committee is enabled to report that the year's expenditures have been kept within the year's income, and this, as the foregoing report has shown, without seriously curtailing any part of the work already in hand. We have received during the year $195,601.65, and now, after paying all expenses, we have in hand $7,522.19 to apply to the extinction of the debt.

It will be noticed that the receipts for current expenses have been somewhat less than those of the preceding year; and yet, in making this comparison two or three things are to be kept in mind. We have received no great legacies this year to swell the amount suddenly; and while our friends have, in the main, made their offerings for the debt, not designing at all thereby to lessen their gifts for the year's work, it would be very strange if the $17,904.92 in cash (and $6,950 in pledges) turned to that purpose, in both large and small sums, should not have somewhat diminished the volume of the main stream on the banks of which the great wheel stands which transmits its power.

Three years ago our debt was a little over $96,000. Two years ago it was diminished by about $3,000 to $93,000. Last year we were enabled to pay more than $30,000 of it, leaving a balance against us of not quite $63,000. This year we have received as direct offerings for the debt $17,904.92. We have saved for it from our income $7,522.19, and we hold pledges, chiefly conditioned on its speedy extinction, to the amount of $6,950. Our actual debt then, (Sept. 30) is $37,389.79, and when these pledges shall be redeemed will be further reduced to $30,439.79.

The Committee feel themselves called upon to recognize the good hand of the Lord upon them in this thing, and to rejoice that He has stirred up the hearts of His people to offer willingly after such a sort.

Among the most gratifying of all these offerings are those which have come up from the schools and churches of the South, to which we have been, and still are, ministering, and who, out of their exceeding poverty, have yet in gratitude and love done what they could to take away from us the burden of this debt. And even $30,000 of debt is a grievous burden, for your Committee have felt that they were not misinterpreting the wishes of their constituency, in judging that while it remains, in any part, we cannot enlarge our work. It would be very easy to extend in many directions on the basis of what has been accomplished in former years. We have the mills and the machinery, which we can not yet run up to the limit of their power and productiveness, because our capital is small, and we desire at the earliest practicable day to "owe no man anything."

We have practiced all the economy we have been able to in office and in field. We have made full and frank statements from time to time during the year as to our financial condition, when it was especially encouraging and when it made us somewhat fearful.

Our monthly reports of receipts have been exact, and distributed into separate accounts, so as to be easily compared and verified by every reader. We have, we think, shown our ability to use carefully and wisely the funds you have entrusted to us.

And now, we only plead, not for our own sakes, but for the sake of this most important work which you, the Lord's people, and the Lord Himself, have put into our care, that you will take away this last hindrance, and that right speedily, that we may go in and possess the land.

THE FREEDMEN'S MISSIONS AID SOCIETY, in England, has continued its active co-operation with us in our work among the Freedmen, with special reference to their preparation for the missionary work in Africa. An evidence of this was the hearty welcome given at Liverpool to the last band of missionaries who went in February and March from Nashville to Good Hope by way of England. Dr. White, its efficient Secretary, also succeeded in raising a considerable contribution toward the payment of their salaries; and a valuable box of books from the same source followed them to their field of labor.

In July, the Jubilee Singers returned to this country after an absence of two years. Under the management of President Cravath they have during the past year given concerts in Europe, having received a specially cordial welcome in the musical and social circles of Germany, and not least in the royal family. The war in Europe and the famine in India have naturally diverted attention and money into other channels, so that their net receipts have not been equal to those of former years. They have disbanded and returned to their various studies and pursuits, after a remarkable, and, as a whole, unusually successful career.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY.

The instructions of the Association at the last annual meeting, in regard to the publication of our missionary periodical, have all been carried out and with the best results. It has been enlarged and changed back to the magazine form. Its printing has been transferred from Hampton, Va. to New York. An advertising department has been added, which has already been made to cover the cost of enlargement and editorial work. The Secretary has been furnished with stated assistance in the editorial department, so that more time and attention in editing have been put upon the magazine, and he has been relieved from all care as to its details. Rev. Geo. M. Boynton has been secured for this service, and has proved himself possessed of admirable editorial gifts, so that with the increased amount of labor put upon it, our "American Missionary" meets, in a most satisfactory degree, the ideal of the Committee in regard to such a journal. We are more and more persuaded that this is our most efficient agency for reporting our work, and for communicating with our patrons and friends. It cultivates the soil out of which come our harvests of prayerful interest and of consecrated offerings.

THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

We should be ungrateful, did we not, as we have felt constrained to do for many years past, renew our expressions of gratitude to this Society for its generous aid, so freely given whenever we have needed it. It would be a sad day for every missionary enterprise of the country, if the churches and the Christian people of America should fail to keep this arsenal filled with ammunition, and with the power to distribute it among the soldiers of the cross, as they go forth to every clime, to do battle and to make conquests in the name of Jesus.

BEREA, HAMPTON AND FISK.

The direct receipts of these three institutions not coming to them through our treasury, are added to our income for the year, as so intimately connected with the Association in their origin and in their administration also, as to be properly included in a view of the entire work in which we and our constituency are engaged.

DETAILED REPORT.

FREEDMEN.

RELIGIOUS WORK.

While the interest has been kept up to a very good degree in all our churches, we are able to report five new churches organized: two in Kentucky, one in Georgia, one in Texas, and one in Alabama.

VIRGINIA.

HAMPTON.

Rev. Richard Tolman, the pastor, writes:

Six of our students united with the church by profession June 9th, the last Sabbath of the school-year, making twenty-seven who have joined us since November 1st, besides those who have connected themselves with other churches. It is several years since any Communion season has passed without some additions to the church. After Commencement, May 23d, two more of the graduating-class came out on "the Lord's side," so that all but four of the boarding-pupils of that class are hopefully Christian; and one of these four seems now "not far from the kingdom of God."

An interesting example of what Christian faith and perseverance may accomplish, is that of a colored brother connected with our printing office. About a year since, he proposed starting a Sabbath-school in a destitute neighborhood, but was told that it would be of no use. He determined to try. Beginning with three pupils, the number has constantly increased, until now he has a school of more than eighty deeply interested members. We need many such laborers in these harvest-fields.

The fifteen Indians who have lately joined the school have taken hold of study and of manual labor with commendable zeal, and give promise of becoming good teachers and guides of their race. One of them now shows evidence of Christian character. Their promptness and decision as to the duties required of them, were put to the test in reference to the use of tobacco, to which they were so strongly attached that, as one of them said:—"There are three things I love: I love God; I love Jesus; I love smoke." When asked if they would comply with the rules of the school, prohibiting the use of tobacco, after considering the matter awhile in silence, one of them gave an expressive sign that he would cut loose from tobacco; and then all the others gave the same significant pledge—a pledge which, their teacher assures us, they will never break.

NORTH CAROLINA.

DUDLEY.

A deep religious interest was reported in this church in the early summer. Backsliders were restored and seventeen united with the church.

McLEANSVILLE.

A letter from Miss Douglass describes the revival at this point:

Our protracted meeting is over, and it has, indeed, been a glorious time. Last Sabbath we had our communion season. Twenty-seven were added to the church, and two others were restored who have been wandering. Fifteen were baptized—of these, eight were recent converts. The others were fruits of a previous revival. After sermon at each meeting, the inquirers were invited to go into my rooms for instruction, while the meeting continued in the large room. My rooms were filled every night, and many were weeping who could not get in. There were very few unmoved in the house.

Ten of those who united with the church were from my Sabbath-school class. Fourteen others were heads of families. Seven infants were baptized, all from those families. Many little ones were interested; and I feel that the Lord gave me much work in caring for these lambs. The church is in a better state now than it has been for years. Those who needed discipline have most of them come back to duty.

Outsiders came in and made the meeting too noisy at times, but we had less confusion than usual when such crowds gather. Our own congregation were willing to abide by our rules, and they helped to restrain others.

And later comes the brief word:

"Five persons joined the church the last Sunday in June. Eighty-three communicants were present, all but three members of this church."

RALEIGH.

This church has shared with others in a revival blessing this year. Twenty were received to membership April 8th.

WILMINGTON.

The following is from the pastor of the church:

We see marked improvement in the character of those who have been longest members of the church. They hunger for truth for the purpose of living it, and their progress is, of course, steady and rapid. We are often thrilled by the rich experience as manifested by unconscious expressions in the prayer-meetings. We have received six new members during the year.

At the closing session of our Sabbath-school, five young men made short addresses. Their words were hearty and stirring, and expressed a deep satisfaction with what they had gained in the school, one of them adding modestly, "Not that I would have you think that I have learned so much of the Bible, for I don't know anything of any great account." All of these young men are a power for good in the city. Two others, members of the church, are not in town, but we believe they are living true lives elsewhere.

GEORGIA.

REVIVAL IN THE ATLANTA UNIVERSITY.

Rev. C. W. Francis.

We have never had more occasion for thanksgiving in this school than in the season just past, on account of the work of the Lord among us. A deep solemnity has pervaded the school since the opening of the term, and every week some have been coming to Christ. On account of the closing of schools in South Carolina, quite a number of the young men from the University were led to unite with college classes here this year, and nearly all these have been converted.

May we not believe that it was by special Divine leading that they were brought to this place at this time? There has been no interruption of regular work, and no special services have been held, but the Lord has blessed richly the ordinary means of grace, and in his own way has been gathering in the precious harvest. Five members of the junior class have been brought, as we hope, to Christ, and are seeking the best places and ways of serving Him. There are left only two or three, who are not followers of Christ, while most of those in the higher classes have already been brought in.

On the third Sabbath in June six young people united with the college church upon profession, and as many more will probably unite during the vacation with churches at their homes.

A WEEK'S RELIGIOUS DUTIES.

Mrs. T. N. Chase.

Sunday, two of our young men preach in an adjoining town. Quite a number go out to neighboring Sunday-schools, and return about eleven o'clock when our preaching service begins. In the afternoon, all meet for Sunday-school, which is superintended by the President. In a large school-building, of course each class can have a separate room, and so secure a delightful hour of quiet, uninterrupted Sunday-school work. In the evening, all assemble in a general prayer-meeting. In all the meetings I have attended here during these years, I do not recall ever hearing the remark, "Improve the time brethren," or any other expression of like import. Monday most of the school devote the time of one recitation—three-fourths of an hour—to Bible reading and study in classes. After school there is held a female prayer-meeting of a half hour, led by a lady teacher.

Wednesday evening is the regular church prayer-meeting, led by the pastor, attendance upon which is voluntary. The last half hour of school, Friday afternoon, is devoted to a prayer-meeting, led by the President, and attended by the entire school. This is the only meeting at which the day scholars are required to be present, and so is the most important of all the week. At its close almost every member of the school deposits in the box an envelope containing his regular weekly contribution toward paying the debt of the A. M. A.

A very profitable Bible meeting is held on Friday evening. Saturday evening is the teachers' prayer-meeting of a half hour. The best test of the religious interest is the number of voluntary students' meetings. Sunday evening, just before the general meeting of an hour, the young men always gather for another hour in a meeting of their own.

There are many other students' meetings, among both the young men and women, whose interest, and existence even, depend upon circumstances. Nearly every summer term these meetings multiply. As the pupils realize they are soon to leave this peaceful home, and for three months take on the responsibilities and trials of teachers, they seem impelled to a new consecration. Many, each year, go out to teach for the first time, and all feel it is a solemn undertaking. Another occasion for extra meetings is to plead for those so soon to leave us, and not yet in the fold.

This is a hasty view of what may be seen of our religious work. Eternity alone will reveal the number and effect of the private personal appeals, or of the pleading notes written to the timid ones.

SAVANNAH AND VICINITY.

Rev. R. F. Markham, our missionary in charge, gives a brief résumé of the work in Savannah and in the mission churches near.

For several months past, our Sabbath-school has been steadily increasing in numbers and interest. We have a very faithful and efficient class of teachers—twelve in number. We as much expect to see all our teachers in their places each Sabbath morning as to see the minister in the pulpit, and we are almost never disappointed.

The religious work of the A. M. A. in Savannah and the vicinity has never been in so prosperous a condition since I have been here as at the present. The increase in the congregations and the membership has been greater than any previous year. At Savannah, twenty-four have united with the church; fourteen children have been baptized. The Sabbath-school has more than doubled in numbers. Over two hundred are enrolled; the average attendance is about one hundred and sixty. Ogeechee Church, which is ten miles from Savannah, has received nineteen members. Brother McLean has the confidence and support of his people. He is doing a good work in the Sabbath-school. His wife is a good worker and a great help, especially in the Sabbath-school, where there are about fifty scholars. They also teach a day-school and a night-school.

Pilgrim Church, at Woodville, three miles west of Savannah, Rev. J. H. H. Sengstacke, pastor, has had an interesting work of grace in the Sabbath-school. Twenty-eight united with the church, mostly from the Sabbath-school, which has about seventy-five scholars.

East Savannah is two-and-a-half miles from the city—a little village of colored people. A few whites are there, who live by selling liquor to the colored people. There are nearly three hundred children in that vicinity. The A. M. A., by the assistance of a Boston friend, built a little church there. J. H. Stevens, a student in my theological class, started a Sabbath-school, and preaches to the people. The children are very wild, though some have bright intellects, and can make useful men and women; but they are as uncultivated as the children in the centre of Africa. Mrs. Markham, Hattie B. Markham and Mr. Floyd have been going out regularly every Sabbath to work in this school. Sometimes they have had eighty or ninety scholars, and the average has been about sixty. I can see a decided improvement in the conduct of the scholars. They come in and go out orderly, pay better attention, and begin to understand what a Sabbath-school is for; when they leave for home, they do not make such hideous noises, but go along the street more quietly. They have to be taught everything. There are thousands upon thousands of children in Georgia in the same condition. We hope soon to be able to organize a church at East Savannah, of twelve or fifteen members.

Belmont is four miles south-west from Savannah. The church here is supplied by Wilson Callen, a very faithful man of God. The work is gradually improving, both in the church and Sabbath-school.

Louisville, two miles south-west of Savannah, has a church of some twenty-five, and a Sabbath-school of about the same number. Brother Callen supplies this work also, and is growing in the confidence of the people, and his school and congregation are increasing.

MIDWAY CHURCH, LIBERTY CO.

Midway church, in Liberty Co., is about thirty miles from Savannah; Rev. J. E. Smith, a graduate of Atlanta University, is pastor. This church is in a healthy and prosperous state. There are now about two hundred and forty members. Here is a fine opportunity to do good, as will be seen by the following sketch from Rev. S. S. Ashley:

Not only is this field needy, but promising. A majority of the people, and those living about the old Midway Church, are colored. Many of the white landed proprietors are non-residents. Rice culture is the principal employment. The colored people are rapidly becoming land owners, and are remarkably successful in making their payments. Just now, their means are mostly consumed in this effort, consequently they can expend very little in improving their habitations; yet there is improvement in this respect. They are beginning to come out of the swamps and build by the roadside. As slaves, they were not allowed to dwell near the "big road"; therefore, the woods and the swamps seem to them more like home than the roadside. But without instruction they will not achieve much domestic improvement. In fact, they need instruction in every direction—in house-building, in road-making, in agriculture, in domestic economy, in the improvement of time, in business, as well as in schools and churches. The whole field is accessible to missionary labor. Very many desire instruction. They listen eagerly to kind, plain, Christian advice, and will travel many miles for the privilege. Certainly these are the marks of a good missionary field.

But to energize this prosperity, the meeting-house should be put into comfortable condition. It is a large but unfinished structure. In damp and chilly weather, it is uncomfortable—so much so, that the pastor doubts the propriety of holding, in the winter, meetings at night.

Again, the school-house should be removed to the road, beside the meeting-house, and enlarged. Its present situation is out of the way, and it is too small to accommodate the pupils.

I hope that you can aid in completing the meeting-house. If the building stands a year longer without attention, it will require repairs as well as finishing. A portable saw-mill would be a grand civilizing and missionary agency.

MACON.

The church building at Macon, as well as the Lewis High School building, was burned during the last year. These have been replaced with one substantial brick building. The upper story is for the church. The hall will seat about 450 persons and is neat and tasteful. This church was greatly blessed in connection with the Week of Prayer. Daily meetings were held for three weeks, and there were several conversions.

MARIETTA.

A church of twenty-one members was recognized by Council, Nov. 12, at Marietta, Ga. The place is a beautiful town of three or four thousand inhabitants, with a large colored population. Several young men have joined the new enterprise, and seem very much interested in it.

ALABAMA.

MONTGOMERY.

The following interesting sketches are from the pen of Rev. Chas. Noble, who has been an earnest worker at this place during the past year:

"PAUSES" IN PRAYER-MEETINGS.

We have 60 members on the ground whom I can find, and who seem to be quite as consistent as the average church members at the North. This, out of a list of 77, seems to me a pretty good showing. Half of the absentee list is accounted for by the former teachers who have not taken their letters, and students at Atlanta and Talladega. I have more reliable "prayer-meeting" members in proportion to our number than most pastors enjoy. "Pauses" in the prayer meeting have not yet been introduced. The majority of Christians who come to prayer meeting at all seem to take it for granted that they must take an active part in carrying it forward; and the majority, male and female, do so with great acceptance. They are free from the "Shame-facedness" of Northern Christians about religious activity; and have not yet fallen into any routine ways.

DEBT RAISING.

At the annual meeting of the church, in December, it was found that of the $100 pledged to the pastor's salary, only $25 had been paid; and that an old debt for sexton's services remained, amounting to $34. In the extra effort made to pay for the painting and repair of the church, and other expenses in spring and summer, these things had been neglected. It was a surprise, and, of course, a disagreeable one to many of the church; but there was a decided feeling that the amount ought to be raised at once, and not left to be a burden on the church any longer. A debt of $109 is as much to this people as some of the $50,000 debts, which Mr. Kimball has been helping churches North to clear away, are to them. Therefore, it seemed to me that the matter was one to be carefully and prayerfully managed. I appointed a meeting for the consideration of the matter, and opened it by reading Chaps. viii. and ix. of 2d Cor., and briefly explaining their teachings. Then we spent half an hour in prayer, the brethren bringing the burden right to the Lord in the simplest and most touching language, expressing their sorrow and self-reproach at having failed to make good their promises, and asking forgiveness and help. Then they talked the matter over, and decided to raise the amount at once by subscription, and the matter being presented to the church for two successive Sundays, the whole amount was raised by voluntary pledges. The spirit in which it was done was the most beautiful part of it. It was more than willingly done. The gifts were brought forward thankfully, joyously, and I never saw happier people in my life than those who joined in thanksgiving to God, when the whole amount was raised.

TALLADEGA—TWO ORDINATIONS.

Rev. George E. Hill, Marion.

I have just had the pleasure of attending two ordinations of colored men. These young men were recent graduates of Talladega College, and having only last week attended the examinations in the Theological Department of this institution, in charge of Prof. Andrews, I was prepared for at least a respectable appearance on their part. But the event exceeded expectation. In the first instance the examination of the candidate continued through two hours, and was very searching and thorough, the council consisting in part of three college professors. The young brother maintained his self-possession, and appeared almost as much at home in theology as if he had been a professor himself. Indeed, I may say of both these brethren, in all my remembrance of ordinations at the North, I have seldom seen a candidate for the sacred office appear better on the whole. It is truly inspiring to behold the work which such a college as this is doing for the colored race, not only in providing good schools and teachers, but in raising up an intelligent ministry, and in planting the right kind of Christian churches. Here, for example, at A., where we were the other day, there is the old established Episcopal church, for white folks, and, perhaps, a colored church or two, where "faith" is more insisted on than "works." A new order now comes in, which is at first looked upon with distrust as an innovation. A church is organized with eight or ten members. Preaching is statedly kept up by students from the college. The congregation steadily increases; and, in three years, partly through the exertions of the members, and partly by the kindly aid of the "Iron Company," a neat little chapel is built, with a miniature parsonage alongside. A pastor is called, and an ordination takes place, conducted with as much solemnity and decorum as if it were in the suburbs of New York or Boston. The people outside look on. Strangers are attracted in. Distrust gives place to respect. Shiftlessness and immorality are exchanged for industry and thrift.

ANNISTON.

Rev. E. P. Lord.

Last Sabbath I went up to Anniston, twenty-five miles away, where one of our students is in charge of the Congregational church. There have been twenty-one conversions in this church during the summer. I immersed nine, baptized nine by sprinkling, and received nineteen into the church. The little church building was crowded to its utmost capacity in the evening, hardly room enough being left upon the platform for the speaker. The church and parsonage adjoining, finished and painted with taste, clean and tidy inside and out, and the energetic and faithful pastor and his wife, with their earnest, quiet decorous people, remind one of a New England Village church. The contrast with most of the neighboring churches is very marked.

MARION.

Mr. Hill, the pastor, writes:

A Female Prayer-meeting has been commenced at the "Home," and promises well. The Teacher's Meeting is also held in our parlor every Friday night. Our evening meetings are well attended. We enjoy singing the "Gospel Hymns." The people almost all sing, and are not afraid to hear their own voices.

We had an interesting day last Sunday. Seven were admitted on profession and six children were baptized—a new thing here. The audience was the largest we have had, quite filling the church, and the floral decoration of the pulpit and its surroundings added to the effect.

Our Sabbath-school is flourishing. Mrs. H. and my daughter both have classes. A few Sabbaths since, I drew a map of Palestine on the blackboard, and proposed to the scholars to "go and do likewise." They have brought in twenty-five maps, some of which would do credit to any school at the North. There is a good promise for the future of the church in the children, many of whom already give evidence of a change of heart.

Last Sabbath I visited a mission organized, about a year since, by one of our church members, four miles from here. The average attendance is forty. I found an audience of seventy-five crowding the little school-house.

SELMA.

Mr. E. C. Silsby.

One interesting and instructive feature of our work is that of the Committee on Missionary Intelligence. This committee was organized during the pastorate of Brother Pope. Its work is to present at times reports of missions in this and other lands. On the occasion of this presentation the attention is certain to be fixed, and the matter of the papers is discussed for sometime afterwards.

Four new members have been received on profession; two heads of families and two young people. One has been received by letter. One of those uniting on profession—a man—had long been the subject of prayer by a wife, mother, sister, son and other friends, but at last the stubborn heart has yielded, and he is free. The Sabbath-school still continues in interest, and is growing in strength. I well remember that, a few years ago, when the Northern teachers who were laboring in the Sabbath-school went home for their vacation, we with difficulty secured a few to take their places; but now, superintendent, organist and teachers could be secured from resident members of the school.

The church is in charge of Brother A. J. Headen, a student from the Theological Department of Talladega College.

ATHENS.

Trinity Church has a flourishing missionary society, which contributed in February $16 for the support of colored missionaries in Africa. It has sustained during the year just closing, thirteen mission schools, in which over 700 have been taught.

LOUISIANA.

The past year has been one of peculiar prosperity and blessing with our churches in New Orleans and the little band of churches in the parishes. Hardly a church was passed by in the general visitation of the Holy Spirit. The result has been not only enlargement and the infusion of new life and vigor, but purification and a higher standard of Christian faith and holy living. New churches have been organized, and the brethren, with real missionary spirit are "prospecting" for a larger and richer field of labor. Appeals still remain unanswered for chapels and ministers in districts where the harvest is already ripe.

INCIDENTS IN CONNECTION WITH THE REVIVAL IN NEW ORLEANS.

You will rejoice to hear of the good work in the Central Congregational Church of New Orleans. The interest has been sufficient to bring an unusual number every night for four weeks to our prayer-meeting. One evening, after the pastor had taken nearly the usual time, he called for brief testimony from Christians. Fifty-three responded in the limited half hour. The fruit first gathered in was from among the older students of the school, who were not already professing Christians. As I have heard our teachers talk of this scholarly young man, and that promising young woman, coming over to the Lord's side, I knew very well what a burden of prayer and effort was lifted from their hearts and hands.

The third week of our meetings a younger class seemed interested. Now, the older people are being reached. Friday evening a man came in late to escort his wife home. Saturday he came early, and at the very first opportunity was on his feet, saying, "For forty years I hadn't thought I had a soul till I came in here last night. Help me to find Jesus." He went forward, fell upon his knees and was so penitent it did not seem strange that that very night the publican's God sent him "to his house justified." As he met our pastor the next morning in church, he exclaimed, "Mr. Alexander, you convinced me, but Jesus saved me." It would do a stoic good to look upon his beaming face and see what grace has done for that man.

It seems to me that the most interesting feature of the A. M. A. work in New Orleans is its leavening influence upon Roman Catholicism. I was talking, after service one evening, with a beautiful girl who had been forward for prayers, and whose face wore a genuine look of deep contrition. On asking her if she attended church here regularly, she replied, "No; I go to the Catholic Church." Another girl was sitting beside a member of our family one evening, when a boy behind whispered to her, "Don't you ask for prayers! if you do, I'll tell the priest!" I hear that a large number in the school are professed Catholics, but are allowed to attend on account of the superior instruction.

TENNESSEE.

At Nashville, the Union Church is composed almost entirely of the students of Fisk University. A good feeling has been manifested.

At Chattanooga, the church is in a good condition; the Band of Hope prosperous; a mother's meeting has been held once a month and the Sabbath-school numbers 175.

At Memphis, the church has passed in safety and triumph through its financial straits, deficiencies have been made up, current expenses provided for, and a small surplus is on hand for the summer demands.

KENTUCKY.

In March last, Berea reported an interesting revival in progres with some twenty conversions.

CONFERENCES.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE SOUTH-WESTERN CONFERENCE.

Rev. W. S. Alexander.

The South-western Conference is composed of fourteen Congregational churches, of which twelve were represented at our annual meeting.

The reports from the churches showed very clearly that the past year had been one of marked activity and spiritual prosperity. Several churches, as the Central, in New Orleans, and St. Mark's, in Terrebonne, have been blessed with revivals of great power. Other churches have been cutting off dead branches, and putting themselves in condition for better service. The present membership of the churches of the Conference is 806. There have been added on profession during the year (ending April 1st, 1878,) one hundred and thirteen, and four by letter. Forty-seven adults and eighty babies have been baptized.

The church of Brother Clay (one of the veterans and pioneers of Congregationalism in Louisiana), in Terrebonne, has passed through joyful and glorious experiences. The church has been thronged for days and weeks. Night after night the earnest truths of the Gospel were preached, and night after night "mourners" crowded the anxious seats, crying for mercy. The people came from long distances, five and seven miles. God put honor upon His word, and many have been converted, and still the good work goes on. Pastor Clay's heart is filled with joy and thankfulness.

Among the topics considered at the Conference were the following:

Revivals: The best method of promoting and conducting them. Education: The demand of the hour; how shall we meet it? Faith: Its nature; how can we secure greater faith? Its joys and its triumphs. What more can we do to reach the people with the Gospel?

These questions were discussed with vigor and interest. Of course, no speeches had been prepared in advance, and I was surprised at the real excellence of the addresses. Mistakes in grammar were sometimes made, and there were not many classical allusions, but the speeches had the true ring, and good will come of them.

ORDINATION.

On Friday evening, Mr. Homer Jones, a member of the church at New Iberia, but a resident at Lake Piegneur, having passed a faithful examination before the Conference regarding his Christian experience, his religious belief, and his ability to preach, was ordained as an Evangelist.

Bro. Jones is a warm-hearted Christian, and will make an able and successful minister. He has served the churches faithfully for two years or more without compensation. He owns a small farm of eighteen acres on the shore of the beautiful Lake Piegneur. His worthy wife was for a short time a student in Straight University. He expresses his willingness to leave his beautiful home, and go anywhere, even to Africa, where God may call him.

FAREWELL MEETING.

Friday morning was devoted to a "farewell prayer-meeting." It was a most tender and impressive scene. As one after another spoke, "the fire burned"; every eye was wet with manly tears, and when the entire Conference rose and joined hands, and they sang or chanted an old refrain, peculiar to themselves, beginning "Good-by, and shake hands," and we entered into covenant with God and with each other to go forth to another year of labor and self-denial, those dear brethren, in the excess of religious emotion, laughed and cried together. Thus was our meeting of 1878 brought to a close. The good pastor at New Iberia said: "Such a light was never kindled here before."

THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

Rev. Chas. Noble, Montgomery.

The Alabama Conference met Friday evening, March 29th, in the college chapel at Talladega, the exercises opening with the annual sermon, by Rev. Mr. Ash, of Mobile, and an address of welcome to the delegates, by Prof. Lord. Rev. Mr. Andrews read a paper of very great interest, on the "Mission of Congregationalism in the South." Other papers were read, on "How to Develop Benevolence in our Churches," by Rev. Fletcher Clark, of Selma; on the "Relation of Talladega College to our Church Work," by Prof. Lord; and on the "Mission of the Young Ministers in the South," by Rev. P. J. McEntosh—himself one of those young colored men who have gone out from Mr. Andrew's teaching to work among their own people.

The reports from the churches showed a very encouraging condition of things. One new church has been organized during the year, making a total of thirteen within the bounds of the State. All are, at present, supplied with ministers. Almost all reported additions on profession of faith, and evidence of special presence of the Spirit. Though it has not been a year of remarkable revivals, it has been one of hopeful and vigorous growth. A great deal of missionary activity was reported. Talladega College sustains twenty-five Sabbath-schools; Montgomery and Selma four each; and others are not behind, according to their means and opportunities. It is certainly a suggestive and encouraging fact that, in the very heart of Alabama, a body of men could come together so full of enthusiasm for Puritan ideas, and should, without exception, report that their hold upon the communities in which they labor is manifestly strengthening.

The Sunday-school Convention opened Monday night, with an address on "The object of Sunday-school effort, winning souls," by Rev. George E. Hill, of Marion; followed by a lecture on the "Geography of the kingdom of Judah," by Rev. G. W. Andrews. Tuesday, Mr. Clark, of Selma, gave a Bible Reading on Faith; Prof. Lord taught the lesson for the following Sunday; Mr. Hickok opened the question box, and gave a variety of helpful answers; and the delegates from the different Sunday-schools made their reports. These showed that the work of our churches rests on a good foundation, in numerous live, growing Sabbath-schools; and that, in trying to save as many as possible of the present generation, the men and women of the next thirty years are not forgotten.

Tuesday night, the Theological Institute began with a very elaborate paper on the "Relation of Mental Philosophy to Theology," by Rev. D. W. Hickok. Wednesday, we were treated with examinations in Smith's O. T. History, and the Psalms, conducted by Prof. Andrews and Mr. Hickok, and a paper on "Future punishment," by Rev. Mr. Hill. Thursday, there were plans of sermons offered for criticism by Mr. Clark and Mr. Hickok; a paper on "Joseph Cook," by Mr. Noble; and an examination on the "Patriarchal Period," by Mr. Andrews; closing with a free conference of workers in the evening.

The Central South Conference of Congregational Churches met Nov. 9th in Atlanta, Ga. The meeting was very spirited, though the attendance was not large. The narrative of the state of religion was, on the whole, very encouraging. Prof. Bennett, of Fisk University, occupied one evening in giving an account of the National Council at Detroit, and the Annual Meeting of the A. M. A. at Syracuse. Mr. Clark was ordained in connection with the meeting of conference.

TEMPERANCE.

While temperance revivals, under various auspices—of men and women, of ribbons red and blue—are noted through the land, our Southern field is not neglected. In many of the communications from our schools and churches are references to the increase of a temperance sentiment and an abstinence practice, here in a church and there in a school; here in the reformation of dissipated lives, and there in the pre-occupation of the minds of the young. We group together on this page a few of the cheering words that have come to us.

WOODBRIDGE, N. C.—"A wave of the Gospel temperance revival has reached Woodbridge. Brother Peebles printed two large pledges, one for the 'Band of Hope,' and the other the 'Murphy Pledge.' He also promised to print all the names that would sign either pledge, and to-day there are upon the chapel walls the names of eighty under the Band of Hope pledge, and it is expected soon to have fifty names under the other. Already more than half that number have signed."

SAVANNAH, GA.—"Last Sunday evening the school gave a temperance concert. The programme contained many passages of Scripture condemning the use of wine and strong drink, also showing the terrible effects and the final consequences of its use. In addition to the Bible showing of the matter, we had declamations, dialogues, recitations, music, and remarks by the pastor, all pertaining to the same subject. All our classes (except one of very little children) were represented. We were almost proud of our scholars, they performed their parts so well, and we had given them very little time for preparation. We had a crowded house, many stood about the doors, and many others left, unable to gain admittance. We hope that good may result from the effort, as intemperance presents formidable obstacles to the progress of our work here."

WOODVILLE, GA.—"Our Band of Hope consists of both adults and children. This society is working hard to save men from a drunkard's grave, and hell. It has much opposition to overcome. The rum-sellers and whisky-drinking church people are its worst enemies."

TOUGALOO, MISS.—"I think there is not one in the school who has not signed the pledge. They came in gradually, till last week one who has stood out all these months, came and put his name on the list of total abstainers. He said: 'You all got away with me at the meeting last night, and I am going to sign the pledge, for I cannot teach others to do what I will not do myself.'"

MEMPHIS, TENN.—"For the past thirteen weeks the Murphy temperance movement has been very successful among the white people of Memphis. A few earnest workers, seeing the need of a like effort among the colored people here, inaugurated a series of meetings at the Second Congregational Church. From the first there has been a very decided interest manifested, and the meetings are productive of great good, both directly and as a means of awakening thought on this important subject. Some two hundred in all have signed the pledge, and new names are added at every meeting."

BEREA, KY.—"For more than two months we have had weekly meetings on the subject of temperance, attended by large audiences, and securing more than a thousand names to the Murphy Pledge. The moral effect of the movement is strengthened by the fact that each pledge is made whilst invoking the assisting grace of God, and is accompanied by reading the Scriptures, and Christian song. Taking this one step in the right direction is a preparation for a complete surrender to Christ."

GRENADA, MISS.—"We organized a Temperance society early in our work here, and it has never died out. Several years ago, we gave the control into the hands of the young people, being only members, for service, when needed. They have changed names, and banners, and badges, more than once—just now it is blue ribbon—but the object has always been the same."

WOMAN'S WORK AMONG WOMEN.

No organized arrangements have been made for directing the energies of the cultured and Christian women of the North towards their needy sisters in the South. A few efforts in this direction have been made with marked success by the ladies connected with some of our schools and churches. Other efforts on the part of Northern ladies in the support of female missionaries in connection with our work have been attended with most happy results. As an illustration we subjoin a letter from one of these lady missionaries:

Miss Hattie Milton, Memphis.

My first step was to become acquainted with the people and secure their confidence, which had to be accomplished in various ways; sometimes by taking a great interest in the children, or by giving the mother assistance or advice about her work. I reach a great many through my sick ones.

Some little Sabbath school girls in Crete, Ill., sent us a box of bedding and clothing, which has been a great help in my work; also, my friends at Romeo, Mich., sent a box of clothing, toys, books, and material for my sewing-school, all of which has been a God-send to me, as I find some very destitute families. The city does nothing for the poor colored people, so my opportunity is all the greater for doing good.

It is astonishing how little these people know about the Bible, although they have attended church for years. Those who cannot read find it so hard to understand the preaching, and those who could read a little to them 'could not give the understanding,' as they say. I endeavor to visit them at such hours as not to interfere with their work, and often read and explain the Bible to a woman while she proceeds with her sewing or ironing; however, some insist on laying aside work, saying, "We must give our whole attention to the word of God, when we do have a chance to hear it"; and it is quite affecting to have them thank the kind heavenly Father for sending some one to teach them ways they knew not of, and pray to become better women for having received the instruction.

The missionary and those who send her do not lack for prayers from the colored people. I have a Mothers' Meeting once a week, where I endeavor to teach them from the Bible their duties as mothers and wives; also a sewing-school, where we teach the girls how to cut and make garments, which they buy, when finished, at a low price. I have had so much to do in this part of the work, that one of the teachers has kindly assisted me.

I have over fifty families on my visiting list, and have called on several others and am received cordially by nearly all. I am well pleased with the work, and ought never to cease being thankful for the good and wonderful way in which the Lord has opened this field of labor for me.

COMMENCEMENT AT HAMPTON INSTITUTE.

The special feature of public interest this year was the attendance of the President of the United States, with his private Secretary, Rogers, and General Devens, and Mr. McCrary of the Cabinet. A large party went, also, from New York and Boston on this most enjoyable and instructive excursion.

The trustees were in session on Wednesday, the 22d, on which day also was held the first meeting of the graduates of Hampton Institute. There were assembled in the beautiful "Whittier Chapel," on the upper floor of Virginia Hall, a large representation of the 277 who had gone out, most of them as teachers of their race. Of that whole number, not a complaint has been made. They have become good and useful citizens, maintaining the high moral tone of Hampton, and evidencing that growth in character which is the best witness to the existence of a true life within. Says the correspondent of the Springfield Republican:

"All this was abundantly manifest by their general bearing on this occasion, the prompt organization of their meeting, the dignity and good sense of their presiding officer, a negro black as night, the secretary likewise, but models of courtesy and tact, their self-possessed and orderly manner of conducting their business in a large presence of trustees, teachers, and visitors, in the accounts they gave of their work, their trials, their methods, and successes."

Early on Thursday morning the Presidential party arrived, and were welcomed by a salute from the guns of Fortress Monroe. With other guests, they were escorted over the farm to the new barn, 100x150 feet in size, and covering the stables, the agricultural and other machinery, blacksmith shop, etc. The cash balance against the farm for the year is $326.03. The printing-office shows a credit balance of $400. The students have earned during the year $12,236.75 in the varied industries, which, though not profitable in the net pecuniary result, are among the most important educational agencies of the institution; for the knowledge of practical work, and the ability to perform intelligent labor, are among the most important attainments for the colored students, both as citizens and as teachers.

The catalogue shows 332 pupils on the roll, of which 202 are young men, and 130 young women. The graduating class numbered 57. In the examinations of Thursday morning, the teachers showed the tact and thoroughness for which they have been always noted, and the results in the intelligence and interest of their pupils were most gratifying.

The new class of fifteen Indians attracted much attention. Their history has been already given. The negro students take very kindly to their new friends, and there is promise of entire harmony between the two races. Proposals are in discussion between General Armstrong and the Government at Washington that include the education of more Indians, and the co-education of an equal number of Indian girls, so that the experiment may not be one-sided in its future developments.

We abbreviate from the admirable letter of an editor of the Baltimore American his account of the commencement exercises;

"At 1:30 P. M. a procession, headed by the Normal School brass band, was formed on the lawn. President Hayes and the trustees of the school took the lead, while the invited guests and visitors followed after, in rather irregular order. Seats were reserved on one side of the hall for the pupils of the school. The platform was occupied by distinguished visitors, with President Hayes as the central figure. The audience was composed of the most intelligent and highly cultivated people of Hampton and the surrounding country, reinforced by the élite of Norfolk, who came in two excursion steamers. Nearly all the educated people of this section of Virginia are friendly to the Hampton Normal School, and take much pride in its success.

"Four essays were read by members of the graduating class, and four speeches were made. The subjects discussed were of a practical nature, and were treated with vigor and originality.

"I can barely mention the speeches that were made in Virginia Hall after the graduates received their diplomas. Rev. Dr. Strieby, of New York City, President of the Board of Trustees, briefly reviewed the work of the year, and commended the spirit of liberality shown by the Virginia Legislature in providing for the support of the Institution. After he had concluded, brief addresses were made by President Hayes and Attorney General Devens, expressing their deep interest in the education of the Freedmen, and their approbation of the things which they had seen and heard. Thus ended another memorable day for Hampton.

BEREA COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

Commencement at Berea, Ky., exhibits, in the centre of a Southern State, the complete solution of the vexed negro question. In the large tabernacle, on the 3d inst., was an audience of two thousand people, rich and poor, white and colored, ex-masters and ex-slaves, sitting where they could find seats, without distinction, and with the kindest feelings. On the large platform sat in the rear the more advanced students, about half white and half colored; in front of them a choir of twenty singers, selected, evidently, with no thought of complexion; at the right a brass band of performers of various shades; in front of all a score of professional men, with their wives, among whom were several colored preachers; outside was a mixed crowd of five hundred or more.

To this crowd twenty orations and essays were delivered by sixteen young men and four young ladies, of whom fourteen were white and six colored. This was originally a white school, but thoroughly anti-slavery. When a few months after emancipation, a couple of colored youths were admitted, half the white students left immediately. But the vacancy was soon filled with colored students; and eventually the white students returned, and the trouble was over. The whole question seems to turn on the learning of one simple lesson—that contiguity with a free man is no more disagreeable than contiguity with a slave. The colors are mixed in all Southern society. A little change in the mixture has here occurred, and that is all.

The college campus, in which are all the college buildings except the Ladies' Hall, consists of forty-five acres covered with native forest trees. Under the shade of these trees, during the intermission, two or three hundred groups spread and consumed their basket dinners. And, in the more retired parts, a thousand horses were sheltered from the burning sun.

The afternoon exercises consisted of a rousing address by Prof. Dunn of Hillsdale College, Mich., on the conflicts of civilization, and a statement from President Fairchild to the effect that the annual number of students is about 275—males, 145; females, 128. Thirty-one are in the college department, and over a hundred are qualified to teach a common-school. Probably sixty or more will teach during the long summer vacation.

COMMENCEMENT.

The commencement exercises of Fisk University began on Sunday, May 19th, at eleven o'clock A. M. Addresses were made before the Society for the Evangelization of Africa, by Professors Spence and Chase. From this Society already have gone forth four young consecrated souls to bear the light of the Gospel and civilization to the perishing ones on the west coast of Africa. At three P. M. the baccalaureate sermon was preached by Rev. H. S. Bennett.

On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, commencing at 9.30 o'clock, examinations were held in all the departments of the University, and were, on the whole, unusually satisfactory.

On Monday evening the Common-school Normal Exhibition took place, at which time those who have completed that course were granted certificates of ability to teach in the common-schools. Tuesday evening the Union Literary Society held its ninth anniversary. The exercises were unusually interesting, especially the debate, "Should the colored people of the United States migrate to Africa." On Wednesday evening the Senior Preparatory and Higher Normal Exhibition took place. Six young men were admitted to college, and three young ladies secured the Higher Normal diploma.

On Thursday, College Commencement day, the interest of the week culminated. At an early hour the chapel of the University began to be filled, until all available space was occupied. The audience room was tastefully and elaborately decorated. At eleven o'clock the exercises commenced with the chorus, "Hail, Festal Day," well rendered by the University choir, after which prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Baird, of Ohio. Mr. H. S. Merry, one of the two graduates, then delivered his oration. The manuscript of Mr. Miller, the other graduate—now absent as Missionary to Africa—not having arrived as expected, extracts from letters recently received by various members of the University were read instead. These letters breathed forth a spirit of zeal and devotion, and a courage unabated, even in the presence of the obstacles and difficulties with which he must daily combat, thus showing that his was not a mere romantic sentiment, but a deep, controlling principle.

Mr John H. Burrus, candidate for the Master of Arts degree, read a carefully prepared thesis on "American Citizenship."

Rev. A. J. Baird, D. D., of Nashville, then delivered the Commencement Address, which was full of wholesome practical advice, interspersed with happy illustration. After which the degree of A. B. was conferred upon Messrs. H. S. Merry and A. P. Miller, and the degree of M.A. upon Mr Jno. H. Burrus and Mrs. Virginia Walker Broughton. After a few pertinent remarks by Prof. A. K. Spence, Dean of the Faculty, a shield, bearing in golden letters upon a blue field the parting words of one of our missionaries, which have been unanimously adopted as the motto of our institution—"Her sons and her daughters are ever on the altar"—was suspended upon the wall of the chapel amid sounds of hearty applause. The benediction was then pronounced by Rev. L. N. Merry.

In one hour, professors, students of boarding department and invited guests assembled in the dining hall to partake of a carefully prepared collation. After all had partaken heartily, remarks were interchanged by invited guests, professors and students. Thus pleasantly closed the most prosperous and eventful year in the history of the institution, with a clear gain of thirty-five per cent. in attendance over last year. On the day after commencement, the 24th, the Union Jack floated from the tower of Jubilee Hall, in honor of the birthday of Queen Victoria, and significant of the close relation the institution sustains to its friends in Great Britain.

EXAMINATIONS AND COMMENCEMENT.

REPORT AND COMMENTS BY A GEORGIA EDITOR.

(From the Macon Telegraph and Messenger.)

For several days the Board of Visitors, appointed by the Governor to the State University, have been diligently attending the recitations of the several classes of this colored seat of learning, and are greatly pleased with what they have seen.

The pupils read Greek and Latin, demonstrated problems in mathematics, discoursed upon international law and the Constitution, recited history, geography and grammar, and in short, pursued successfully the curriculum of our highest schools.

Thirty-seven Alumni have gone forth from the University, thirty of whom are engaged in teaching, four are ministers or pastors of churches, two are mothers of young families, and one has deceased. It is a noteworthy fact, also, that every graduate is a professor of religion.

The resources of the University are derived from the annual appropriation of $8,000 made by the State, the donations of the American Missionary Association, amounting in the past year to $1,615 28, and one permanent scholarship of $300. Board per month, including tuition, room, fuel, lights and washing, is only twelve dollars, hardly sufficient to cover bare expenses, and certainly not affording one cent of revenue.

The students are required to sign a pledge to abstain from the use of liquor and tobacco; they enjoy the advantages of an excellent miscellaneous library, which contains some illustrated volumes and standard works very rare, and of great value. It was for the most part the gift of the late R. R. Graves, Esq., of New York, and contains 5,000 volumes.

On Tuesday, His Excellency, General A. H. Colquitt, was pleased to spend the morning in attendance upon the examinations of the University, and expressed himself highly gratified with the progress made by the pupils. At the close of the day's exercises, President Ware invited him to address the assembled school. The Governor responded, in one of his emphatic, eloquent, sensible and touching talks, which was listened to with breathless attention, and repeatedly elicited unbounded applause. His advice to the pupils was paternal and faithful, while as a Christian he did not fail to point out to them the value and supreme necessity of the salvation of their immortal souls. It was an address that reflected more credit upon our worthy and popular chief magistrate than the grandest oration pronounced before the most august assemblage in the land. After he had concluded, several members of the Board of Visitors were invited to make remarks. Among those who responded were Judge W. D. Harden and Rev. T. G. Pond.

The exercises of the University of Atlanta closed June 27th, with the usual commencement programme, and the delivery of diplomas and certificates to fifteen graduates.

The exercises over, President Ware, after a short, but singularly appropriate address, delivered the diplomas and certificates of scholarship to fifteen graduates. Thus ended the examinations and commencement of the Atlanta University.

We cannot, in all candor, pass on without again commending this institution to the good will and sympathy of the white people of Georgia. It is conducted upon proper and conservative principles. Its president and corps of instructors are honest, faithful and capable. Its pupils well behaved and exemplary. Its influence, we fully believe, will be for good to the African race, and it is to be hoped that the State will ever continue to bestow her patronage upon a foundation which is doing more than any other to elevate and bless the African race, which is destined to form an important element in the future politics and government of the country.

The various departments designated by the name Talladega College, are so closely interwoven that any distinct mention of the workings of one must contain facts closely related to the others.

The Literary Department includes the various grades, from the elementary to the higher Normal course, the latter requiring three years for its completion. The studies pursued include in mathematics, University Algebra and Geometry; in science, Physical Geography, Physiology, Natural Philosophy and Astronomy, English Literature, Mental and Moral Philosophy, etc., with the theory and practice of teaching. Its students have accomplished much in teaching throughout the State. In seven years, according to their reports to the principal, these students have taught about five hundred day-schools, with fifteen thousand scholars. At the same time they have organized Sabbath-schools, and taught in them over twenty thousand scholars.

There are in attendance this year two hundred and fifty students, a much larger number than ever before, and there is every indication of an increase the coming year. The students, also, are taking a personal pride in bringing back the best scholars from their summer schools. One young man, having failed to collect any funds from his summer school in Georgia, started with his most advanced pupil on foot, their satchels upon their backs. Walking, riding in chance carts, and helped on by railroad conductors, who were evidently influenced to surprising kindness by the spirit of the Master, they reached this place. Incited by the enthusiasm of this young man, three more have followed him from his distant field of labor. From Mississippi, another young man brought back two. They walked about one hundred miles, and are now paying their way in school by labor on the college farm. Both have begun earnest Christian lives, and are soon to unite with the church.

All the young men of the college are organized into a battalion of cadets for physical culture. Their government is conducted by means of this organization, its officers being held responsible for the conduct of the members, and being expected to set an example of manliness and courteous deportment. We find this to be one of the most potent factors of their moral as well as physical development. At the close of the last school year, the Industrial Department was decided upon. About three thousand dollars have already been received, and work in some of the branches begun. A printing press was secured, and six students have learned a useful trade, and by its means are paying their way in school.

Work upon the farm was begun in September. In October one hundred and sixty acres were bought, in addition to the thirty acres already owned by the college. Our most intelligent citizens say that no other enterprise for the benefit of the colored people has ever aroused so much interest among them as the Agricultural Department.

In the Girl's Industrial School, sixteen young women are earning, wholly or in part, their board and tuition; while, at the same time, learning ways and methods which will make hundreds of homes brighter and happier.

If the colored people are to be elevated, in no class is education more necessary than in the ministry. To meet this great want, a Theological Department was organized in connection with the college in 1872. Four young men constituted the first class, three of whom are now in the ministry. The number of pupils last year was twenty-seven; at present it is nineteen. The decrease is owing to the requirement of a higher standard in literary training. The colored people are naturally theologians and Bible students. Three distinct lines of study are pursued, all of which have special reference to practical Christian work. (1) To make the pupils familiar with the facts of the Bible. (2) To establish them in a system of Christian theology. (3) To acquaint them with the best methods of Christian work. Twenty-five Sabbath-schools are carried on by the students. Six of these have grown into churches, the young men acting as their pastors. Sabbath-school Conventions, and various other kinds of Christian work, are conducted by the students, often assisted by teachers from the college. This department has a library of over eight hundred volumes.

Instructors—Rev. G. Stanley Pope, Principal, Teacher of Bible and Moral Philosophy; D. I. Miner, Treasurer and Business Manager, Teacher of Higher Mathematics; S. L. Emerson, Preceptress and Matron; Kate K. Koons, Teacher of Latin, Natural Science and Vocal Music; Orra Angell, Teacher of English Branches, History and Instrumental Music; Mary H. Scott, Teacher in Preparatory Department; Dora Ford, Teacher in Primary Department; Mrs. G. S. Pope, Mrs. D. I. Miner—Sewing Department.

Students—Normal Course, 35; Intermediate, 93; Primary, 65; Total, 193.

The attendance in the Normal and Intermediate Departments, has been sixty per cent. larger than last year. The ladies' hall has been full, and some are compelled to occupy a room in the mansion. The young men's dormitories have been more than full, so that we have been obliged to put up some rough barracks, for the accommodation of twenty young men. Before the building could be finished half the rooms were taken. Recitations were heard in Professor Miner's office and private sitting-room, as well as in the public sitting-room at the ladies' hall. Letters were continually coming in asking for work with which to pay board. One young man walked fifty miles, with his trunk on his back, to get here. There ought to be means furnished us to help all such "tramps."

The school will accomplish the work intended by its founders, when it shall send out each year a class of well-trained teachers, who will build up good schools and churches. It is not proposed, at present, to enter upon a higher course of training than is given in our best Normal schools.

We are expecting to cultivate seventy or eighty more acres than was attempted last year, and, with better cultivation and the blessing of God, it is hoped we shall produce as much corn, hay, potatoes and vegetables as we consume during the year, even if there should be no surplus to sell. On April first we had over sixty acres of corn planted. During the winter term we have had forty-six young men working for half their board. The principal work in January and February was preparing wood for a year to come; but since the 1st of March, the farm and garden have taken all the labor.

We are hoping gradually to work into crops which will occupy less ground, and still be more remunerative than corn and potatoes. To this end, last fall, we commenced in a small way with strawberries, by setting some two thousand plants, which are doing remarkably well. From these, we expect to increase till we have several acres in strawberries. Being on the line of the Illinois Central and New Orleans Railroad, we have direct communication with a good Northern market for such fruit. The prime want of the farm is fences. If there was rail timber on the place, we would soon have them; but such timber is scarce here, and lumber must be obtained for this purpose from the pine region, fifty or sixty miles south of us. Much is lost every year, in consequence of the exposed condition of our crops.

Our house and laundry work is nearly all done by the girls, their work being changed every month, as for example: a girl who was last month in the laundry is in the sewing-room this month, the next is sweeping and dusting, the next washing dishes, etc. Our sewing department has only been in existence a part of the year, and we can hardly tell how it will pay financially. The girls have made some bedding and done other sewing that was needed; have made and sold some shirts. If materials are donated for sewing, I know we can accomplish very much.

Students.—College Course, 24; College Prep., 3; Law, 17; Theological, 11; Normal, 118; Primary, 114. Total, 287.

The Institution was incorporated June 25th. 1869, and the first school building was completed in February, 1870. Between three and four thousand have been enrolled as students in the University during the eight years of its existence.

The courses of study in this Institution include in the Academic Department, the Collegiate, the Normal, and the Preparatory; and in the Professional Department, the Theological and the Law. We have a preparatory course, that we may secure better material for the higher courses. In the Normal course special attention is given to those studies which will furnish young men and women with the education needed in the various branches of business life open to them, and which especially will qualify them as teachers, for which there is, and must continue to be, a great demand. In the Collegiate Department—which includes, among other studies, the higher Mathematics, Mental and Moral Philosophy, and Latin—a higher grade and wider scope of studies will be added so soon as there is a demand for them. The school is yet in its infancy, and the number of those who are fitted to pursue to advantage the highest grade of studies is, of course, very limited.

LAW DEPARTMENT.

An able corps of Professors has been secured. Jurists of reputation and successful practice at the bar of Louisiana have kindly offered their services, with but little hope of adequate compensation, and every facility is provided for young men of talent, who are attracted by the profession of the law, to fit themselves for honorable and successful practice. Regular graduates from this department, at the conclusion of a two years' course of study, and a well sustained examination, are admitted to the bar of New Orleans, with authority to practice in all the courts of the Commonwealth.

THEOLOGICAL DEPARTMENT.

College graduates, who can be instructed in the original languages in which the Scriptures were written, are greatly desired, and until they can be secured, this department will but partially accomplish the object for which it was organized. In the meantime, it is our aim to make the best use of the material we have, and transform it from a state of utter crudeness to one of partial fitness for the present demands of the churches. Men of piety and ability to speak and to teach are received, and advanced as far and as rapidly as their imperfect preparatory education will admit. Louisiana with a colored population of 370,000, is ripe for a glorious spiritual harvest. The churches are calling in vain for intelligent laborers to go forth into the harvest.

THE NEW UNIVERSITY.

The building on Esplanade street, built in 1870, was entirely destroyed by fire February 16th, 1877. Since that disastrous event, our sessions have been held in Central Church, which is also the property of the American Missionary Association. A new site, more convenient and attractive, was purchased in January last. It is located on Canal street, the most beautiful avenue in New Orleans. It comprises a half square of land, 150 feet front by 310 feet in depth. The new building, for whose design great credit is due to Prof. Thomas N. Chase, while not adhering strictly to any style of architecture, may be classed as Italian, as it approaches more nearly to that order. The dimensions of the building are 72 feet by 51½ feet. The five large recitation rooms are 30 feet by 50½ feet. The halls are 10 feet in width. The building is conveniently arranged, and all the requirements of the school, we think have been anticipated in its design. The funds at the disposal of the Association did not admit of ornamentation; but the building when completed, will be substantial, convenient, and comely. It will be ready for dedication and occupation at the opening of the fall term, October 1st.

Tillotson Normal School, Austin, Texas.

Trustees.—A. S. Barnes, Esq., New York; Chas. Benedict, Esq., Conn.; Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, New York; Chas. L. Mead, Esq., New York; Rev. Gustavus D. Pike, New York; Rev. M. E. Strieby, D. D., New York; Rev. Geo. J. Tillotson, Conn.; Ex-Gov. E. M. Pease, Texas; Rev. E. B. Wright, D. D., Texas.

Teachers—Mrs. E. M. E. Garland, Principal; Mrs. Carrie Madison, Assistant.

Students—146.

During the past year, Rev. Mr. Tillotson, the chief donor to the funds, has, by letter and personal solicitation, sought for the additional subscriptions needful for the first building upon the site already purchased and paid for. But owing to the pressure of the times and other engagements, he has not been able to complete the subscription required. The Trustees have, therefore, authorized the employment of an agent for a few months, and it is hoped that an amount will be realized sufficient to warrant the commencement of the new building the coming year.

Howard University, Washington, D. C.

THEOLOGICAL DEPARTMENT.

Number of Students, 32.

This department is under the joint care and support of the Presbytery of Washington, and of the American Missionary Association. The former sustains Rev. L. Westcott, as Professor of Revealed Theology and Biblical History, and Rev. A. W. Pitzer, D. D., as Professor of Biblical Studies and Moral Science; the latter supplies the instruction given by the President, Rev. Wm. W. Patton, D.D., in Natural Theology, the Evidences of Revealed Religion, and Hebrew, and by Rev. John G. Butler, D.D., in Pastoral Theology, Church History, and Homiletics. The theological students this year have numbered thirty-two. These are in all stages of preparation for their expected work. Several are already ministers, and are preaching, every Sunday, as pastors of colored churches in Washington; but, having had no early advantages, they are making up deficiencies as best they can. The theological students come from seven different denominations, while their instructors represent four. This is an unusual illustration of Christian union, and shows how much can be done, on a simple evangelical basis, for meeting the pressing wants of the colored population of our land. The plan of instruction has been, to meet the special wants of each individual according to his age, his forwardness or backwardness of study, the time that he could remain, etc. Such as have enjoyed a classical education, are encouraged to take the regular three years' course pursued in all theological seminaries. Others are taught what is found to be most needed to fit them for their work, in the form of English studies. Six have studied the Hebrew this year, and they passed a creditable examination in the grammar, and in translation, averaging quite as well as ordinary white students in theological institutions. These students also attend the Bible-class conducted by the president on the morning of the Lord's day, and his preaching service in the afternoon.

We have in our night-school some who are making great efforts to improve in knowledge. It requires no little resolution, after working hard all day, to walk a mile or two and study two or three hours. Our Sunday-school averages about 130, and the truth seems to be gaining a firmer hold in the minds of some of the older pupils. The day school is prospering.

CLOSING EXERCISES, JULY 4th, 5th and 6th.

IMPRESSIONS MADE ON A VISITOR FROM A NEIGHBORING STATE.

Although daily notices were made in the News and Courier of the closing exercises of Avery Institute, as they took place from day to day, the following account by a visitor from a neighboring State will not be without interest:

"Avery Institute has had four principals during its brief existence of thirteen years, and has been fortunate in their quality. Two of them, Mr. Warren and the present incumbent, Mr. Farnham, were fitted for their work by a course of normal training and considerable experience in schools of similar grade to this, and especially by their ardent love for their occupation.

"Absence of weeds from the flower-beds, tidiness of walks and yards, cleanliness of floors and desks, and signs of neatness everywhere suggested the possible theory of a 'clearing-up time' for the occasion, but a quiet search for information on this point revealed the fact that things were not 'fixed up for Sunday,' but wore their every-day attire. If a maximum of stillness, with a minimum of apparent effort, is the ultima thule of school discipline, there are no new lands for Avery Institute to discover.

"The plan of 'native helpers' is being tried here, the faculty consisting of a principal and two lady teachers from the North, and five graduates of the school. Full attendance, good scholarship and excellent discipline point to a successful experiment.

"July 2d at Avery was 'Children's Day.' There is not room for the little ones at the closing exercises, and so Mr. Farnham gives them their day. The songs, 'A Smiling Face for Me,' 'If I were a Sunbeam,' I love the Merry Sunshine,' and the recitations 'The Golden Side,' 'The Little Philosopher,' and 'The Summer Time,' indicate the joyous nature of the programme and the spirit of the occasion. The teachers seem to appreciate the sentiment of Dickens, 'I love these little people, and it is not a slight thing when they, so fresh from God, love us.'

"July 3d was 'Graduates' Day.' The class of nine girls and one boy furnished music sufficient for the occasion, both in quantity and quality. Lessons with children, one on composition and one on number, conducted by two of the graduates, constituted a novel feature in the programme, and showed something of the methods of teaching employed in the institute. By permutations and combinations almost ad infinitum on the numeral frame, the children learned the 'Table of Sevens,' if they had never heard of it before; and the fact that 'reproduction' without credit to the author is plain stealing, was faithfully impressed upon the young mind. One of the graduating girls made a strong argument in the negative upon the question, 'Should young men take a College Course?' The simplicity and self-possession of the graduates were very pleasing. So also were their fine articulation and musical voices. A little more volume, however, would not have been offensive, and would have filled the hall better.

"Prizes were distributed by the Rev. Mr. Patton and the Rev. Mr. Dunton, and diplomas were presented by Prof. Chase, of Atlanta.

"The 4th was 'Alumni Day,' and, despite all the attractions at the Battery, the hall was well filled. The exercises consisted of addresses, essays, recitations and songs, all by members of the class. 'Independence Day' afforded some stimulus to the occasion, and called forth some of the sentiments and feelings of the emancipated race, but revealed no sign of bitterness or malice. The orderly conduct, dignified demeanor, literary merit and good elocution of the day, evinced that 'Avery's children' are an honor to their foster parent, the American Missionary Association, and to their native State and city. Two or three hours spent in discussing 'viands that tickle the palate' and in social converse, reviving memories of past school-day life, terminated the three days of closing exercises at Avery Normal Institute.

"The teachers and pupils were gratified by the presence of some of the well-known and respectable residents of the city."

HISTORY OF "AVERY" GRADUATES.

Prof. A. W. Farnham, Charleston, S. C.

Avery Normal Institute was organized in Charleston, S. C., October, 1865. The first formal graduation occurred in June, 1872, at which time eleven young people received diplomas from the Institute. A class has been graduated each succeeding year, numbering as follows: In 1873, fourteen; 1874, six; 1875, fifteen; 1876, nineteen, (including one post-graduate); 1877, twenty-two—giving a total of eighty-six. Of this number, death has taken five.

Our school aims to fit its graduates to be competent teachers. Forty-six have been engaged in the public schools of the State—schools first in rank, in scholarship, and discipline. Forty-one of the forty-six are teaching to-day; seventeen hold State certificates.

One young man of the class of 1872 is an ordained minister. He was also graduated at South Carolina University in 1877. Another from that class, and one from the succeeding class, are studying with the ministry in view—one at Madison University, New York, the other at Atlanta University, Georgia. Three others from later classes are in higher institutions, preparing themselves to preach the Gospel. Our graduates bid fair to represent all the professions. One is in Howard University, studying medicine, and one in the leading Normal school of our county, preparing for teaching. The total number in higher institutions is seven, while four more have already received the degree of A. B. Five others were in South Carolina University when it closed its doors. These young men were ready to enter the Junior year of the College course when their studies were so abruptly ended. With one exception, they are teaching. Thirty-eight of our graduates are members of Evangelical churches; twenty at present are engaged in Sunday-school work, and the good ship Azor is carrying three of her pupils to "Africa's sunny fountains."

BREWER NORMAL SCHOOL—THE YEAR'S WORK.

J. D. Blackenstose, Greenwood.

This institution has just closed the best year of its history, and looks out upon the year to come more hopefully than ever before. The examinations on Tuesday and Wednesday were close and eminently satisfactory to all present, and there was a good attendance. The great day, July 4th, dawned. The morning was a little cloudy, the air was cool and delightful. A crowd of people assembled at eleven o'clock in the morning, to hear orations from four of our former students, who are now engaged in teaching. The young men acquitted themselves nobly, and all who were present speak highly of them. The dinner given by the patrons and friends of the institution equalled anything of the kind ever given in this place. The table was loaded with everything that heart could wish for and that loving hands could provide. An exhibition, consisting of speeches, recitations and dialogues, interspersed with singing, took place in the evening. The house was filled to its utmost capacity, and it was with difficulty that the speakers could make their way to the stage. All present seemed delighted with the exercises.

Several of the white citizens of the place, including Rev. Mr. Smart, of the M. E. Church south, and Prof. Hodges, of the Male Academy of this place, were present at the exhibition, and expressed themselves as pleased with what they saw and heard. All the colored pastors of the place, with the exception of the African Methodist, were present during most of the exercises, and seemed delighted with the proficiency exhibited. During the year the students' rooms have been neatly furnished, and are now quite comfortable. The students have made gratifying progress in their studies, and we feel that a year's advancement has been made. Twenty-six of our students are now engaged in teaching, and over eleven hudred pupils are under their care.

This school building which was completely consumed by fire some eighteen months ago, has been replaced by a new building, which was dedicated, with the chapel, March 24th. There are three rooms occupying the ground floor of the building. The large one will seat 110 pupils; the smaller, or recitation-rooms, twenty-five or thirty each. The whole building is lighted with gas and heated by a furnace. Mr. Harrington writes:—"We are credited by the people of the city—by the white people, especially—with having the prettiest chapel and school-rooms in the State."

"The examinations on the 13th and 14th were listened to by a large number of the more intelligent of the colored patrons and friends of the school. Members of the press were also present, and showed themselves highly pleased. The pupils went through their examinations in all their various studies in a manner which showed they were perfectly familiar with all they had gone over in their text-books. All evinced thoroughness and promptness, from the lowest to the highest class. Problems in algebra were demonstrated, axioms given, translations from Latin and English sentences analyzed and parsed, in a manner that did credit to teachers and scholars."

"Many cases of interest come to notice in connection with our school, showing the eager thirst for knowledge which these colored people have. A young man, twenty-two years of age, who has been connected with the school for a few weeks, was obliged to go home a few days since, to attend to matters of business. So anxious was he not to lose his position in his class, that he started at 2.15 in the morning and walked about forty miles, reaching Macon at 5 P. M., and this in the severest N. E. rain-storm of the season. It makes our hearts sad to know of many who would gladly come to our school, but cannot find boarding places in town."

Trinity School, Athens, Ala.

Teachers.—Miss M. F. Wells, Ann Arbor, Mich.; Miss Nettie Underwood, Burlington, Mich.

Number of Pupils, 155; (Normal, 46); in Sabbath-school, 160.

Rev. Horace J. Taylor, Athens.

The thirteenth anniversary of the commencement of Trinity School occurred on the 28th of last May. On the Sabbath previous the anniversary sermon was preached by the pastor. The scholars had prepared themselves for the exercises of Tuesday evening. At the appointed hour the church was full of a bright-faced throng of old and young. A class of little girls, dressed in white, stood on each side of the broad central aisle; and as Miss Wells (who begun the school May 28th, 1865) advanced, they spread flowers in her way. She was conducted to her seat, which was covered with flowers. The exercises consisted of speeches, compositions, and music. One old man—Uncle Dennis Collier—said he was very grateful to Miss Wells for what she had done for him. He was blind, and couldn't learn to read, but his "wife was the grandmother of sixty-six children," and he doubtless felt that he had through them received a full share of the benefits of the school. She had done him favors, he said, "and if you want to know what kind of favors, here's one of 'em," as he vigorously shook his coat. Then the offerings of flowers were brought forward, and it seemed as if Miss Wells would be buried in the mass of roses, lilies, magnolias, etc.

These anniversaries do the people good, and enable them to look back and compare their condition in May, 1865, with their present condition, and to learn more forcibly what it is that is lifting them up. School closed on the 28th of June. The examinations were on the afternoons of the 25th, 26th, and 27th. The schoolrooms were crowded with people from the neighborhood; they were of every shade from black to white, but all "colored." All the classes were examined, from the little "tots" to those in grammar, analysis, and algebra. The examinations showed patient drill on the part of the teachers, and generally work on that of the scholars. Friday afternoon and evening—the 28th—occurred the exhibition. Compositions, declamations, orations and music instructed and amused the audience till well along to midnight. All were pleased and edified. The colored people remember that, before the war, they sometimes went to anniversaries and exhibitions of the white people, but now they can attend those of their own.

Emerson Institute, Mobile, Ala.

Teachers.—Mr. B. F. Koons, Sulphur Springs, O.; Miss Jennie Stevenson, Bellefontaine, O.; Miss Sara J. Irwin, Galesburg, Ill.

Number of Pupils, 117; (Normal, 5); in Sabbath-school, 45.

On the 26th of December, ground was broken for the new Emerson Institute building at Mobile, with appropriate services. The new lot is more accessible to the colored population than the old one. On account of the great depreciation in real-estate, the property, containing over two acres, and having on it a house that will serve as a home for the teachers and accommodate a few girls as boarders, and covered with nearly a hundred large shade trees, mostly live-oak, has been purchased for the small sum of $2,800. The new building is a well constructed two-story brick building, 34x64, with wings at the centre of each side 10x21. The lower story is divided into two school rooms, 28x31½ feet, and between these is what may be called a hallway, divided into four hat and cloak rooms. From this floor there are two stairways, occupying the wings, and leading to the second story. At the head of each of these is a commodious hat and cloak room, through which the pupils pass as they enter the chapel, or large school-room, of the second floor. This room is 31½x48; at one end, on each side of the teacher's desk, are doors leading into two recitation rooms, each 15x15½. The building is surmounted by a very neat belfry. It was dedicated the 1st of May, the exercises being participated in by the white and colored pastors of the various churches of the city, as well as by others from abroad.

CLOSING DAYS OF EMERSON INSTITUTE.

Miss S. J. Irwin, Mobile.

The school at Mobile closed satisfactorily. Public examinations were held on the last two days. The interest manifested by the attendance of the people was highly gratifying. There were examinations in all studies pursued during the year. The advanced grammar-class ended its lesson with the correction, on the black-board, of a letter by a colored candidate for office, recently published; the class gave rules for its criticisms and explanations. An algebra-class was reported by a Southern lady of high intelligence, who had taught that brauch for a number of years, as the best she ever heard, doing credit to any class or grade of scholars. The exercises of the primary room, also, elicited much comment on the careful drill that had been bestowed in the endeavor to convey the spirit of study, and not alone the "letter" thereof, although the "Busy Bees" were not far in advance of that fundamental branch of education. Addresses by ministers and others followed the examinations; and the doors closed upon another year's work.

From Miss Martha J. Adams.

On Thursday night we had an exhibition in the Congregational Church. The church was crowded to its utmost capacity; many, indeed, were unable to gain admittance, so great was the throng. The exercises consisting of declamations, essays, recitations and songs, were listened to with great interest and apparent delight. The Secretary of the City Board of Education, now acting Superintendent, and another member of the Board, were present the entire evening, and expressed gratification at what they had seen and heard. As they passed out of the church, they were heard to remark to each other: "That was good." "Yes, it was good."

LIBRARY.—A permanent library, to which the colored people may have free access, has been begun by the faculty of Le Moyne Normal School. Some hundreds of books have been secured, and during the coming summer vacation a commodious reading-room is to be fitted up. More volumes will be added from time to time, as means are secured, and it is confidently expected that the near future will see this excellent project firmly established, and doing the work for which it is designed. During the closing week at the school the junior class gave an exhibition, the proceeds of which are to be used for the library.

Marietta, Ga.—The Mission School at Marietta was opened Oct. 15th, 1877, with four pupils only. The number has steadily increased to seventy-two. Friends of this work are fast multiplying, and the future seems bright. The school is composed of some very bright and promising young men and women, seven of whom go out every summer to teach.

Cuthbert, Ga.—The school at this place, re-opened two years ago, reports a good year's work. Over a hundred pupils have been in attendance, some of them adults and elders and deacons of churches. A reading-room has been kept up. A large attendance witnessed the examinations and closing exercises. There was in the course of the year a glorious revival. Nearly all the pupils of the school were converted; all of the highest class but one, and that one an inquirer. Three ministers attended school regularly. Mr. Wright divided his efforts between the two (Methodist and Baptist) Sunday-schools of the place.

Forsyth, Ga.—On February 1st, the school building of the colored people of Forsyth was dedicated and set apart for the work for which it was intended. For months these people have been struggling to raise money to build the house. They had, as a fund to start with, about two hundred dollars, which the colored Baptist Church had collected. Subscription lists were opened and the colored people and their white friends contributed as they could. Contrary to the expectation of many, their success was such that the building was framed and rapidly pushed forward. It is not yet complete, lacking plastering, but is quite comfortable nevertheless.

Athens, Ga.—May 24th, the closing exercises of school came off. Between the hours of nine and four o'clock, over two hundred persons gathered into the Knox's Institute, to witness the closing exercises and a spelling-match between this school and another from a different section of the city. Prof. A. Brumby, of the Georgia University, and the Mayor of Athens, were present. These distinguished visitors remained some hours, and, on leaving, spoke very encouragingly to the pupils and patrons. They said that they noticed many indications of progress and thoroughness.

Grenada, Miss.—"Our school, in age, ranks among the older ones, having been established in the Spring of 1866, and we have been its teachers continuously up to the present time. First, we were missionary teachers; after a time the Freedmen's Bureau lent us its aid, until the organization of free schools by the State; thereafter, we taught the public school until last year. During all these years of varying fortunes our school has steadily progressed, until there has grown up around us a generation of young people, not great, nor wise, nor learned, only as they are compared with those who have gone before them; but, standing out from the blackness of darkness of twelve years ago, they furnish a bright and hopeful outlook. Our Sunday-school has always claimed our best efforts, and we are glad to know that more than two-thirds of our older scholars are professing Christians. But the work done is but a drop compared with that which is not done."

Frankfort, Ky.—The public examination of this school occurred June 13th, and was one of great pleasure and interest. Each teacher conducted the examinations of her own classes. Parents and friends were highly gratified with the very flattering manner in which the young ladies acquitted themselves. During the year the building has been enlarged, and many improvements have been made. The new room was opened about the first of March. The closing exercises took place at Major Hall, June 19th, and consisted of vocal and instrumental music, essays, declamations, tableaux, dialogues and concert exercises.

The Third Annual Meeting of "The California Chinese Mission," was held in connection with the meeting of the General Association of California, at Petaluma, Oct. 11th, 1878. The President was unavoidably absent, and Rev. T. K. Noble, one of the Vice-Presidents, took the chair. The reading of the reports of the Treasurer and of the Directors was followed by an informal but interesting discussion of the work, after which the Society adjourned.

The following Statistical table will give the more important facts respecting these schools, so far as they can be expressed in figures.

NOTES ON THE STATISTICS, BY SECRETARY POND.

1. The school at San Leandro was discontinued because Bro. Oviatt removed to Visalia. But his missionary spirit led him to commence a like work there, in which we have been glad to aid him.

2. The number, who, if inquired of, would profess that they had forsaken idolatry, is much larger than the figures in that column indicate. But our more experienced teachers place little reliance upon such professions, unless attended by conversion to Christ. At the same time the leaven of truth is working in the whole mass of our Chinese heathenism, and the number whose confidence in their ancient superstitions is shaken almost to its fall, is many times larger than the largest of our totals.

3. The number reported as giving evidence of conversion, embraces simply such as were in August, members of our schools. There are many others who from change of residence, or the nature of their work, or for other reasons were unable, just then, to be in the schools. The total number whom we have reason to hope have believed in Jesus, in connection with our work, cannot be much less than 200.

4. A comparison with the statistics of last year shows traces of the troublous times through which we have passed. True, the whole number (1,492) is larger by 300 than that reported last year, but this comes, I think, from a more careful keeping of the roll, and not from an actual increase in the number. For the enrolment, month by month, and the average attendance have been smaller than for two years past. The cause of this is not so much a fear of violence on the part of the Chinese, as an indifference, and even an antipathy, to everything American. Hate stirs hate. And now some that once were eager to learn English, and who, but for this Anti-Chinese movement would have been among our most promising pupils, are giving their evenings to the study of Chinese. Our bait ceases to attract, and we fish for their souls in vain. From the word of God, the fountain of living waters, they are turned aside to the dry moralizings and empty traditions of their ancestral sages—broken cisterns that can hold no water.

We see no reason, however, to be discouraged. We are gradually overcoming this obstacle also; and, even now, in spite of hindrance and reproach, our work is large enough and fruitful enough to more than recompense our largest gifts and best endeavors. Fifteen hundred of these sons of darkness have come within hearing—for a longer or a shorter period—of the gospel of Christ, and have felt in contact with their teachers, some of the kindliness of a Christian heart. It has been for them a new sensation. They will not forget it wherever they may go. It brought a gleam of light, which, in their darkness, may become as the day-star arising in their hearts. We speak not as mere theorizers on this point. What beforehand we should have counted probable, we find to be realized in fact.

FINANCES.

Our total resources for the year were $6,708.05, of which $1,283.20 were contributed directly to the treasury of the mission. The expenditures have been, for Salaries $4,653,80; Rents, $1,303.50; Incidentals, including expenses for travelling, fuel and lights, water-bills, repairs, printing annual reports, postage, &c.&c.) $440.20. The balance (much of it having been contributed for that special purpose) has been paid towards the floating debt on our Barnes Mission House. This debt is now $3,800; the property being valued at $5,500.

SABBATH WORSHIP AT THE CENTRAL MISSION.—BIBLE CLASS.

By Fung Affoo.

"As we have not much time to teach them the Scripture on any other evening, we set apart Sunday and Wednesday evenings to teach them to read the Bible instead of their other lessons. On Sunday we have the 'Bible-class,' commencing at half-past eleven A. M. and continuing for one hour and a half. We sing about half an hour either in Chinese or in English, then offer a prayer, and then read a chapter from the Bible. Each verse they read after me, then I translate it into Chinese; when through interpreting, on each verse or paragraph I make some remarks which I have studied out during the week days. After we get through the chapter, I speak about ten minutes on a subject selected from that chapter beforehand, then one of our brethren offers prayer; we then unite in singing the Doxology, and close with the Lord's prayer. Our exercises on Wednesday evening are similar to those we have on Sundays. It gives me much encouragement in the work, seeing that they like to read the Bible more than ever before. Formerly only about one-half of the school attended the Bible-class on Wednesday evenings, but now they number nearly as many on that evening as on any other evening of the week. It seems as though their hatred of Christianity becomes less. Of course, many come to read the Bible only for the sake of learning the English, but in time we hope, when they know the truth of God, they will change their mind and heart, as some of them have already done, who are now on Christ's side, battling for the Lord.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN OAKLAND.

By Jee Gam.

I am requested to give a little outline about our manner of conducting the Christian work in Oakland. On Sunday morning, those brethren who can get out in time from their occupations generally attend church, but this number is comparatively small, owing to the way in which they are situated. Our Chinese Sunday-school is held immediately after the morning service in the church, and continues till fifteen minutes of two P.M. The average number of scholars during the last few months was about fifty-five. Mr. E. P. Sanford is our superintendent, and I am the assistant. The school is generally opened by singing two hymns in Chinese and two in English, followed by a prayer. After the latter, each teacher proceeds to take charge of his own class; and when the lesson ends, passages of Scripture are recited by most of the Bible-reading pupils. Then the notices are given for all the exercises of the following week. The Lord's Prayer is then recited in concert, and the school is dismissed.

From 6.30 to 7.15 P. M., we assemble at our Christian Association Room (a small house of five rooms) for prayer-meeting. This meeting is conducted by the president of the Association. The exercises consist of singing, praying, and speaking from two of the members who are appointed by the president at the previous meeting. After these speakers get through, eight or ten minutes are allowed to all who wish to speak or pray. The meeting is closed with the Doxology and prayer. From this meeting we go back to the chapel where we held our Sunday-school. There we open our regular Sunday evening service. The average attendance is about twenty-five. The first part of this service is singing from 7.25 to fifteen minutes of eight. The singing is conducted by Mr. Sanford, assisted by Miss L. Gill and Miss Sanford. To these persons we are greatly indebted for their kindness in teaching us, especially Mr. Sanford, whose labors for us are unspeakably great. After the singing and prayer, Mr. Sanford takes the Bible. He then reads, and explains to them in English; I take the same lesson and explain to them in Chinese, after which the meeting is closed with a prayer in Chinese. On Wednesday evening our prayer-meeting is conducted entirely by myself. Its average attendance is about the same as that of Sunday evening. Thursday evening I have the whole Bible-class, consisting of from ten to eighteen pupils. Beside this Bible reading we also have another very interesting Bible exercise in the Association Room every evening throughout the whole week, with the exception of Saturday and Sunday evenings. This exercise commences immediately after the brethren get back from school and continues until ten P.M. We begin by reading and explaining the Scripture alternately. If one fails to explain his verse correctly, the one who sits next to him follows it up, and if he fails also, the third, fourth, and so on to the last one in the class. If he fails to succeed, I then explain the verse to them again. When this lesson is through, I read and explain to them the new lesson for the following evening. Then the exercise is closed with a prayer in English by some one of the brethren in order.

THE INDIANS.

RED LAKE AGENCY, MINNESOTA.

R. M. Pratt, Agent.
Miss M. C. Warren, and Edward L. Warren, Teachers.
Miss S. F. Campbell, Matron.

This reservation embraces 3,200,000 acres of land, of which one-third is supposed to be tillable; two-thirds wooded, grazing and worthless. The population is about 1,190 besides the families of the employés. The crops show quite an increase over last year, and other branches of industry have been well developed.

From the report of C. P. Allen, Agency Physician.

Perhaps the most gratifying feature of the work here is the successful opening of a fully equipped boarding-school in November last. Ten boys and as many girls were taken, clothed and fed; the girls were taught to wash, mend, knit, cook, keep house; and the boys were taught to cut and prepare fuel, to plow, plant, grub, do fence and farm work. In addition to the twenty boarding pupils, there were some twenty day scholars, so that the present capacity of the school is filled. The results are very gratifying.

Arrangements are about completed for putting in here a substantial little flour-mill this fall, to convert the wheat into nice flour. This will prove a great incentive to increased labor in clearing up land and raising more wheat. This, again, will conduce to improved health, as much of their sickness arises from insufficient food, and that of poor quality.

LAKE SUPERIOR AGENCY, WISCONSIN.

Dr. I. L. Mahan, Agent.
Robert Pew, Teacher.

This Agency embraces seven Reserves: Red Cliff, Bad River, La Courte D'Oreille and Lac Du Flambeau, in Wisconsin; and Fon Du Lac, Grand Portage and Bois Forte in Minnesota. It includes 526,756 acres and the Indians number over 4,500. Three schools have been maintained besides the Odanah Mission School of the Presbyterian denomination. The reports from this Agency are excellent.

From I. L. Mahan, Agent.

RED CLIFF.

These bands are two in number, and have a reservation of four sections just three miles north of Bayfield, on the shore of Lake Superior. They number 726 souls, and in consequence of small territory, are compelled to find houses, in many cases, off the reservation. They subsist upon the result of their own labor. All of them live in houses, and wear the costume of civilized society. Many of them have professed the Roman Catholic faith, and attend regularly upon worship, walking or riding in their own boats from three to six miles to church.

We have upon this reservation a saw-mill, blacksmith and cooper shop, farmers' and blacksmiths' dwellings, and a very fine school-house—the latter valued at about five thousand dollars—in which school has been kept ten months, with an attendance of thirty regular scholars and fifty-five irregular scholars.

BAD RIVER.

Belonging to this reserve are 714 Indians. Many of the males are found at Ashland and other white settlements, earning their daily bread at various kinds of educated labor. They leave their wives and children at home, putting in crops, hoeing potatoes, curing wild rice, and otherwise preparing for the cold winter; while they earn from $1.25 to $2.50 per day, and send their families pork, flour, etc., upon which to live during their absence. These Indians have made 1,200 pounds of butter, this being the first year that we have any statistics upon this subject, having only commenced the issuing of cows last year. We have allotted (as in the case of Red Cliff) land, in eighty-acre tracts, to 204 families or individuals. They are clearing a portion every year, and our policy is to seed down each year the portion planted the year before, and clear other land for planting. We do hope that it may not be long till patents are issued, for Indians cannot bear suspense.

LA COURTE D'OREILLE.

This reservation is located in the northwest corner of Chippewa county, near the intersection of Ashland and Burnett counties. The Indians made choice of this region of country on account of the very fine groves of sugar-maple and the large number of inland lakes; but the white man, who defines the boundaries, took occasion to so run the lines that the most of the maple-groves and many of the lakes are left out, and the Indians have a reservation running from south-west to north-west about thirty miles, and from north-west to south-east but about three or four miles. In passing up the La Courte D'Oreille River, I found five new log houses, and, in one case, about ten acres cleared and all planted. There are perhaps twenty or twenty-five other houses, that have been built by Indians without any individual aid from Government. They have improved the roads across the reservation. They have some stock, but are sadly in need of more.

LAC DU FLAMBEAU.

Belonging to this reserve are 542 Indians, who live almost entirely by trapping, hunting and fishing. The appropriations are not large enough to supply employés; therefore, no civilizing measures have been introduced here. Five thousand dollars a year, judiciously expended for labor, in building houses, clearing land and supplying cattle to these Indians, would, in a very short period, place them beyond want. These Indians must be aided, or they are lost beyond redemption.

FOND DU LAC.

Belonging to this reservation there are 404 Indians. They are a thrifty, hard-working people, living almost entirely off their own labor. The young men are found in the logging-camps, saw-mills, and on the railroads. The old men and women hunt, fish, gather berries, and otherwise assist in providing food. But few families live upon the reservation.

GRAND PORTAGE.

Here we have 262 Indians, claiming a territory of 51,840 acres of perhaps the poorest land the sun ever shone upon. The Indians, however, have done well, living almost entirely without Government aid—the old men and women by hunting, fishing and trapping; the young men as packers and guides into the mining districts along both the American and Canadian line.

BOIS FORTE.

These bands, numbering 797 Indians, have a reservation of 107,509 acres, lying in unsurveyed territory, about forty miles north-west of Vermillion Lake, in Minnesota. They have mingled with the whites but little; therefore have but few of their vices. They roam, fish, hunt and trap for a livelihood. They dress in civilized costumes, and a few of them sow and plant and harvest, live in houses, and have some of the ordinary home comforts; but they are few indeed. They have been banished to perhaps the most wretched of all lands, or rock, in North Minnesota.

GREEN BAY AGENCY, WISCONSIN.

Jos. C. Bridgman, Agent.
W. W. Wheeler, Mrs. W. W. Wheeler and Miss S. B. Dresser, Teachers.

From the Report of the Agent.

The Stockbridge tribe take very little interest in education. The head men, not specially interested, voted to have only six months' schooling, paying the teacher but $25 per month. The greatest number attending any one month is thirteen, and the average for the year is ten. The church membership is 29.

The Oneidas are making an unusually good record. Their crops are nearly, or quite, one-third larger than last year. The school attendance shows an increase of thirty-seven, and the church membership fifty-three over last year.

The Menomonees have shown a wonderful spirit of thrift and enterprise the past year, putting 200 or more acres of new land under cultivation. Permission having been granted by the Department, it is proposed to hold a fair the last week in September. The schools of this tribe, we regret to say, have taken a step backwards. Crime and drunkenness is greatly on the decrease. With the exception of scarlet fever, in a very mild form, among the Menomonees, the sanitary condition has been excellent with these people.

While the soil for Christian labor is unfavorable, and tares find root, to the choking out of good seed sown, yet we should take heart in the increasing desire on their part for better homes and farms, and the laying aside of the wigwam for good houses, the gun and rod for the plow and hoe. A slow and certain improvement in their habits from year to year is observable, and with kindness, honest dealing and right influence, the time is not so very far in the future when they can, and will, take a place in our nation not a whit behind many pale faces.

FORT BERTHOLD AGENCY.

E. H. Alden, Agent.
Thos. P. Ellis, "

Mr. Alden has resigned his position at this Agency, and Mr. Ellis has very recently been nominated to fill his place.

From the Agent's Report.

In spite of innumerable drawbacks and difficulties, these Indians have shown a patience and industry, in the face of centuries of contrary customs, truly commendable. They have evinced a skill and energy in raising general farm produce seldom surpassed by the frontiersmen of Minnesota. Their clean-kept corn and potato fields are a sure promise that they will before many years be able to raise an ample supply of all kinds of agricultural products.

This year they cultivated about eight hundred acres of corn, potatoes, beans, squashes, &c., all of which produced a fair return for their labor. About three-fourths of this they have cultivated with no other implement than the hoe—without plow or cultivator.

The great need now is to get them out of the village into better houses and on small farms, having for the present their herds in common, guarded by their own herders. The preliminary step to this end was made last year in the manufacture of brick. This was intended as a means of industry to the Indians, and to obtain material for much needed chimneys on Agency buildings; but above all to test the clay, and the ability of the Indians to make brick. Great difficulties were encountered in overcoming alkali and quicksand in the clay; but after weeks of toil and trial the work was successful. An excellent quality of brick was manufactured. The Indians engaged in this work with far greater interest and perseverance than I ever dared to hope. It was thought that during this summer, by making bricks for themselves, and procuring logs and lumber, the Indians might be aided in building enough new houses on small farms to induce the whole camp to remove from their close quarters in the village, where they have actually hitherto been compelled to stay on account of constant fear of an attack from the Sioux, their hereditary enemies.

A full report was submitted to the Department, with the request that additional appropriation be made for this work. But the appropriation was cut down, and this great and much needed step towards civilization could not be taken.

The School, although not so prosperous as we could wish, yet, without doubt, has been more successful during the last twelve months than ever before. A new school-house was erected during the summer of 1877, but the new furniture was not put in till near Christmas. Since that time great progress has been made. The average attendance during several months of the year, has been from thirty to thirty-five scholars. We hope several boys and girls will avail themselves of the excellent opportunity offered by the Government, and proceed to Hampton for a three years' schooling.

SISSETON AGENCY, DAKOTA.

E. H. C. Hooper, Agent.

The farming has been attended with unusual success. At present there are 2,191 acres of land broken on this reservation, 450 acres of which are new land broken during this season. Seventeen hundred acres are under cultivation by the Indians. Nearly all our Indians, who were without seed, were provided from the warehouse early in the season, and manifested a good degree of interest in planting and cultivating.

Early in July, many of the Indian farmers were very earnest in their appeals for grain cradles and other appliances with which to secure their crops. A lot of grain cradles were bought and issued to them. But the number purchased was insufficient, and a considerable portion of the wheat in small fields was cut with scythes.

Several of our Indians who have large wheat fields have bought harvesters for themselves, at a cost of from $165 to $200 each, and are to pay for them from the proceeds of their sales of wheat.

All our Indians and half-breeds (with but few exceptions, and these generally confined to very old people) wear citizens' dress, and a large majority of them live in very comfortable houses, made of hewed logs, and are furnished with cook-stoves, tables, seats and other housekeeping conveniences.

There are some forty frame buildings occupied by our Indians, several of which are two stories high and painted, all having more or less land under cultivation.

SCHOOLS.

During ten months of the year (the Manual Labor School eleven months) three schools have been in successful operation: the Manual Labor School, the Good-Will Boarding and Day School and the Ascension School. The Manual Labor School building, situated one and a half miles from the agency, was originally provided with seats for fifty-six scholars, but the sleeping accommodations for this number of children have never been sufficient, and during the past year our carpenter has made an addition of several new sleeping rooms, and improved the condition of the old ones, which has added very much to the comfort and convenience of the pupils.

There are only four or five boys of sufficient age to be serviceable about the farm or garden. When out of school they are kept at work preparing the ground for seeding and cultivating, besides attending to the stock and farm work generally, all being done under the immediate supervision of the principal, who is, fortunately, a good farmer.

After the regular school hours, the girls are taught sewing of all kinds; cutting, making and trimming dresses, repairing garments; darning, knitting and use of sewing machine; also all kinds of house-work, cooking and the work of the dairy. After service in the evening, instructions are given in music, instrumental and vocal, in which both boys and girls take an unusual interest and show a marked improvement during the year.

In addition to these three schools, two others were opened, and reading, writing and arithmetic in Dakota were taught by Indian teachers during two months in the spring, with an average daily attendance of eighteen scholars each. The estimated number of children of school-going age on this reserve is three hundred, and we have two brick school-houses, which were built in 1873, at an estimated cost of $600 each. One of them is situated about one and a half miles south of the agency, and the other is at the Mayasan, twenty miles distant; both are thoroughly provided with improved seats, tables, etc., and will accommodate forty scholars each; neither of them has been used for school purposes to any extent since they were built, but allowed to remain unoccupied.

S'KOKOMISH AGENCY.

Edwin Eells, Agent.

Rev. Myron Eells, Missionary.

From Edwin Eells, Agent.

With gratitude we can say, that the kind favor of an overruling Providence has brought us through the changes of another year, with more than usual quiet and a fair amount of general prosperity. Our schools (we now have two) have been prosperous and apparently instrumental in doing good. In the one at the Agency, there has been evident improvement every way. The scholars have advanced well in their studies, have improved morally, and several have, we hope and trust, become Christians.

At Dunginess, one hundred miles distant from this agency, is a small settlement of Clallam Indians, numbering about one hundred all told. They have two hundred acres of land owned and held by them by purchase, each one having a deed for the number of acres paid for by him, upon which they have erected good comfortable houses, and raise considerable quantities of potatoes and garden vegetables. They belong to this Treaty, and have been visited by your missionary, Rev. Myron Eells, occasionally. During the past winter and spring they purchased lumber, and erected a building to be used for a church.

I succeeded in getting a teacher allowed, who commenced teaching school in this building in March last. This school has been very encouraging. They have sent their own children, and also induced other neighboring villages to send theirs, so that there have been 31 day scholars on the roll. These all board at home, come regularly, neatly dressed, and have evinced such a deep interest in their studies that they have advanced remarkably well. The teacher, who is a pious man, conducts religious services on the Sabbath regularly, and the attendance is good. The whole number attending both schools for one month or more, during the past year has been 70; while the average attendance, since the latter school has been established, has been over 50.

In some respects the year has been unpropitious. To use a common expression, times have been dull and money scarce, and the Indians have been unable to get work as much as usual. This has compelled many of them to hunt and fish, who are accustomed to work. I have regretted this retrogression the more, as I considered it unnecessary. Had they been dealt with as they should have been in regard to their lands, I think it need not have occurred.

To me it appears plain that the Government should give them Patents for their lands, and supply them with school teachers who should act as sub-agents under the supervision of a General Agent, who would have charge of a number of reservations. This plan, it seems to me, would be far more economical and satisfactory to the Indians, and more beneficial in its results, than any attempt at consolidation.

This report closes my second term of office. Eight years is a longer lease of public life than is usually allotted to Indian Agents. In all my official intercourse with the Department, I have to say that I have been treated with kindness, and consideration. My relations have been uniformly pleasant and agreeable. This is to me a source of pleasure, and for which I feel grateful. In reviewing the work of the past eight years, and comparing the present condition of the Indians with what it was when I first took charge, I see a marked advance with most of them, more than I expected when I first assumed the duties of the office. As I said many years ago, their advance has been slow, but I think more sure than if it had been sudden and spasmodic. I sincerely hope they may continue to improve as they have done in the past.

Many of them seem to me to be so far along, that the question of citizenship, will shortly require to be considered in their case. They own taxable property, some that are coming on can read and write; and as they are so far civilized, what is to hinder their exercising the full rights of American citizens?

From Rev. Myron Eells, Missionary.

At the Agency, the average attendance on the Sabbath-school has been about sixty; at the prayer-meeting twenty-eight; and on public worship sixty-three. I think there has been no Sabbath on which services have not been held.

Fruits from the Christian work among the Indians are beginning to be seen—more than during any previous year—and the seed which has been sown seems to be bringing forth fruit, through the blessing of God.

I have attended during the year eight funerals among the Indians, as many as during any two previous years. Often they come for me now, while during the first years I was here, it was difficult to induce them to be willing to have such services. Lately they have opened a new burying-ground, which they say is to be like that of the whites, with picket-fence, but no canoes, guns, cloth, or other things, at least above ground. This will be a great improvement over the old one, which is covered with such things; and at the old one they have during the year put quite a number of bodies beneath the ground which had formerly been above ground. I have made three hundred and fifty visits among them, in all of which I have made religion the main theme. A small hymn-book in the Chinook language has been published, the songs of which are popular among them.

In addition to the work of the Reservation, our out-station at Dunginess has made marked progress. In July of last year, the Indians spoke to me, saying that they were thinking of building a small church. I encouraged them in it, and the agent afterwards did the same. In May last it was so far finished as to be usable, and was then dedicated. As far as finished it was paid for, although none of those Indians are members of the church, nor is there another church in the county, which has been settled by the whites for twenty years.

Sabbath congregations and Sabbath-schools have averaged fifty in attendance, and prayer-meetings twenty-five. They have contributed about one hundred and forty dollars for church buildings, and in various ways to the amount of twenty-three dollars for my support. In addition, I have preached to the Indians at Seabeck once in two months on an average, and to the whites at the same place on the same Sabbaths—thirty miles distant—and have held services with the whites at Oakland, Union City, and vicinity, once a month on an average, all in the region of the Reservation.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE MISSIONARIES—THE BOARD OF COUNSEL AND ADVICE.

The missionaries of the Mendi Mission are, in accordance with the instructions of the Executive Committee, organized into a Board of Counsel and Advice. In this capacity they met at Good Hope Station, August 7th, 1878.

We submit the question with confidence, whether this band of colored men does not, by this careful and business-like survey of its work, approve itself as well qualified to carry on the important mission which has been assigned its members in their far-off fatherland?

BUILDINGS.

On entering the field we found all the buildings at Good Hope in a dilapidated condition, three in number, namely, the mission-house, chapel and school-house. The latter was a mere wreck, having been covered with bamboo, which was completely rotten. This allowed the rain to pass through, which hastened its ruin. As we desired to open school and at once proceed to work, we were compelled to repair it. As one of our first duties, the whole building was made anew, and also enlarged at a cost of about £100.

The chapel, too, was in a similar state, although it was covered with boards and tin. The school was held in this during the time of repairing the school-building. As soon as this was completed we proceeded to the repairing of the chapel. From this we went to the mission-house, which we found to need more repairs than we could possibly make before the rains fully set in. We could not cover the whole of the building, but the remainder of the roof was patched so that it might serve through this season.

At Avery we found three buildings, namely, the mission-house, chapel, freight-house; in addition to these a mill-shed, the three former in good condition. Adjacent to the house is an ell built for a kitchen, bath house and store. Under the chapel is a room for a school; adjacent to this is another room, used both for school and sewing-room. Also, at the freight-house is a shed-extension used as a lumber wharf. Repairs have been made on these roofs more or less ever since our coming on the field; also the under part of the shed, a water trunk, saw-lever, etc., have been replaced, yet much more is needed to put this structure in good condition, which we deem best to have done during the next dry season.

At Debia we found also one building in a dilapidated condition, namely, the teachers' home—a structure enclosed with rough boards—three rooms and a bamboo roof. This roof, like most others on the field, was almost worthless. It has been re-covered and is used at present for school purposes. Each of the above stations has one or more country buildings erected for different purposes.

AGRICULTURAL WORK.

At Good Hope there are four hundred acres of land under the control of the Mendi Mission, some of which we think might be very profitably put under cultivation. It was our purpose on entering the field to do something in this direction. Therefore we began to clear the land, turning over some with hoes, and we are giving our attention to the fencing of the premises, with a view to doing something in the agricultural work at the opening of the next season.

The records show that a hundred and sixty acres of land are under control of our mission at Avery. About eight of these are cleared off, including yard. Three hundred and six coffee trees are growing on said land. The trees are not in a very promising condition, and we are unable to say as yet what the result will be.

CHURCH WORK.

On entering the work at Good Hope Station, we found the church abandoned, the doors having been closed for months, since the death of the Rev. Barnabas Root. Many of the members had united with the Church Mission Society.

We re-organized with as much of the old element as willingly returned, and set to persuading others who knew not Christ to come into the fold, and we rejoice to say that our efforts have been blest. Twenty-two new converts have been added, mostly from among the pupils of the mission, and some who serve as laborers; nearly all from the native element, whose eyes have been opened to the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, and have learned to love him.

Now our number of regular members is forty-four. In addition to these we have baptized ten children. Our church is in a healthy condition, and attended mostly by a native element, preached to through an interpreter. The attendance is good, and at times our accommodations are not sufficient.

At Mannah Bargroo Station, or Avery, we have a new chapel, which has been opened since our coming to the field. Meetings were conducted in the first part of the year by Bros. James and White. The people became more and more interested in these meetings. Since the arrival of the new missionaries, Rev. A. E. Jackson has been put in charge of that work, and regular preaching services, together with prayer-meetings, have been kept up. Seven adults have been baptized and four children. The whole number enrolled is thirty. There is great interest manifested among others, whom we hope soon to see converted.

We have preaching services at eleven A. M., Sunday-school at two P. M., prayer-meeting at seven P. M. Also a Thursday evening prayer-meeting. There is a preaching station outside the mission.

SCHOOL WORK.

The progress of the schools, both at Good Hope and Avery, is wonderful when compared with the chances of the scholars. The advantages have been poor, as we have been trying to fight without arms for the last nine months. [Provision was made for a supply of books from England, but a misunderstanding led to delay; the books have since been sent from this country.]

Many of our scholars attend school with only a handkerchief as a garment, tied around their necks, hanging somewhat cloak fashion.

School is taught at Debia. The prospect does not seem very hopeful, yet more so than at any time previous. The people are very poor, and are not able to supply the wants of their children. A larger number could be brought in if we were to aid them a little. This, we hope, we shall be able to do, to some extent, in future, as we trust we shall be so advised by the Committee at at New York.

The Sunday-schools, no small factor in our work, are in a flourishing condition. We stand in great need of Sunday-school books, papers, mottoes, etc., which we hope will soon be supplied us.

Our aim is to train up young men and young women, who may go forth into this broad continent and carry the light to those benighted ones whom we are unable to reach. Therefore, we recommend to this body the importance of establishing, at whatever station in their judgment seems best, a High School for the purpose of training up persons to be missionaries to the dying millions in the interior, with hope of the approval of the Executive Committee at New York.

The Board recommend to the Committee at New York that each station be allowed to retain as many scholars as can be well provided for.

Their report concludes thus: In our view, there are many places which could be opened and worked up with great success. But our present situation forbids any attempt. We hope the change may be such soon that we shall be able to do something in this direction, as we consider this to be one of the purposes for which we were sent out.

From Rev. Floyd Snelson, Good Hope.

The church-work is progressing very well. At our last communion, the first Sabbath in May, eleven natives united with the church, all hopefully converted. It was a great day with us. One of the old sisters, who had been here from the beginning, cried out, "Thank God! I've never seen it so before," with many other expressions of joy. Others are seeking admission; but it was thought best that they should wait until another opportunity. One child was baptized. Pray that the Lord may bless us.

With painful regret I must inform you that Death has entered our ranks, and has taken away one of our missionaries—our sister, Mrs. James. I wrote you in my last that she and her little daughter were unwell. I learned by a letter May 20th from Dr. James (who is stationed at Avery), that his wife was seized with a convulsion on the morning of Sunday, the 19th, while engaged in her domestic business, was taken to her room, and that one convulsion succeeded another rapidly, and with such violence that she could not speak, until two o'clock in the night, when she died.

All are now comparatively well, and the work is going on. We feel its importance more and more, and we are not discouraged by the fact that one has fallen, but will close up our ranks and march forward, hoping to be re-inforced from time to time, until the victory is won.

ADVANTAGES OF COLORED MISSIONARIES.

Extract of Letter from Mr. A. E. White.

You would like to know what I think about colored missionaries doing good here. My firm belief is, that they can do more than any other missionaries under the sun. These people have always been used to colored people. Most of the white men whom they have seen were traders, seeking their own good.

They robbed the people of their produce and children, and destroyed their confidence. A white missionary has to be more careful than a colored one. The natives look upon a white person as unnatural, and think he is above them in every way, and that God made him so. They also think it is of no use for them to try to do the things they see the white man do. But, on the other hand, when they see a colored man do anything, they think if he can do it they can do it themselves. They are a great people to imitate. For a proof of what I have said, look at the Shengay Mission. It is conducted altogether by colored missionaries, and stands ahead of others on the coast. Do not think I say this because I am a colored man. I say it because I know it is true.

SERMON.

REV. S. E. HERRICK, D. D.

1. Peter, ii. 9: "But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people, that ye should shew forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into His marvellous light."

Three grand ideas stand out here in high relief. They need hardly more than to be indicated; when once clearly seen, their importance is self-evidencing.

The First is, that there exists in the world a people having no national boundaries, defined by no geographical limitations, hemmed in by no mountain ranges, with no sea-washed shores, divided by no rivers, confined to neither hemisphere, knowing no lines of latitude or longitude, bearing no race marks of color or formation of skull or configuration of features, speaking no one language, and yet a people, having an existence as complete, as unified, as peculiar, as truly sui generis as France or England or Germany; a people having organic unity; a people with characteristics peculiar to itself, possessing a life, a constitution and a government of its own, with its own code of laws, its own system of sanctions and penalties; with its own work to do and its own part to play in the great drama of the world's history.

The Second grand idea is, that this singular nation, this peculiar people, has been called out of darkness into a marvellous light. Obedient to the dictate of some great, silent law, as mighty as that which draws all the rain drops of the air and all the rills of the mountains towards the basin of the sea, this nation has been drawn from all quarters and from all languages, not only into an invisible unity—the separate lives of the individuals coalescing into one great organic life—but it has been a translation of every individual out of darkness and all that darkness can symbolize, into light and all the blessings that light can represent.

The Third grand idea is, that this great, peculiar people has thus been called, selected, organized and brought into the light to be a royal priesthood in the world, for the specific purpose of expressing and emphasizing the praises of him who has called it into existence. The development of these three thoughts is our work this evening.

I. "Ye," says the Apostle, "are a chosen generation." This word chosen—which is the same word that is rendered elsewhere elect—election—has been one of the most troublesome words in the New Testament. It has been made at times the centre of great disputes and of painful variance among good men. It is very doubtful, however, whether it will ever again be such a subject of angry discussion as it has been in the past. Because, as men come more and more into the knowledge of the divine methods of working, as science advances upon her luminous path, men are coming to see and acknowledge that election, or choice, is a necessary element in all intelligent operations. A process of election is going on all the time and everywhere, both in the workings of man and in the workings of Nature which are none other than the works of God. Every organic existence, from a fungus or a sea-weed up to the human body, and thence up to the formation of a nation or the creation of a world, is an illustration of the principle of election. What is the growth and the continued existence of a tree, but the constant selection, by its vital force, of those elements out of the soil and air and dew and sunlight which go to make up its substance? It chooses—or rather, I should say, the all-embracing, all-creating Spirit chooses for it—those elementary substances out of the surrounding matter which will make it a tree of one species and not of another, which will give its foliage one color and not another color. The same kind of an election is going on in the upbuilding of the human body. In part, the election is unconscious and utterly beyond our control; in part, we ourselves control it, and make ourselves in body and mind measurably what we choose. I saw the other day, a striking illustration of the truth* that God makes of the same clay one vessel to honor and another to dishonor. If you go out in springtime and look down carefully into a standing pool, you may see a multitude of little black specks that do not look much as if they could ever become living creatures. But if you watch them day by day, you may discover that each little black spot has the power of growing, and of growing on a certain fixed plan. By the quickening power of the sun's heat, and by gathering in to itself nutriment from the surrounding water, it expands and changes its form most marvellously into a tadpole, then into a frog, bearing not the slightest resemblance to its former self. Why does not one of these little black spots ever turn into anything save a frog? Why not sometimes into a toad or an eft? Why not into a fish or a serpent? The eggs of all these animals in their earliest stages are exactly alike. The microscope reveals no difference. And what seems more strange and awful still, even the mere animal and the human being seem, under the microscope, to have the same beginning. And why does the one become a mere animal and the other a man, a child of God, an heir of the Kingdom of Heaven? There is but one answer. It is by the Divine election, which makes of the same clay one vessel to honor and another to dishonor. Then, as the process of human growth advances, how wide the realm, how various the sources, from whence the structure derives its material nutriment. Consider the food which sometimes goes to the provision of a single meal; the tea or coffee, from Java or Japan; the bread, from the prairies of the West; the butter, from the pastures of the North; the sugar, from the plantations of the South; the fruits, from the islands of the sea; even the draught of water, God chose it for you, sent a sunbeam to draw it up from the bosom of the great Atlantic, cleansed it, sweetened it, strained it through the cloud-rack, filtered it through the balmy needles of the mountain pine and the clear sands of the hillside, and so brought it within the walls of your house, into the goblet at your hand this morning; and now, by His election, that is a part of you. And when we consider that not a single ray of light, be it from the sun from which it came but eight minutes ago, or from the remotest star from which it started before Adam was created, not one such ray falls upon man without effecting some real change in his physical condition, without adding something to it or taking something from it, we must acknowledge that every human body is the aggregate of an infinite series of divine choices and selections, from an infinite wealth of material, that was scattered through an infinity of space, and perhaps preparing for this selection through an infinity of time.

Now extend the illustration, and apply the principle to the creation and upbuilding of a nation. Take England, with her more than thousand years of history. There, at the beginning of the Christian era, were the ancient Britons, a germ as unpromising as the black speck in the stagnant pool. But how, as the centuries pass by—which are but days in the development of national life—there came in, apparently by their own spontaneous movement, but really by the Divine election, the Saxons, the Angles, the Danes, the Normans, the Flemings, and the fugitive Huguenots, gradually building up the English nation, a chosen generation, from which we all may well be proud and grateful to have come. We may talk about the law of natural selection, and the survival of the fittest, properly enough, no doubt, both in nature and history. But the truth ultimately will be seen to lie behind these terms. Natural selection is God's election, and the fittest survives because that election has made it fit to survive.

And the same great truth is receiving fresh illustration in our own land. We are being chosen and our elements are being segregated from every quarter of the habitable globe, by some higher law than we can announce or detect, and are being brought into our national life by the breezes of the sky and the billows of the ocean; talking more languages than the builders of Babel, yet tending towards coalescence, fusing into organic unity; to what great end in the movements of Jehovah's plan does not yet appear.

Now, on the same plan is God working in building up that great mystical body of the Christian Church. "Ye," says the Apostle, "are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people." Turn back to the opening words of his epistle, which answer to the superscription that we put upon a letter, and see to whom the words are addressed. Not to any local congregation at Ephesus, at Athens, or at Rome; not to any denomination—for they had denominations even in Apostolic days, just as we have Calvinists and Armenians and Socinians and Swedenborgians. Some said, "I am of Paul, and I of Apollos, and I of Cephas, and I of Christ." No, his words are these, and it would be well for us in our hours of narrowness and conceit to recall them: "Peter, an Apostle of Jesus Christ, to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ." Ye, the great multitude of scattered strangers, calling no place home, held by no visible national bond, ye are a people, a holy nation; ye are God's empire in the world, chosen, selected, segregated, held about Christ as a centre and a sovereign, by a bond as invisible and yet as invincible as that which binds the wandering planets to their sun. Homeless ye, yet are ye ever at home, for ye are chosen and adopted into the family of God. Scattered abroad, expatriated even, to the eye of sense, yet are ye dwellers "in the house of the Lord forever." The nations of the world come and go, earth's empires rise and fall, but ye are a peculiar people, of the kingdom which is an everlasting kingdom and cannot be moved. From the insignificant and formless germ which sprang at the foot of Jesus' cross, which men deigned not to notice, or noticed but to despise, has come the mystical body of which He is the head and all ye are members. And still the Almighty choice goes on, and the election of grace cannot be frustrated. The same resistless will which brings into the organic human form its elements from boundless areas of space, from sun and star and sea and mountain, and from every period of time; which gathers, by a law to us inscrutable, the most varied and heterogeneous forces and fuses them into a single earthly nationality; that same resistless will takes hold upon the elegant European, the vigorous American, the swarthy African, the red Indian, the stolid Greenlander, the stupid Hottentot, the thieving Kaffir, the fate-bound Turk, the automatic Chinaman, the dwellers about the frozen pole and in the languid tropics, and fuses them into one compact, homogeneous organism, a holy nation, a peculiar people, the people of the living God; the principle and bond of this new and irrefragable unity the love of Christ.

I remember to have read many years ago of an incident that occurred during the Crimean war. It was at the close of a day of awful conflict. The carnage had been frightful. The field was strewn with the bodies of the dying and the dead. There lay in the dreadful stillness the bodies of Russian, and Turk and Frank and Briton indiscriminately piled, their strife silenced and their animosities quenched forever. Through the darkness dusky forms were gliding about, some of marauders engaged in the ghastly work of robbing the corpses, some of friends seeking to know the fate of their beloved, some of compassionate Samaritans ministering to the last necessities of their fellowmen. At the same moment a French and an English soldier stooped over the body of a wounded man. It was a poor Russian, whose life was ebbing away from a gunshot wound, and who was suffering the agony of the burning thirst which only such wounds can produce. Neither could understand the language of the other; but as they looked at him, he looked up eagerly at them, and uttered the one word, "Christos!" Ah! where are the animosities of empires, the demarcations of earthly nationality? What is race, or color, or rank? What are the objects for which wars are waged or battles lost and won, before that name, the same in every tongue, which makes all who own it one? "Ye are a chosen generation, a holy nation, a peculiar people." And this brings us to the

II. Great thought of the Apostle's words, viz., that this choice and call of God translates every individual out of darkness into His marvellous light. In the history of every individual in this great nationality there has been a period which has stood as a crisis, a point of demarcation and new departure, a point at which he heard the Divine voice speaking to him and laying its authority upon his soul. St. Paul speaks of it as the heavenly calling, and says that when it came to him he obeyed it immediately. It is called by different names, but the fact is one and the same. Some call it an awakening, as though through all his life before the man had been slumbering and unconscious. Some call it conviction, as though through all his life hitherto the man had been surrounded by facts in which he did not believe, but now has suddenly become convinced of their majesty and supreme importance. I like best this denomination of the heavenly calling: the sounding of Jehovah's voice through the chambers of the soul. Adam heard it among the trees of the garden: Abraham heard it on the plains of Chaldea; Moses heard it out of the heart of the fiery bush at the back of Horeb; Elijah heard it in his solitary flight, and Elisha while plowing in the field, and Socrates in the whisperings of his good spirit, and the Magi in the flashing of a star. They heard and obeyed, and came into the marvellous light. Others heard and did not come—Ahab and Nebuchadnezzar and Belshazzar and Herod and Pilate and Judas and Agrippa and Felix—and tarried in darkness. Perhaps no two men hear it in precisely the same way, but it is one and the same call, as a father has different tones and different words for the different dispositions and different understandings and different ages of his children. Yielded to and obeyed, the man comes into a marvellous light sometimes like a sun-burst in the suddenness of its revelation; quite as often, gentle as a summer morning's dawn. Ignored and disobeyed, the soul knows not what it loses, and continues in its darkness still. Does any one say, "I have never heard that voice?" Then is it because your ears have been filled with the din of other things. Stop and listen at thy bosom-door. What is conscience saying to you to-day? What says memory, which, like the strange new invention, the phonograph, has treasured up for you many a speech from lips now silent, and ever and anon repeats it in your ear, with all the accompaniment of time and manner in which it was uttered long years ago? Jehovah's voice—can you not hear it? Do you need like Saul to be stricken down with a blow as well as summoned by a word from heaven? Do you need like the Philippian jailer an earthquake to enforce upon you the divine authority? Some of you might have heard the voice to-day, had you listened, and might have been gathered into the chosen generation, over whom shines the marvellous light. And the light is marvellous, whensoever, howsoever and to whomsoever it comes. It is a translation out of one moral state into another, in which one has new moral tastes and perceptions, sees the beauty of what before was disagreeable, sees the disgrace of what before was pleasant. It is amazing how an act of obedience opens the eye; how the act of hearty surrender to God makes God's authority delightful and His commands glorious. But it is more than this. It is a translation out of ignorance into knowledge—not the knowledge of the schools merely; not the knowledge that is acquired by study merely, though this also follows in its wake, but knowledge of a higher style, the knowledge which Jesus says is life eternal, the knowledge which a child gets through obedience, of the wealth which he has in a father's character, of the blessedness which is his in his father's house, of the father's methods, designs, treatment. A marvellous light shines for him upon the ongoing of Providence; a marvellous light which divests events of their false appearances and reveals them in their true form and significance; a marvellous light upon duty, turning its iron chains into a livery of honor, and softening its inevitable demands into intimations of joyful privilege. Oh, I pity you, my dear friend—no man is so much to be pitied—if the labor of life is nothing more than a struggle for meat and drink, or the obedience rendered to an unending exaction; if it has not been transformed into a perpetual thank-offering by the marvellous light.

And still further, it is a transfiguration of nature. It fulfills what the prophet promised, turning thorns into fir trees and briars into myrtles. It creates a new world without as well as a new world within. How often has that same vision repeated itself to the prophetic eye of the Christian missionary. At the unveiling of the statue of Livingstone in Edinburgh, a few years ago, Moffat, his venerable father-in-law, said that when his son had been led into those unknown regions of Africa, they had been frequently inspired and encouraged together by the thought of a Christian commerce covering those magnificent lakes, and Christian cities with their churches rising along their shores.

That same nature which sympathized with man in his fall is redeemed in his redemption. The marvellous light within is followed by a marvellous beauty without. The renovated character forces itself outward and creates an objective and palpable order around it. Where man is barbarous, nature is wild; where he is lazy, she is unproductive; where he is laborious, she is exuberant; where he is enterprising, she brings forth her hidden treasures and decks herself in garments of beauty; where he is godly, she is divine, her hillsides are clothed with gardens, and even her deserts rejoice and blossom as the rose. All things become new; new heavens and new earth. "The very world is transfigured and each glowing and beautiful sight is made radiant with the new and heavenly brightness of the smile of God." And now

III. Finally, this great, peculiar people has been called, selected, organized and brought out one by one into the light for a priestly end —to bring the world to the knowledge of God, or, as the Apostle puts it, to express and emphasize the praises of Him who hath called us out of darkness into His marvellous light. Ye are a "royal priesthood." A royal priesthood—and what is that? I pray you turn this thought about; revolve it a little in your minds. What signifies the Holy Ghost by this? Priesthood is that which stands before men for God, which stands before God for men, and which is ready to make any sacrifice which may be necessary to bring the two at one. Priesthood is that which, standing between the Highest and the lowest, offers itself as a channel through which His grace and mercy shall flow down to them, a medium through which their weakness and want and sin shall come up and consciously lay hold upon Him. Wisely and beautifully says Carlyle: "The priest is the uniter of man with the unseen Holy. The ideal of him is that he be what we can call a voice from the unseen heaven, interpreting and unfolding to men what so few have an eye for." The priest, therefore, is such, not by virtue of any arbitrary appointment to office, but by virtue of any superior endowment. He who has received the heavenly gift, upon whose vision the marvellous light has fallen, becomes by virtue of the gift a priest to all who stand below him in the shadow. The grace in which he stands constitutes at once his commission and his ordination. Like the Memnon by the mysterious Nile, when the morning light falls upon his brow, his lips must break their silence and tell the darkness that the light has come.

It is a trite thing to say that God has written the law of priestly ministry not only upon the page of His word, but in the very framework of the universe, and in the nature of things, as the poet sings,

> "The sun, who only shines to light a world;
> The clouds, whose glory is to die in showers;
> The fleeting streams, who in their ocean graves
> Flee the decay of stagnant self-content;
> The oak, ennobled by the ship-wright's axe;
> The soil which yields its marrow to the flower;
> The flower which breeds a thousand velvet worms,
> Born only to be prey to every bird—
> All spend themselves on others."

And not only in the frame of nature but in the records of national history the same law perpetually works. Philosophers are fond of showing what definite ends have been attained by the different nations of the earth, as one by one they have arisen out of the womb of time and descended again into its grave. Probably every nation has emphasized some great principle, or accomplished some important end. The Jewish nation apparently existed for the purpose of emphasizing the truth of the existence and authority of one supreme invisible God. The Assyrian and the Babylonian illustrated the truth, that not material wealth or warlike prowess, or crushing power or victorious armies, can give any permanent greatness. Greece emphasized the dignity of human intellect, and lived to give to human thought philosophy and religion, a language flexible and rich enough for their varied wants. Rome emphasized the value of law, and the strength of obedience. America asserts the equal rights of men regardless of color or blood, and proposes to herself to solve the problem of "government for the people and by the people."

Sometimes it has happened that a nation has refused to take up the priesthood to which it had been palpably ordained. And what has been the consequence? We need not go far back into history to find our best illustration. America had her mission, and verbally acknowledged it in that memorable sentence with which she sprang into a separate national existence, "We hold these truths to be self-evident: that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." By that utterance and those which followed she assumed the air and office of a High Priestess to all who were then or should afterwards be found within her borders unjustly degraded in life, involuntarily abridged of liberty or wrongfully crippled and hampered in the pursuit of happiness. The light had glanced on Memnon's forehead and he spake. But that was all. You know the way in which, for almost a century, the priestly vows were broken and the pledges remained unfulfilled. There was gross darkness brooding over a vast and growing multitude of her children and she refused the light. There was an undying wail of sorrow sounding in her ears which she refused to hear. There was the ceaseless clank of fetters keeping time to weary footstep and heavy heart-beat and few were the rivets that she stooped to loosen. She contented herself with doing her priestly offices in behalf of the benighted in other lands and in raising to the rights of freemen the hosts of Germans, Gauls and Milesians who came to her shores, and in building schools for their children. But the grandest opportunity that appealed to her priesthood she ignored, or used it only as a means whereby to gratify her greed of gain. Three quarters of a century He waited, in long-suffering patience, who called her to this holy priesthood, and then the long neglect must be atoned for by one great agony of sacrifice. Not now the gentle ministries of schools and teachers and books and the amenities of peaceful training in trades and arts, but the expiation of one great altar-offering—a holocaust of precious life. And still the foolish priestess has not learned the lesson; she will not sacrifice, therefore shall she be sacrificed herself. Must history repeat itself so soon upon the Western plains and on the Pacific slope? Let the meeting of this assembly be an open and rousing protest against such national suicide.

But I speak not now as to Americans but as to Christians. Ye are Americans but ye are more: "Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people." No longer incarnated in a Melchizedek, an Aaron, an Eli, the fact, the privilege and the duty of priesthood rests upon every soul that has named the name of Christ. No longer passed from hand to hand down a narrow line of traditional honor, the torch of life-giving light is put in every hand—into yours and mine—by Him who hath made us all priests unto God and his Father. The marvellous light into which we have each been called is our personal commission. By all the wondrous chain of minute providences over which we had no control, which made us the offspring of Christian and not of pagan ancestry; by that distinguishing grace which planted our infancy in the blessed atmosphere of New England homes and not in the slave-cabin or the savage wigwam, or the opium-reeking, vermin-infested den of the Chinese quarter; by that Book from which we spelled our earliest lessons, whose counsels have proved our surest guidance in the perplexities, and whose promises have been an unfailing cheer in the discouragements of life; by the right which we possess, though without a dollar to our names or a roof to shelter us, or a powerful friend to lend us aid or influence, to stand up before our Maker and before the world, and say, "A man's a man for a' that;" nay, by the tender grace of our Elder Brother, who is brother to Greek and barbarian, to bond and free alike, by the tender grace I say, which has made us what we are, and on whose promise hangs all we can hope to be—by all this are we elect, called, ordained, commissioned, lifted into priesthood by His side. A holy priesthood. Let not our altar fires go down, nor our altars for one hour be destitute of their joyfully offered sacrifice.

ART. I. This Society shall be called "THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION."

ART. II. The object of this Association shall be to conduct Christian missionary and educational operations, and diffuse a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures in our own and other countries which are destitute of them, or which present open and urgent fields of effort.

ART. III. Any person of evangelical sentiments,* who professes faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, who is not a slaveholder, or in the practice of other known sins, and who contributes to the funds, may become a member of the Society; and by the payment of thirty dollars, a life member; provided, that children and others who have not professed their faith, may be constituted life members without the privilege of voting.

ART. IV. This Society shall meet annually, in the month of September, October or November, for the election of officers and the transaction of other business, at such time and place as shall be designated by the Executive Committee.

ART. V. The annual meeting shall be constituted of the regular officers and members of the Society at the time of such meeting, and of delegates from churches, local missionary societies, and other coöperating bodies—each body being entitled to one representative.

ART. VI. The officers of the Society shall be a President, Vice Presidents, a Recording Secretary, Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, two Auditors, and an Executive Committee of not less than twelve, of which the Corresponding Secretaries shall be advisory, and the Treasurer ex-officio, members.

ART. VII. To the Executive Committee shall belong the collecting and disbursing of funds; the appointing, counseling, sustaining, and dismissing (for just and sufficient reasons) missionaries and agents; the selection of missionary fields; and, in general, the transaction of all such business as usually appertains to the executive committees of missionary and other benevolent societies; the Committee to exercise no ecclesiastical jurisdiction over the missionaries; and its doings to be subject always to the revision of the annual meeting, which shall, by a reference mutually chosen, always entertain the complaints of any aggrieved agent or missionary; and the decision of such reference shall be final.

The Executive Committee shall have authority to fill all vacancies occurring among the officers between the regular annual meetings; to apply, if they see fit, to any State Legislature for acts of incorporation; to fix the compensation, where any is given, of all officers, agents, missionaries, or others in the employment of the Society; to make provision, if any, for disabled missionaries, and for the widows and children of such as are deceased; and to call, in all parts of the country, at their discretion, special and general conventions of the friends of missions, with a view to the diffusion of the missionary spirit, and the general and vigorous promotion of the missionary work.

Five members of the Committee shall constitute a quorum for transacting business.

ART. VIII. This Society, in collecting funds, in appointing officers, agents, and missionaries, and in selecting fields of labor, and conducting the missionary work, will endeavor particularly to discountenance slavery, by refusing to receive the known fruits of unrequited labor, or to welcome to its employment those who hold their fellow-beings as slaves.

ART. IX. Missionary bodies, churches, or individuals, agreeing to the principles of this Society, and wishing to appoint and sustain missionaries of their own, shall be entitled to do so through the agency of the Executive Committee, on terms mutually agreed upon.

ART. X. No amendment shall be made to this Constitution without the concurrence of two thirds of the members present at a regular annual meeting; nor unless the proposed amendment has been submitted to a previous meeting, or to the Executive Committee in season to be published by them (as it shall be their duty to do, if so submitted,) in the regular official notifications of the meeting.

* By evangelical sentiments are understood, among others, a belief in the deity and atonement of our Lord Jesus Christ, the only Saviour of the world; the necessity of regeneration by the Holy Spirit, repentance, faith, and holy obedience, in order to salvation; the immortality of the soul, and the retributions of the judgment in the eternal punishment of the wicked, and rewards of the righteous.

HON. ALPHEUS HARDY, Chairman of the Prudential Committee of the American Board, Congregational House, Boston, Mass.:

The A. M. A., assembled at its Thirty-third Anniversary, receives with grateful appreciation the congratulations of the Prudential Committee and Executive Officers of the venerable American Board, and with thanks to God for the recent enlargement granted to the Board, prays for the continued Divine blessing on its glorious and expanding work. M. E. STRIEBY, Secretary.

Rev. J. H. Twichell, of Conn., read a paper upon "The Relation between our Land and the next Country."

Prayer was offered by R. M. Hatfield, D.D. After singing the Association adjourned until 2 P. M.

Afternoon Session.

At 2.25 the Association was called to order by the President. The session was opened with singing. Rev. Moses Smith led in prayer.

Secretary Strieby moved that the papers read be referred to the committees having in charge cognate subjects; also, that the papers be placed in the hands of the Executive Committee, to whom shall be referred the matter of publication.

The Finance Committee made its report through Mr. J. W. Scoville, as follows:

The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the financial statement of the Association for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1879, as presented by the Treasurer, beg leave to report that, in the discharge of the duty assigned to them, your Committee have carefully examined the accounts of the Treasurer, including a detailed statement of receipts and disbursements, also a statement of endowments and a full list of all the property owned by the Association, the correctness of which have been fully certified to by the Board of Auditors appointed by the Executive Committee.

The total receipts of the Association for the year have been $215,431.17. The cost of collecting, including the salaries of the District Secretaries and all other expenses connected with their offices, has been $5\frac{84}{100}$ per cent. of the amount received. The cost of publication, including the distribution of 25,000 copies per month of the AMERICAN MISSIONARY, has been $4\frac{13}{100}$ per cent., and the cost of administration $4\frac{87}{100}$ per cent.

Your Committee are impressed with the care, fidelity and economy shown in all departments, and can suggest no way of reducing the percentage of expenses except by enlarged contributions. It costs just as much time and just as much paper to acknowledge the receipt of $50 as it does of $100. If the patrons of the Association will double their contributions they will lessen the percentage of expenses one-half.

After long years of struggle the Association is now out of debt and ready for an advance. The machinery is in order, and the motive power necessary to keep it in motion is the earnest prayers of God's people, and a liberal supply of the money which is so rapidly finding its way to our shores. In view of the grand work which has been done and the still greater work to be accomplished, your Committee desire to urge upon the friends of the Association the necessity for a large increase of contributions the coming year, so that the missionaries and laborers in this good cause may "go forward."

JAS. W. SCOVILLE, SAMUEL HASTINGS, GEO. BUSHNELL, CHAS. L. MEAD, W. G. HUBBARD, JOSEPH H. TOWNE, W. J. PHELPS.

The report was adopted.

Hon. E. S. Hastings, of Wis., made an address upon systematic giving.

Rev. George Bushnell, D.D., of Wis., spoke upon principle in giving on the part of the churches.

Hon. E. D. Holton, of Wis., followed upon the same subject. Prof. Coffin sang a hymn, "Arise and Shine."

Gen. J. B. Leake read a paper upon "The Necessity of the Protection of Law for the Indians."

Rev. Henry A. Stimson, of Minn., Chairman of the Committee on Indian Missions, presented the report of the Committee.

Your Committee, to whom has been referred that part of the Report of the Executive Committee which concerns the American Indians, beg leave to report as follows:

Another event has occurred in what may surely be termed the providence of God to compel the attention of Christians to the condition of the Indians, and to our methods of dealing with them.

Whatever may be said of the policy of the Government, the fact is that the paroxysm into which the country is thrown at each new Indian outbreak, the perplexed uncertainty which is then manifested by our chief public officers, the conflict of orders which issue from the different departments of the Government, the passionate demands that are made for radical changes in our policy, and the general hopelessness of permanent improvement in the condition of the Indian which that wide-spread demand indicates—these conspire to prove that, if not a fundamental change, at least a more intelligent aim is necessary in our method of dealing with these, the most perplexing of our national wards.

In the hope of furnishing a basis of discussion, and of guiding the efforts of the Association in the new problems which are arising, your Committee venture to embody their suggestions in the form of a series of resolutions, which we present for adoption, if your wisdom approves them.

Resolved, That the aim of this Association shall be, as far as possible, and as rapidly as possible, to secure for the Indians—

1. A legalized standing in the courts of the United States.
2. Ownership of land in severalty.
3. The full rights of American citizenship.

These three things, we believe, are essential, if the Indian is to be, not Christianized or civilized, but saved from extermination.

Resolved, That this Association most heartily indorse the plan of the Indian Bureau to secure to as many Indians as possible the advantages of education offered at such distant schools as those at Hampton and Carlisle; at the same time we believe that the system of boarding schools on the reservations, which for many years have been maintained by the Government and the missionaries, is the chief educational agency that must be relied upon for bettering the condition of the Indian.

Resolved, That to this end the members of this Association will do all in their power to make the Indian question a pressing question, until the attention of Congress is so secured and held to it that the legislative enactment necessary to bring about these changes be completely accomplished.

We further desire to raise a question for the consideration of this meeting, viz.: Has not the experience of the past proved that it is not promotive of the best interests either of the Indian to be Christianized, or of the Association charged before all else with carrying to him the gospel of Christ, for the Association to be any longer responsible for the character and efficiency of the Government agent in charge of the secular affairs of the several agencies? Your Committee is not prepared to press this in the form of a resolution; but our personal judgment is that it will be better for all concerned if the Association return to the Government, with thanks, the permission now accorded of nominating agents, and henceforth allow itself to be simply responsible for its own missionaries, their character and their work.

H. A. STIMSON, A. F. SHERRILL, S. R. RIGGS, WM. CRAWFORD, M. B. WILDER, JOSEPH HART, E. P. SMITH.

The report was discussed by Secretary M. E. Strieby, President E. S. Tobey, Col. C. G. Hammond, of Ill., F. A. Noble, D.D., of Ill., M. M. G. Dana, D.D., of Minn., S. R. Riggs, LL.D., of Wis., Rev. A. F. Sherrill, of Neb.

The report was adopted.

On motion, the recommendation at the close of the report was referred to the Executive Committee of the Society, to be reported on at the meeting next year.

The Association, after singing, adjourned at 5.30 with the benediction.

Evening.

The Association met at 7.30. After singing by the choir, prayer was offered and the Scriptures were read by Prof. George N. Boardman, D.D., of Ill. "Rescue the Perishing" was sung, after which addresses were made by Jee Gam, of Cal., Big Elk, of Neb., and Rev. James Griggs, Kansas, Pres. W. S. Alexander, of Straight University, La., and J. E. Roy, D.D., of Ga.

The benediction was pronounced and the Association adjourned until 8 A. M. Thursday morning.

Thursday, October 30.

Prayer meeting was held, beginning at a quarter past eight, led by M. M. G. Dana, of Minn.

The Association was called to order at 9 A. M. by Pres. J. H. Fairchild, D.D., of Ohio. Prayer was offered by Rev. A. M. Thome, of Ill. Rev. C. H. Richards, of Wis., Chairman of the Committee on Church Work, read the report of that Committee.

The Committee on Church Work in the South offer the following Report:

The annual report of the condition and work of churches in the South under the care of this Association gives occasion for gratitude and encouragement; for, while the numbers in themselves seem not large, we are to remember that the work is comparatively a recent one. In 1864 there were but four churches under the fostering care of this body; in 1869, only twenty-three; while now they have grown to sixty-seven, with 4,600 members. 745 of these members were added to the churches during the past year, and 85 per cent. of the additions were on profession of faith.

In view of the peculiar difficulties that attend our work in the South; the heritage of vice and of moral apathy left to the negro as a dreadful legacy from the past; and in view of the fact that the quiet methods, the searching demands for rectitude, and the appeals to judgment rather than feeling, which characterize our system, are opposed to the traditional instincts and habits of the colored people, this is certainly a very good showing. It is much to gain such a foothold among this people, so deeply needing a higher conception of religious life, and to win, after years of suspicion and hostility, the respect of all classes. It is much to have 6,219 pupils in Sunday-school, being drilled in the first principles of divine truth, and into a better knowledge that religion must mean righteousness. And when we remember that the 7,207 scholars in the other schools are all under positive religious influence of the sort we are accustomed to, and the 150,000 pupils taught by teachers who have been trained in the schools of the American Missionary Association are indirectly receiving something of the same influence, we must feel that the religious work of this Association in the South is a large one.

But this is, we trust, only the broad and solid foundation for a larger work in the near future. Such a measure of success constitutes a call for more aggressive and extensive work of a distinctively religious nature. There are good reasons for not multiplying churches among the colored people too hastily. Though we could more than double our list in a year by the offer of a very little pecuniary aid, we want to add to our number only so fast as we can do thorough work, and make them nurseries of virtue and intelligence. We cannot afford to saddle our work with churches in which membership is no guarantee of chastity, honesty or sobriety, and where the only token of the Holy Spirit, instead of transformed character, is the physical ecstasy of "getting the power."

It is not a discouraging fact that last year only three new churches were added to the list (though two others have been organized since the Committee's report was written, making five in all). A thoroughly good work has been done during the year in "edifying the churches," building them up into a sturdier virtue, more rational views, and a more intelligent zeal. They are evidently growing in the features of a healthy church life. At several points there has been very encouraging progress in the matter of self-help, in building churches and supporting the ministry—a point of prime importance in the development of self-respect and manly ability. There has been an awakened interest and effort in the temperance reform, aiding to correct vices which have been the Freedman's besetting sins. There has been a marked improvement in the homes of the colored people, influenced by the personal visitation of devout and sympathetic women who have gone South for this very purpose. Following this hint, it is suggested by some that perhaps Christian colored women, trained in our institutions, of tried discretion and tact, may be found fitted for a similar work among their own class, and may find a large usefulness opening to them as city missionaries. These churches, too, in the expression of fellowship at formal ordinations, and in the wide-awake meetings of their seven conferences, have done something to promote that spirit of co-operation which the colored man needs to learn.

But while we must give special care to the nurture and training of these infant churches, and while it were to the last degree unwise to rush into every opening, and organize new churches indiscriminately at every point where it may easily be done, it is an important question whether the time has not arrived when we may wisely do more in this direction than hitherto. We have fortified our strategic points, and entrenched ourselves in educational fortresses that form a cordon of arsenals all around the field, to supply material of war; shall we not now deploy the troops to feel the way forward, and, pushing out from our base of supplies, begin to occupy the land?

A variety of reasons easily suggest themselves for giving greater prominence to this part of the work. The educational needs of the colored race seemed to demand it. With unquestionable wisdom this Association lays chief stress upon its educational work in the South; but it should not be forgotten that the church is a leading factor in that work. The schools help the churches. Twenty or more of the churches are in more or less close connection with the colleges and schools of this society, and they are among the best and the most flourishing. The more the negro is educated, the better he likes our style of religion and the better he makes it work. But the experience of the entire North shows that not only does the church need a school-house alongside, to make its religion intelligent and sensible, but the Christian college and school need churches as feeders. They must have a constituency from whom they can draw scholars, and by and by material aid. And to promote a zeal for education in places remote from the great centres, and to extend the influence of this training far and wide, these pilgrim schools need pilgrim churches. Moreover, it should be remembered that the church itself, rightly administered, is an educational institution. With the word of God for a text-book, and the study of truth and its application to conduct, a leading aim, as in our system we insist it must be, the church becomes a school of character. It is the poor man's college; it liberalizes and educates him; and it is the very school these people need, who have so long had almost a pagan conception of religion, uniting the wild orgies of a fanatical excitement with a gross sensuality. They want something that will change them from frenzied bacchantes into sober-minded disciples, in whom is no guile.

Moreover, the young ministers we are training need them as fields. Our four theological schools, with their eighty-six pupils, are graduating a score of preachers a year—men whom we have tried to fit to supply that crying need of the South, a pure ministry and an intelligent ministry. And now that we are raising up a conscientious, godly and well-instructed class of pastors, where shall they find flocks unless this Association gathers them?

Again, Dr. Strieby's admirable paper last year showed that wherever these churches exist, the thrift and material prosperity of the colored man is greatly increased. He gains in self-respect, economy, foresight, patience. He has a better home and more money, and is every way more of a man. Now thrift is a potent civilizer, and if we would help the negro in this respect we can do it largely through the churches.

It is to such churches, too, that we may look for recruits to that great missionary work in the dark continent which now begins to open before the Christian world with such magnificent opportunity. How hallowed is the soil of Africa with the dust of consecrated men who have fallen victims to its alien climate! But when such standard-bearers as E. P. Smith and Dr. Mullens fall in the daring effort to plant the white banner of Christ's love on those shores and far inland, the children of that continent, sun-marked as its own offspring, though molded here by the discipline of providence, and trained in our schools, may catch up the falling standard and set it on the heights. We look for new Livingstones among our colored brethren of the South, and there is a call for them. The eyes of English missionary societies are fixed upon the open door of Africa, and it seems probable that they will want to send out and support all the well-qualified colored missionaries we can furnish. But this cannot be done unless there is a greatly increased missionary spirit among the colored people themselves; and to cultivate this missionary spirit we need more churches.

Nor will it do to excuse ourselves from this work on the plea that there are other churches in the South to which the negro, by immemorial traditions and long association, is better accustomed, and still others which may be at first more attractive to him than ours. It is going too far to say that, because the African is an emotional and sensuous creature, therefore some theatrical, scenic and exciting style of religion is better for him than our simple, cool-blooded and intellectual sort. It does not follow that it is better for him to exercise his piety with his lungs and nerves alone, rather than with brain and heart and conscience, merely because he likes it better. The question is not, what would the untutored negro prefer, but what will best secure his development, and help him to a nobler life and character. The other method of argument would surrender him to the Roman Catholics at once.

We cannot admit that the negro has too oriental and tropical a nature for Congregationalism to thrive in. The New Testament record appears to show that the apostolic churches were made up of very much such material. Those early Christians were of such torrid blood and such sensuous natures that they gave Paul a great deal of anxiety, and nearly all his epistles were called out by their blunders and sins. They were fanatical and gushing, enthusiastic and fickle, boisterous and passionate. They burst through the bounds of decorum in worship and indulged in shameful vices. But it was because the gospel was intrusted to just such natures in self-governing churches like ours that the American Missionary Association has an existence to-day. Out of the seed dropped in just such soil Christendom has grown. The free, simple, self-governing polity worked well there; it will work well among similar natures here.

As a matter of fact, the introduction of these churches of the pilgrim sort is found to have worked well in two directions. It improves our somewhat frigid methods to be warmed up with the African ardor, and it improves the negro to be toned down and disciplined to self-control by our methods. Testimony from all quarters shows that there is a growing improvement in decorum, in quietness of worship, in a deepening conscientiousness, in zeal for Bible study, and in clearer understanding of its truth. Being adopted into a system that makes him feel that he is taken into fellowship with Christians who represent religion at its best, who insist upon the intimate connection of morality and education with piety, the sense of this new environment influences them. The shouting, half frantic superstition is going out under the force of example, and religion is coming in. A sound, healthy religious life has been developed in many of our churches in ten years, which could not have been developed in fifty years in those churches where the ebullient spirit of the negro is allowed to run to riotous excess unchecked.

It is a noteworthy fact, also, that our churches have had a large influence upon the other churches about them. They have been recognized as presenting a higher type of piety and character. Their quiet methods of worship have made the boisterous methods of their neighbors unfashionable. Their higher moral standards have been a tonic to the conscience in the others. They have set the negroes to clamoring for an educated ministry. They have made illiterate pastors feel that if they were to have any future in the ministry they must betake themselves to study. Thus they have set a high premium upon intelligence and virtue among all the colored people about them, and their influence for good has been vastly in excess of their numbers. And the more the Freedmen advance in intelligence and thrift, the more they take to our religious system.

We have no reason, then, to lose confidence in the pilgrim polity the instant we get south of Mason and Dixon's line. Like the Sabbath, it was "made for man," not for a small, select class of men. We need not, indeed, push it with such sectarian zeal as to be unable to recognize that other religious methods may do much for the religious culture of the colored race. If we can raise up educated ministers for the Methodist and Baptist churches among them, we shall be doing a good work. But with ample faith that our simple self-governing method is adapted to the needs of the negro, we may prepare fields for our trained ministers where they may have a better opportunity to work for their race.

While, then, we would not multiply churches for the mere sake of multiplying them, we deem the time opportune for laying new stress upon this part of the work. We would increase our constituency in the South in Christian churches which shall share with us in the work of education, and in home missionary endeavor, and in the newly opening foreign field. And we would ever remember that to elevate the negro we must keep him in the glowing presence of the cross, red with the heart's blood of Divine love, and of the crown which may be his as well as his white brother's, in that great kingdom where there is neither white nor black, but where "Christ is all and in all."

C. H. RICHARDS, J. F. DUDLEY,
F. P. WOODBURY, D. PEEBLES,
A. P. FOSTER, U. THOMPSON.
F. BASCOM,

This report, after discussion by Rev. C. L. Woodworth, of Mass., Hon. E. D. Holton, of Wis., and Secretary Strieby, was adopted.

The report of the Committee on Educational Work among the Freedmen was presented by President A. L. Chapin, D.D., of Wis., Chairman.

The Committee to whom was referred that portion of the Annual Report which relates to the Educational Work among the Freedmen respectfully offer their convictions on the review of it as follows:

This department of labor deservedly holds the first and most prominent place among the operations of the Association, for it touches interests of the profoundest moment. The internal peace, harmony and unity of our nation; the development of the rich resources of material wealth in the Southern section of our country; the mental, moral and social elevation of a race through many generations crushed and degraded by slavery; the supplanting of pride, prejudice and hate by Christian love in hearts perverted by the long exercise of absolute, irresponsible power as owners of their fellow-men; the spiritual redemption of individual souls from the bondage of sin by the truth and spirit of God; the spread of the Gospel in the world, especially in the dark continent of Africa—all these interests of transcendent importance are directly affected by this work of educating the Freedmen.

By the providence of God this work has been made the special charge of the American Missionary Association. Other benevolent agencies are doing good service in the same cause; but no other has so broad and strong a hold upon the work, or exerts so controlling an influence on the progress of this people towards the liberty wherewith the truth makes men free. Missionary operations for other races in other parts of the world involve some similar work, by similar methods, but with no other benevolent organization is Christian education made so distinctively and emphatically its specific mission, its first great duty. What it is doing to educate the Freedmen of the South has become the characteristic feature of the American Missionary Association. What has been achieved by the blessing of God on its instrumentality, is its joy, its pride, its great and precious promise of better things to follow.

This work, so broad, so varied, so systematized, as it is sketched in the Annual Report before us, has reached its present measure and form not by any preconceived plan of man's divining; it has unfolded as a simple growth, under the watchful eye and guiding hand of God himself. When this Association was formed, thirty-three years ago, no man conceived, as a thing possible, much less as a thing probable, of such a net-work of schools, normal institutions, colleges, and theological seminaries for negroes as now threads the whole South with the light of Christian learning and culture. But it was all in the Divine plan. The germinal thought of the whole was indeed dropped into the minds of the founders of the Association, and so embodied in its Constitution, but its development has been led on in ways that men know not. We look on it as it stands before us here to-day, and we are forced to exclaim, "This is the Lord's doing; it is marvelous in our eyes."

As a consequence of this providential unfolding, the work has been cramped by no cast-iron mold of long-time usage or authoritative prescription. It has been all along free to adapt itself to changing circumstances and newly discovered needs. This has disarmed jealousy and suspicion, gained steadily more and more the approval, even against their prejudices, of practical Southern minds, and so added greatly to the efficiency of the work. This growth is yet incomplete—nay, it is but just begun. May its future unfolding still be free and untrammeled. It is no business of this Association to prescribe beforehand just what it shall be, but to watch for light, and to follow the indications of God's will with efficient action, as each day and each year may bring the opportunity and the call.

As now conducted, the agencies of the Association are directly concerned with all grades of instruction, embracing common day schools, boarding schools, normal schools, chartered colleges, theological and other professional schools; blending also with mental, moral and spiritual culture the teaching of industrial occupations, and a training in good manners and right behavior in all relations. It seems best that the work should continue to have this multifarious character, that it may mold the whole life of this race as it rises into free manhood and full citizenship, and bring a positive religious influence to qualify the whole movement. Nevertheless, it is to be desired and expected that, in the progress of events, the way will be open for systems of public instruction, to be introduced and maintained at the South, which will provide for the primary education of negroes as well as white men, and so in time relieve the Association of much of its elementary work. In this matter our wisdom is to fall in with the indications of Providence, with no special anxiety either to hasten or to hinder the steps of the movement, but to do our utmost to prepare the way for wise and right action when it comes.

As a missionary society we must for a long time give chief attention to the education of teachers and preachers for the colored people. That must be done at the South, for Christianity and civilization can never be regarded as fully established among a people till from among themselves, in their own home-country, are drawn out trained teachers, leaders and ministers of religion. Our normal schools, colleges and theological seminaries must, therefore, absorb in large measure the vigorous efforts and resources of this Association, that the foundations of these institutions may be strengthened and their courses of instruction advanced and improved, and especially that aid may be judiciously extended to the young men and women who come out of great poverty to seek the advantages of these institutions, and to offer themselves for the service of Christ among their own people. The report very fitly emphasizes this last-named need, and we do earnestly commend it to the consideration and timely beneficence of our churches.

The Report shows unmistakable tokens of the Divine favor to this department of our work during the last year. Notwithstanding the pressure of hard times and the embarrassment of debt on the Association, the work has been steadily maintained, the number under instruction has been kept up, and in the normal schools largely increased; the standard of scholarship in the higher institutions has been advanced; strong testimonials of appreciation of the quality of the education given, from Southern men of standing and influence, and from Northern visitors, have been multiplied, and above all, God, by the precious work of His spirit on the souls of students in nearly every one of the institutions under the charge of the Association, has owned this work, and taken it into full identification with the plan of His redeeming providence. For all this let our devout thanks be given to Him who permits us to co-operate in His grand work of mercy for a lost world.

As we enter on a new year of this missionary labor, the signs are full of encouragement and hope. The Association is free from debt, with money in its treasury. A Christian lady has pledged a large benefaction for providing much needed material accommodations for this educational work; the rising sentiment of our nation is demanding new guarantees for the rights of the oppressed Freedmen; old obstacles to the work are giving way, and the return of financial prosperity gives promise of larger means at the disposal of our churches for the Master's work. May we not hope, also, that a fresh baptism of the Holy Ghost upon the churches, upon the executive officers of the Association, and upon the whole working force of missionaries, teachers and helpers on the field, may inspire all with a new spirit of holy consecration, and lead on this educational work in a movement, fresh and strong, toward the consummation which we seek and which the Lord designs? For this let us fervently pray.

A. L. CHAPIN, THOS. N. CHASE,
G. B. WILLCOX, J. BRAND,
GEO. M. BOYNTON, S. D. COCHRAN.

This was discussed by Prof. G. B. Willcox, D.D., of Ill., Rev. George M. Boynton, of N. J., Prof. T. N. Chase, of Ga., Rev. W. L. Bray, of Iowa, and Rev. A. P. Foster, of N. J. The report was adopted.

Rev. A. H. Ross, of Mich., presented the report upon the Chinese Missions, of the Committee of which he was chairman.

The Committee to whom was referred so much of the Annual Report of the Executive Committee as relates to the work of this Association among the Chinese in America, beg leave to submit the following report:

There has been added to the problem of simple evangelization undertaken by this Association a peculiar problem which reaches to the heart of political economy as a science, and which, consequently, has aroused against the work of this body as against the work of no other society, the interests, the prejudices and the opposition of individuals and parties. To prove this proposition, we have only to state that the American Missionary Association has grappled with the Negro question and the Chinese question, both of them questions of labor, of politics, of legislation, as of evangelization.

The mystery of Providence, in which Liberty and Slavery landed on our shores about the same time—the one at Plymouth Rock and the other on the James River—after two and a half centuries, is beginning to be disclosed. The emancipation of the slaves; the flashing of a torch by Stanley through the dark continent, giving glimpses of a goodly country, with great lakes and rivers, a "wonderful language," "suitable beyond almost any other known language to convey religious instruction to the minds of the people," a country of great possibilities, show how wondrously God works to prepare for the redemption of Africa. And the negro exodus is bringing the future evangelizers of Africa forth that they may be steeped in a milder, higher, better civilization, which they shall carry with them, instead of the type of Christian civilization prevalent in the Southern States. This opening of the bitter bud of slavery into the sweet flower of African evangelization, under the overruling hand of God, steadies our faith as we approach the consideration of a similar perplexing problem, namely, the Chinese question.

This question has been made prominent during the past year by the discussions in Congress and by the veto message of President Hayes. The passage of a bill by Congress, after full discussion, virtually abrogating a solemn treaty stipulation between the United States and the great empire of China, including a fourth of the human race, and that, too, by indirection, should cause every citizen of this Christian nation to blush in the presence of the "Heathen Chinee."

Professor S. Wells Williams, in the New Englander for May, 1879, says: "This treaty with China is the only one on our records which contains a provision respecting international emigration between the contracting parties; and it is the only one, too, so far as we are aware, which contains and lays down the royal law of Christ as a rule of action. The Governor of nations had beforehand placed the United States under peculiar liens, therefore, towards this ancient kingdom, to treat it with justice and patience." Our first treaty with China was signed in 1858, in which it is provided "that the parties to it, and their peoples respectively, 'shall not insult or oppress each other for any trifling cause, so as to produce an estrangement between them.'" The same writer quotes the fifth article of the Burlingame Treaty of 1868, as follows: "The United States and the Emperor of China cordially recognize the inherent and inalienable right of man to change his home and allegiance, and also the mutual advantage of the free migration and emigration of their citizens and subjects respectively from one country to the other for the purposes of curiosity, of trade, or as permanent residents."

Should our Government abrogate its treaties with China, by which migration and emigration are guaranteed, this Association can fall back upon "the inherent and inalienable right of man to change his home and allegiance," as the sufficient ground on which to rest its claim for just and equal rights for Chinamen within our borders—their right to come and go at pleasure, to live and labor among us, and to enter into citizenship with us. We admit that there enter into this Chinese problem, as into the Negro problem, two classes of factors, the divine and the human. It is for statesmen to consider and adjust the human factors to the divine; but it is ours, as disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ, to place in the forefront the divine factors of right, justice, fraternity, love, the principles of the Christian religion, in accordance with which alone can the true and stable solution be reached. This Association has planted its feet upon the solid rock of God's truth, and it must lift no foot except to go forward. Only in this direction can Christians meet the responsibilities laid upon them by the immigration of the Chinese, and fulfil not merely the negative rule of reciprocity announced by Confucius, but the positive law of Christian love announced by Jesus Christ.

There must be elements of peculiar value in a people that can maintain their national existence so long. Be they what they may, they fit a nation to survive, and we need to study them and incorporate them into the foundations of this republic. It has been said that the communists have charged upon the Chinese in America two mortal sins: First, that they live economically; and secondly, that they don't get drunk. "In the Chinese quarter," says Prof. Williams, "there is no drunkennesss, no profane swearing, no fighting, and no miserable wrecks of women." Again it has been said that "the leading characteristics of the Chinese, which have given them their standing among the nations of the earth, are their thrift and industry, their respect and pursuit of the arts of peace and learning, and their love of order and law." Our Christian land would be greatly assured for the future if these "mortal sins" should become universally prevalent among Americans.

The Chinese of California have been designated in the Senate chamber by Senator Blaine as "this coolie population," when, so far as the evidence goes, not a coolie has ever been brought to our shores, or has ever landed among us. And it is claimed that they have added $300,000,000 to the wealth of the single State of California, which would not have occurred had the Chinese remained away. We owe, then, some return for this, other than injustice and wrong.

We would utter, therefore, our solemn protest as an Association against the discriminating legislation of State or nation, and the insults and wrongs of individuals, by which the lives of the Chinese among us have been vexed, and the name of the Christian religion has been dishonored. And we would urge this Association to lead the van in arousing public sentiment against the wrongs already inflicted as now threatened, and to prosecute its work of evangelization among them, until the Chinese shall be as undisturbed in America as immigrants from other lands. The cry that the Chinamen must go is unworthy our nation and our religion.

We regard the work of this Association among the Chinamen in America as fruitful in good results. Its superintendent on the field has said: "I doubt whether any evangelistic labor in connection with our churches has yielded larger results, in proportion to the funds employed, and the breadth which we have been permitted to give to the work." That work has been limited. Out of $179,000 expended by this Association last year, only $6,596 was given to this work. This was increased a little by other funds in California. But this sum, applied to twelve schools with twenty-one teachers and 1,489 pupils, is too small for the greatness of the work, for the 100,000 Chinamen in this country have the closest relations with the millions left at home. They are constantly coming and going. The Rev. W. C. Pond said, in 1876, that during the fourteen preceding years nearly 130,000 had landed in San Francisco, or about 9,000 annually; but they are returning nearly or quite as fast as they come. They are "picked young men, industrious, enterprising, persistent." As they come to us, feel our molding touch to harden or to soften, and then return home, we owe it to them, to ourselves, and to Christ, to pass as many as possible of this moving stream of immortal souls through our schools and under the influences of One greater than Confucius. We want the returning stream to bear on its bosom the glad tidings of the Lord Jesus Christ.

We, therefore, recommend the enlargement of this work to its utmost demand. It touches vitally the evangelization of 400,000,000 of brothers and sisters. This work is broader than that among the Indian and the Negro; it is broader than the evangelization of Africa. We press its importance, therefore, both upon the officers and the constituent members of this Association; for by and by we may see in it the Divine purpose to redeem China by means of the Chinamen returning home laden with the riches of years more precious than gold.

Your Committee desire to express its high appreciation of the able and exhaustive paper on the Chinese question read before the Association by Rev. J. H. Twichell and submitted to this Committee, and recommend its publication.

Your Committee deem it of great importance suitably to recognize the action of President Hayes in saving us by a veto from national disgrace. When Congress had so far forgotten the whole past policy of our Government, and the principles of Christianity embedded in the foundations of the Republic, as to pass a bill indirectly abrogating a treaty unmentioned in the bill, the Executive interposed and saved both our treaty and our honor.

We would suggest, therefore, the expression of our appreciation of his action in the adoption of the following resolution, viz.:

Resolved, That the American Missionary Association, assembled in its thirty-third anniversary, believing that the treaties existing between the United States and China, so far as they relate to the rights of emigration from the one country to the other, and the treatment such emigrants should receive from the people and nation among whom and in which they live, are right, just, wise and Christian; does heartily record its appreciation of the high services which President Hayes, under God, has, by his timely veto of the anti-Chinese Bill, been enabled to render the Republic, in preserving inviolate its treaty obligations, and also the cause of Christianity, in removing a threatened formidable barrier to the evangelization of the Chinese, not only in America, but also in their native land, and the Association hereby tenders him its profound thanks for the same.

Resolved, That the Secretaries of this Association be authorized to convey to President Hayes this our action.

Upon this report remarks were made by Rev. A. H. Ross, Rev. Mark Williams, of China, Mr. Jee Gam, of Cal., Rev. J. S. Cogswell, of Ill., Mr. K. A. Burnell, of Ill., Rev. J. H. Twichell, of Ct., Rev. H. A. Stimson, of Minn., Rev. W. L. Hammond, of Ill., President A. L. Chapin, of Wis., Rev. B. F. Leavitt, of Ill., Col. C. G. Hammond, of Ill., and M. E. Strieby, D.D. The report was adopted. The Doxology was sung and the meeting adjourned.

Afternoon Session.

The Lord's Supper was administered; Flavel Bascom, D.D., of Ill., distributing the bread, Rev. Thomas Jones, of Mich., administering the cup.

A contribution was taken for the Trinity School at Athens, Ala., amounting to $437.46.

The Association was called to order by Col. C. G. Hammond, of Ill. Prayer was offered by Rev. R. B. Howard. Rev. M. M. G. Dana, D.D., Chairman of the Committee on the African Missions, read his report as follows:

The Report on the Association's work in Africa submitted to your Committee shows that the Mendi Mission has reached once more a degree of prosperity and promise. In its church, school and industrial work it has been prospered, and in the plan of preparing and using native helpers do we find the great principle of all successful schemes for disseminating the Gospel wisely adopted. Furthermore, the signal fact seems now already permanently established that the Freedmen are the providential missionaries for the dark continent. They endure the climate as Europeans cannot, and, as trained for their work in the seminaries of this Society, they evince a capacity which fits them for a rare evangelistic service in the land of their ancestors.

But the matter to which it is especially fitting that your attention be directed with unwonted seriousness is the conditional decision recently arrived at by the Executive Committee of this Association to accept Mr. Arthington's offer of £3,000, and open in Eastern Africa a new mission station. That indicates what all interested in the great problem of Africa's Christianization should welcome with thanksgiving and prayer, viz., that this Association is to take a new and advanced part in this latest missionary crusade. Now its work will have a higher significance and a wider reach; for, under God, does it more and more seem that to this Association is to fall the high part of preparing the needed missionaries for Africa. The relation of the educational work of the Association to this grand enterprise becomes impressively apparent. There is a compensation in God's providence, and in this instance it is inspiring to believe that our Freedmen, as the best fitted agents, are to become the preachers of Christianity to the land from which their ancestors were cruelly carried away as slaves. Here, now, is something proposed which will tax our faith and test our courage and consecration.

The field for the proposed mission seems to be wisely chosen, and in the Nile basin, making one more in a chain of mission stations recently opened, will this Association have its place and do its share in redeeming the continent to which the entire church now is turning with a yearning heart. It is somewhat significant that the proposed field for this mission is in a portion of the continent most desolated by the slave trade. Pre-eminently appropriate is it that this Society, so long the friend and advocate of the slave, should carry the tidings of "the liberty wherewith Christ makes men free" into the midst of tribes which have suffered from this terrible traffic.

The full and studied report of the Foreign Committee, in the April number of the AMERICAN MISSIONARY, on the character and promise of the special field designated by Mr. Arthington, makes it unnecessary for your Committee to add anything touching upon this point. The careful investigation made in the first instance confirms the wisdom of Mr. Arthington in naming to this Association the field he has. His own letter, published in the March number, shows that he had conferred with the best authorities as to the location of the mission, and that he has chosen a district that offers unusual attractions for such a station as this Association should establish.

We believe your Committee but voice the feelings of all friends of this Association when expressing the hope that the conditions on which this missionary advance depends will be promptly met, so that without delay measures can be adopted to enter this open door, and improve this latest and greatest opportunity of doing for the millions of the long-forgotten and long-despised continent. It is very evident that the foreign work of this Association is to become of increasing importance and magnitude, for to it has providentially fallen the high privilege of preparing the workers especially required in African evangelization. With its old mission on the West Coast rising now into fresh usefulness, on its new basis of depending upon Freedmen missionaries and native helpers, and the projected stations south and west of Gondokoro, in a field full of promise, it will become a great evangelistic power in Africa. The springs and feeders of this work will be in those noble educational institutions established in our Southern land, for from these will go forth the colored men and women who will show of what holy sacrifice and achievements they are capable, and in their labors, for which the preparation has been so strange and checkered, will two continents rejoice.

We should not forget that to this Association belongs the honor of inaugurating in this country the more recent phase of African evangelization. At the Annual Meeting in Clinton, Iowa, in 1874, was the first note sounded for a missionary advance into the heart of the dark continent, and in the annual gathering of 1875 and every year since has it been a prominent subject for consideration. Mr. Arthington was induced to make his offer to the Association because of its early and pronounced sympathy with this plan of interior missions in Africa, and we, of our own belief, would be disloyal to the flag we first gave to the winds of heaven, if we did not gird ourselves for this new venture. This Association cannot afford to be absent from the Christian forces now entering the far land, for by Providence and the signal history of past years, and its peculiar relation to the African race, it is called to take its place, highest of all, in the lustrous belt of missions that now extend from the Zambesi along the chain of lakes to the region in the Nile basin which we are to man under the name of the Arthington Mission.

M. M. G. DANA, G. D. PIKE,
H. T. ROSE, S. J. HUMPHREY.

Addresses were made by Dr. Dana, by District Secretary Pike and E. P. Goodwin, D.D. The report was accepted and adopted. Prayer in behalf of the African mission was offered by F. A. Noble, D.D. On motion of Secretary Powell, Gen. H. B. Carrington was invited to address the Association upon the Indian Question.

The Nominating Committee made their report, nominating the officers of the Association for the ensuing year. The report is as follows, and was adopted and the officers named elected:

After singing the Association was addressed by Rev. F. Bascom, D.D., of Ill., and Prof. W. A. Crogman, of Atlanta University. The hymn, "Stand up, stand up for Jesus," was sung. President E. S. Tobey delivered an address, followed by remarks from Rev. A. A. Ellsworth, of Galesburg, Ill., and an address by Rev. F. A. Noble, D.D., of Chicago. The following resolutions, presented by Gen. C. H. Howard, were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That this Association tenders heartfelt thanks to those hospitable people of Chicago who have opened their homes with so much cordiality and delicacy of attention to our delegates and visitors attending this meeting from all parts of the country.

Resolved, That the Association gratefully acknowledges the services of the daily press of Chicago for its enterprise and accommodation in reporting and publishing the important papers and doings of the meeting, so that its usefulness is greatly augmented, and especially the generous kindness of the managers of The Inter Ocean, who have provided verbatim reports, and have permitted them to be freely used in preparing the permanent records of the Society.

Resolved, That the railroad companies which have extended courtesies and favors to our delegates, and have thus enabled many to be present who otherwise could not have attended, deserve special thanks, and have awakened serious doubts of the truth of the saying that corporations have no souls.

Resolved, That special gratitude is due to the First Congregational Church and Society of Chicago for the free use of its commodious edifice, and also to the pastor and choir of the same church for their hearty co-operation, and to Messrs. Coffin and Thain and Mrs. Coffin for their highly appreciated assistance in the singing.

Resolved, That thanks are due the various Committees for their efficient services, and especially to Secretary Powell and the Committee of Arrangements, who have left nothing undone to make this thirty-third anniversary one of the best in the history of the Association.

After response by Rev. E. P. Goodwin, D.D., and remarks by the President, the Association sang the hymn, "My country, 'tis of thee," and adjourned after the benediction by Rev. G. S. F. Savage, D.D.

REPORT

OF THE

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

OBITUARY.

It becomes us, before entering upon a review of the completed work of another year, to make brief record of our fellow-laborers who have fallen by the way, or, rather, whom the Master has raised "up higher."

The Rev. Simeon S. Jocelyn, died August 17th, 1879. No man remains among the living who was so continuously and intimately associated with the work of the Association from its very beginning as was he. In 1839 he was the active chairman of the committee appointed to defend and protect the Amistad captives. Some years later he was prominent in the organization of this Association, and was, from 1845 to 1853, its Recording Secretary, for the next ten years a Corresponding Secretary, and from 1863 was a member of the Executive Committee until his death. His labors in behalf of the Association, and of the races to whose uplifting it has devoted itself, were untiring, and his interest was unflagging. He continued to attend our monthly meetings until he had to be helped up the stairs and into the Committee room, and when he could remain only a small portion of the time required. In Father Jocelyn—for so we all loved to call him—were mingled, with unusual fairness, both strength and sweetness; he was both brave and gentle; he was both cautious and intrepid; he saw obstacles, but he did not fear them. Giving himself early to the cause of the oppressed, he rejoiced in every advance, and was not disheartened at delay. The memory of his frequent presence in the Rooms is like a benediction on the place. He has gone to his well-earned rest.

The Rev. William Patton, D. D., died September 9th. He had been for fifteen years a Vice-President of the Association, and its faithful friend from the beginning of its history, at which time he was a pastor in the city of New York. For the past seventeen years he has resided in New Haven, Conn. He was an early temperance advocate and friend of the slave when neither cause was popular, even among good men. With both pen and voice he espoused the interests of the oppressed, and his robust heartiness and genial presence were a power in their behalf. To Howard University, of which his son, Dr. William W. Patton, is President, and to the A. M. A., he left bequests in his last will and testament. He died suddenly, soon after his return from England. He was eighty-one years old.

The Rev. George Thacher, D. D., who died Dec. 27th, 1878, was elected a Vice-President of the Association in 1871. Ordained in 1844, he served as pastor in several churches, his labors being frequently interrupted by ill health. In 1871 he was elected President of the State University of Iowa, which office he was compelled to relinquish in 1877 by failing health. He also was one whose sympathies were early enlisted in behalf of the suffering slave, and his interest in the education and elevation of the Freedmen was practical.

Two of our lady teachers have died during the year:

Miss Laura S. Cary, at Fisk University, June 28th, aged twenty-three. She was a graduate of the University, of the class of 1877, and a teacher in the Classical Department. She was one of the best illustrations of the possible attainments of the women of the African race. She is greatly missed from her place, as an accomplished teacher and a gentle Christian woman.

Mrs. Anna M. Peebles died at Dudley, N. C., Aug. 28th. A graduate of Oberlin, she was for some years a teacher at Raleigh, N. C. Last year she took charge of the school at Dudley, and became the wife of the pastor of our church at that place. She was a most successful teacher and a most devoted missionary.

Nor should we omit to mention here Miss Rebecca Tyler Bacon, a daughter of Rev. Leonard Bacon, D.D., who died Oct. 26, 1878, in Ala. Though Miss Bacon had not been connected with the work of the Association directly, for some years, her valuable labors at Hampton, in its early days, are both gratefully remembered and still impressed upon that institution.

So "the workmen die, but the work goes on."

GENERAL SURVEY.*

THE FREEDMEN.

The varying fortunes of the Freedmen through the year have added another illustration to the many which combine to show that an uneducated mass of men is always an uncertain quantity in the national problem. That these once slaves in the South have been wronged and abused, there can be no doubt. Advantage has been taken of their ignorance in contracts for labor, and in the manner of their pay. They have been misled and intimidated in the attempt to exercise their right of franchise. It would be useless to deny the facts. The thousands who have left their homes and associations in Mississippi and Louisiana for the chances of new settlement in Kansas, are witnesses as powerful in their silence as in their speech. They have not gone for nothing.

We have no apology to offer for those who have made it impossible for them to remain in peace, and who have sought by force to keep them from departing. But, on the other hand, it becomes us to remember that these evils spring not so much from local as from general causes. The same wrongs are perpetrated and endured, to some extent, wherever there are similar states of society. Ignorance is always at a disadvantage, whether it wants to work or to vote. It is always in bonds to some power and will beyond its own. New York and, perhaps, even Chicago knows something of abused labor and a controlled vote. The local causes which increase the evil may need thorough treatment, but that it is not ours either to prescribe or to administer. It is the general cause which we may consider, and to which we are directing all our energies—not to the restraint or punishment of those who do the wrong, but to the removal of the ignorance which gives such large occasion for the wrong.

For our work is foundational and steady. Amid all social and political changes the need for it remains unchanged. We are not engaged in pulling up the shallow roots of weeds, nor in planting flower-beds with annuals, but in subsoiling our southern fields, and so preparing the ground for crops of better quality from year to year. The only permanent guarantee against the abuse of any race or class, either North or South, is the diffusion of Christian intelligence among the abused, and of the spirit of Christian love among those who abuse them. This is our work.

We have no word of criticism for those who have chosen to remove to another State. Liberty of emigration is one of the most unquestionable rights of freemen. But there is no charm in the name of Kansas which will make the ignorant or the timid either wise or brave. Let the masses of the colored race be once armed with intelligence, and they can stay or go with equal impunity. Without it they will be anywhere at the mercy of either force or fraud.

Nor is the work of the Association to be limited by any local changes among the Freedmen. The removal of seven thousand men, women and children from so vast a population leaves no noticeable void; nor, even if the proportions of this exodus shall reach the highest numbers at which it has been estimated, will it perceptibly diminish the millions of a race which is year by year increasing in numbers and in thrift.

The only plea which these facts make to us is, that we redouble our efforts to forge for them the armor which alone can be their complete defence.

The Association has not, therefore, felt itself called upon to divert its efforts to the field thus newly occupied. If, as the outcome of this movement, there shall be permanent and large settlements of the colored people in new localities, it may become needful for us carefully to consider the claim which they may make on us for such service as we are trying to render their brethren in the South.

We have cheerfully forwarded such gifts of money and clothing as have been entrusted to us, to local agencies in which we had reason to have the greatest confidence, for the relief of the present distress, and have kept ourselves to our main work.

EDUCATIONAL WORK.

Our eight chartered institutions, in the eight leading States of the South, Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas, have continued to do thorough and faithful work, though the number of pupils has been somewhat less than the previous year, owing, doubtless, to the delay caused by the prevalence of yellow fever at the beginning of the first term, by the lack of accommodations, and especially by the want of funds from which to aid poor students to a larger extent. One has been added to the number of our normal schools, making twelve in all; two of these which had been free schools have this year charged a moderate tuition, which, while somewhat diminishing the numbers taught, has decidedly raised the grade of the pupils attending, and the quality of the results. In other cases the number is increased. Twenty-four common schools have been aided, six more than the previous year. The total number of schools of all grades has been 44.

We have had in all 190 teachers in the field; of these 10 have also fulfilled the duties of matrons,6 have been connected with the business departments, and 11 have been pastors of churches, but all have been actively engaged in teaching.

The total number of pupils has been 7,207, almost exactly the number reported a year ago. These have been distributed as follows: Primary, 2,739; Intermediate, 1,495; Grammar, 633; Normal, 2,022; Collegiate Preparatory, 169; Collegiate, 63; Law, 28; Theological, 86. This shows an increase in the professional schools, a decrease in the collegiate, and over 500 more in the normal departments than last year.

The reports of the quality of the work thus accomplished have been most encouraging. Greater regularity of attendance has been attained than ever before, and the ambition to keep up with the classes entered has been marked. The same persistence in overcoming obstacles to entrance arising from poverty and distance from the schools which marked previous years, has been no less conspicuous during that just passed.

The range of study and instruction has been much the same as heretofore. The work of the class-rooms has been too good to need to be materially altered.

Of the success which has marked the year we refer to the reports of the Commencement or closing exercises in the detailed report. Of the Indian training at Hampton we shall speak in another place.

The industrial and practical training has been that in which there has been the most marked improvement and expansion. How to work is quite as important a branch of knowledge for the colored boys and girls as how to teach. Indeed, that they may be able to teach others how to work is a large part of their vocation. How to behave themselves on the farm, in the shop, in the work-room, sick-room and the kitchen, is as needful for them to know as how to behave themselves in the school-room and in the church of God. This training is receiving more and more wise and thorough attention, and we are sending out young men and young women better and better fitted to be the teachers and leaders of society, as well as of the school.

Our schools and teachers have been evidently growing in favor and esteem, both with the colored and white people of the South. A most noticeable instance of the attachment of the colored population to the schools, and their appreciation of their value, was given very recently at Athens, Alabama. It became necessary to give up the school at that place, or to rebuild at an expense of not less than $5,000, which latter it was deemed impossible to do. Word to that effect was sent to Athens. The grief of the people was intense. It did not, however, expend itself in tears, but became motive power. They offered themselves to erect the needful building, pledged over $2,000 at once, and by gifts of labor and material provided fully for it, and are at work upon it now. They propose to make brick sufficient for its completion, and a surplus to exchange for the lumber which will be required. They are all at it. A blind man, who can do nothing else, offered to turn the crank to draw the water. Whether they will be able, in their extreme poverty, to accomplish all they have undertaken, yet remains to be seen; but such zeal in a good thing is surely worthy of special notice. When the colored people attempt to co-operate with us to such an extent we cannot desert them. The school will go on.

During this year it appeared to the Committee that a sufficient fund had been accumulated to warrant at least a beginning of the permanent building for the Tillotson Normal Institute in Austin, Texas. The foundation is already laid, and the contract drawn for the enclosure of the building. This great State, with its rapidly increasing population of colored people, and its insufficient provision for their education, demands the earliest possible completion of this building, and the equipment of the institution for efficient work.

With the four buildings completed the previous year at Mobile, New Orleans, Macon and Savannah, we are now in possession of better and more permanent equipment for our school work than ever before. But it is yet quite insufficient for its pressing need, which is most felt in the necessity of enlarged provision for boarding pupils, for it is, after all, in those who are thus brought under the continuous influence of their teachers, and away from the debasing surroundings of cabin life, that the best results of mental and religious training are realized.

The call for such relief has been continuous and increasing in its urgency; but we have been obliged almost to deny it a hearing in the poverty and pressure of these past years.

The near future will, however, we trust, do much to relieve this long-felt want, through the generous gift to the Association of $150,000 by Mrs. Daniel P. Stone, of Malden, Mass., from the estate of her late husband, of which, though it is not yet in our possession, we have been fully assured. In accordance with the expressed wish of the donor, this money is to be used in the erection of buildings at Nashville, Atlanta, New Orleans and Talladega. These buildings will largely increase the accommodations of these institutions for the class of pupils which has been named, and will greatly diminish the percentage of expense for their education, as but few additions to the corps of teachers already in the work will be required. In these normal and collegiate institutions it is the variety of studies rather than the number of students to which the teaching force must be adapted. We may add fifty per cent. to the number of pupils, and need to add only five per cent., perhaps, to the number of teachers. There can be no more acceptable gift than that of these new buildings for well-established schools—none which will so add to their effectiveness.

A few school buildings belonging to the Association have been, of late years, rented to local school boards, in cases where greater good could be accomplished for those for whose use they were intended, than by retaining them in our hands. It has been a saving to our treasury, a widening of their usefulness, and a bond of fraternity between the friends of education North and South.

We may only, in passing, refer to the beginning in the accumulation of valuable libraries made in some of our institutions. There is yet room for much needed enlargement of this important branch of our educational service.

Two things yet remain to be done that our schools may be placed upon a permanent and satisfactory basis, and these are adequate provision for the maintainance of professorships and of scholarships. We have been compelled to confine ourselves chiefly to making appropriations for the salaries of teachers, simply because without them there could be no schools at all. This was the one thing indispensable from the very start. But, increasingly, the need of student aid makes itself manifest. Gifts have been secured from churches, Sunday-schools and individuals for this purpose, and more money must be raised from similar sources. Yet it is evident that this must not be taken from the fund by which the teachers are sustained. That would be to increase the number of applicants, and, at the same time, to close the doors at which they seek admission. We must not try to lengthen the skirts of our coats by cutting them off at the shoulders; they will fall off from us altog ther if we do that. This is our problem: both to maintain our teachers and to support more students. It cannot be solved by any process of subtraction. Can it be done in any other way than by addition to our income? And it must be done, if we are to make our work tell as it ought upon the vast negro population of the South. To overcome the obstacles which stand at every step in the way of attaining the thorough education needed by those who are to be the leaders of their people, demands a power of will and an energy of perseverance such as few individuals of any race possess, unless they are assisted all along the way.

The origin and surroundings of these colored students must be continually borne in mind. They have nothing to help them in the homes from which they came; nothing to help them in the prevailing sentiment of the white people toward them; the fewest possible openings for such remunerative labor as is ready for white students in similar conditions, and checks on their ambition of every sort. Nor is it strange that they lack that stamina which generations of culture and self-restraint impart. Their help, both moral and material, must come from us, and those who, like us, believe that they can be and should be thoroughly trained before they are sent forth to lay foundations for the upbuilding of their race. Student aid must be freely and systematically given, or our higher schools will accomplish their beneficent design at great disadvantage, and only to a very limited extent.

But the glory of our schools and colleges is more than in all else in their religious character and influence—that they are Christian schools and missionary colleges. Indeed, they are so completely at one with the church work that it is difficult to draw a line between the two departments, and to tell where the one ends and the other begins. A few particulars may best illustrate the influence of faithful Christian instruction and example. Of 52 graduates of Atlanta, 50 at graduation were professing Christians, and none have fallen away. Later we hear, "all the members of the classes to be graduated now profess to be Christians." A revival is reported during the year, and not less than 30 conversions. Fisk reports several additions to the College church at every communion, and as many more of those converted there to other churches. At Talladega we hear of "a precious work of grace; 37 were received into the church. All but 2 of the girls, and all but 4 of the 45 young men, who are boarding scholars, are professing Christians." The pastor at Hampton writes: "Nowhere can teachers be found more earnestly evangelical, laboring often beyond their strength to bring souls to Christ. 11 of the Indian students were, in March, received into the College church." At Berea, the graduates of this year are all professing Christians. These are examples of the good accomplished and reported. In several of the lower schools, also, we hear of many being brought to Christ.

Nor are these Christian students idle in the Master's vineyard. They go out to their school work in vacation time, and have learned as they go to preach. The help which was given the previous year, to lengthen the short terms of a few common schools, thus furnishing employment for our student teachers, was thought to be fruitful of good results by our best and most experienced instructors. It has been deemed wise to somewhat enlarge the work in that direction.

108 teachers from Fisk, in 1877, taught 9,332 pupils. Over 10,000 pupils, during the year 1878, are estimated to have been taught by those educated at Atlanta. On this basis we feel justified in estimating that at least 150,000 pupils have been reached by our present and former students during the year. They also go out to do Sunday-school and missionary work on the Lord's day. Talladega reached 1,200 Sunday-school scholars through its students during the last year, and in all the years some 20,000. A high educational official testifies that the students of Tougaloo "almost invariably start Sunday-schools as soon as they open their day schools." So the seed is sown not by the way-side, nor on the rock, nor among the thorns, but where it "also beareth fruit and bringeth forth, some an hundred-fold, some sixty, some thirty."

A few words, by way of bridging over to our church work, as to our Theological Departments. They are four—at Nashville, Talladega, and New Orleans, which are ours altogether, and at Washington, where we continue to share the support of the Theological Department of Howard University with the Presbytery of that city. There are 86 students in these schools, of which number nearly one-half are at Howard University. They are sending out ministers well trained, both intellectually and spiritually, into our churches and those of other denominations.

THE CHURCH WORK.

The present number of churches in connection with the Association is sixty-seven. These are supplied with pastors, some of them white ministers of experience and culture, who, for health's sake, are glad to be in the South; others, young and earnest men, who prefer to devote themselves to work among the lowly; others still are colored men who have been educated in our own or similar institutions, and who are doing good work among their own people. Some of these are also principals or teachers in the schools, thus doing double duty.

The number of church members is 4,600, of whom 745 have been added during the year. This work has been under the supervision of Dr. Roy. It has been a time for making acquaintance with the men and the field, but his first visits have been full of service in quickening and counselling those on the ground, and in correspondence with the administrative force at home.

Three new churches have been established during the year—at Shelby Iron Works, Ala.; at Cypress Slash, Ga.; and at Flatonia, Texas.

After a careful survey of the material and opportunity, we are neither prepared to rush in and organize new churches wherever it may be possible, nor to abandon the field as unfitted to our polity. We could probably buy up a hundred churches within a year at $100 apiece, and then should be worse off than we began, loaded down with useless burdens. There is nothing in the nature of the South or in the character of the negro by which the people of that region or that race are unfitted to be good Congregationalists. It only demands intelligence and the power of self-control. Where these have been developed by Christian education there is readiness and preparation enough. Hitherto our churches have flourished under the shadow of our schools and of their graduates; but as the sun goes toward the west the shadow broadens, and the field for churches of our order is enlarged. There are some half dozen localities now waiting and ready to organize Congregational churches, to which our Field Superintendent will give early attention and assistance. Discriminating and timely help at such points will accomplish far more in the end than rapid and ill-considered assistance. Too many churches, both North and South, die early, because born too soon. We design and purpose to extend this work as fast, and only as fast, as we may do it with the hope of permanent results.

A goodly number of these churches report religious interest during the year, and, indeed, some of them are engaged in seasons of special effort and ingathering at this time; for in the South—strange as it may seem to us—the summer gives an interval from farm work which is often and successfully devoted to special Christian effort. A letter just received informs us of such a series of meetings in one of our churches in North Carolina, with a congregation of 200, who bring their lunch and stay from morning till afternoon, and often till the evening service too.

The impression made by these churches upon ministers who went among them for the first time last winter was very noticeable, and their testimony agrees as to the decorum, as well as fervor, of their colored congregations. Nor are they without the witness to their progress as is indicated by efforts looking toward their self-support and a participation in the general work of missions. These all have Sunday-schools connected with them, in which are gathered 6,219 scholars, besides which some of our teachers are engaged in Sunday-schools connected with other Christian churches. The cause of temperance receives constant attention in both schools and churches. Juvenile and adult organizations are found in nearly all of them, and the young men and women go out pledged not only to abstain themselves, but to make it part of their mission to persuade others to follow their example in this respect.

To the six Conferences into which our churches were organized, one has been added during the past year—that of North Carolina. The Georgia Conference takes the place of that of South-eastern Georgia. The Congregationalism of the South is thus fully associated. The meetings of these bodies are full of interest; their discussions are practical and admirably sustained; their fellowship is cordial and Christian, and their spiritual power is in some cases remarkable. The South-western Conference, this year held at New Iberia, La., was signalized by the quickening and reviving of the churches represented, and by the conversion of fifty souls.

Councils are called for ordination of pastors from time to time, and in all customary ways the churches mutually advise and help each other.

We should be greatly remiss did we not call attention also to the work done in the homes of the colored people by devout women who have given themselves to this missionary work. The need of such work can easily be imagined, but cannot be appreciated fully without a knowledge of the facts. At Memphis, Tenn., Atlanta, Ga., Miller's Station, Ga., Charleston, S. C., &c., faithful visitations have been made from house to house, and Bible-reading, cottage prayer-meetings, practical instruction, and occasional temporal relief have been administered by lady missionaries, while many of our lady teachers have cheerfully engaged in similar work, so far as their engagements would allow. No general organization of Northern women has been attempted in this behalf, but of their own motion circles have been formed at Detroit, Mich., Waukegan, Ill., Oberlin, Ohio, and other points, whose object it has been to provide the expenses for these messengers of mercy. The work, though limited in its extent, has been fruitful of good results.

Before leaving this hurried review of the Southern field, we are happy to say that our corps of workers, as a whole, has never been more admirably efficient than now. There are fewer changes in the force from year to year than formerly, and those who have just gone for the first time into these schools and churches are men and women of superior intelligence and character. We look for grand work and great results, through God's blessing on their labors in the coming year.

AFRICA.

About the beginning of the current year, the Rev. Floyd Snelson, who was at the head of the Mendi Mission, was obliged to return to this country on account of the health of his wife. We greatly deplored his loss, as we trusted much to his wisdom and experience for a wise administration of our work in that far land. To Rev. A. P. Miller were committed the position and responsibilities thus vacated. He, with Rev. A. E. Jackson, and their wives, Dr. James and Mr. White, constituted then our missionary band.

On the 13th of February, Elmore L. Anthony was sent, via Liberia, to join them. His various experiences as a slave, a soldier and a student, had fitted him to take special charge of the industrial work at Avery, though we believed him to be as much a missionary in spirit as those who had preceded him. He was submitted to a severe medical examination, and pronounced sound in health; for we have concluded that those only of unimpaired health should be exposed to the debilitating influences of a tropical climate. He has so far fulfilled all our expectations.

We have just sent another missionary to the field. Nathaniel Nurse, a native of Barbadoes, who has resided already in Liberia five years, and who has been maintained at Fisk University for the last two years by English and Scotch friends, sailed on the fourth of this month. He has shown much enterprise in the past, which we hope will be effectively applied to the missionary work on the West Coast.

Our force consists then, at present, of these six men and the wives of two. The men have endured the climate wonderfully well, having suffered only temporary disabilities, and having been laid aside but little from their work. Mrs. Miller and Mrs. Jackson have not been as well, perhaps, because they were not in as firm health before leaving this country, but have not been compelled, as yet, to leave the Mendi coast, even temporarily.

Last year we had but a single church to report, of 44 members, at Good Hope Station. Since that time a church has been organized also at Avery. These two churches now include a membership of 85, and have 190 Sunday-school scholars in connection with them.

The school at Good Hope Station has been in a condition of growing prosperity, and has enrolled during the year 245 scholars, with an average attendance, as collated from the monthly returns, of 156. At Avery the school has been small, the children being frequently diverted by their parents to work of various kinds. About a dozen children have been taken into the Mission Home to be educated under permanent Christian influences. A school has also been sustained at Debia, and a preaching service.

The industrial work has been carried on with energy, the mill and property have been put into better order, some 16 laborers have been employed in the saw-mill, the coffee plantation is beginning to be productive, and we trust that this arm of the service will prove increasingly a means of education to the natives and a help in the support of the mission.

Our missionaries have not been content with merely maintaining the work as they found it, but have been exploring the interior to study opportunities for its enlargement. They found the people peaceable and friendly, and open to their approach not only, but inviting their permanent settlement. It is their plan to use native Christians for preaching at out-stations as far as they may be able.

Our missionaries have had to labor under the disadvantage of a very limited experience in organizing and carrying on either church or school work. They all went directly from the college to the foreign field. They have made fewer mistakes of judgment than might have been anticipated. We regard this experiment of African missionaries to Africa as practically solved. Their endurance of the climate and their general success in the work are evident. More and more clear to us, from year to year, is the connection between our work on the American and the African continents.

And now, while our original mission field is again becoming fruitful under these new conditions, the question is brought to us in a way we cannot refuse to consider, Shall we, in addition to this, undertake a new field upon the other side of the "Dark Continent?" The generous offer made by Robert Arthington, of Leeds, England, of £3,000, to this Association, to aid in the establishment of a mission between the Nile and the Jub, and from the 10th parallel of north latitude down almost to the equator, compelled us, early in the year, to examine the field and the possibility of undertaking it. A large committee, through books and travellers, made as thorough investigation as was in their power, and were supported by the Executive Committee, as a whole, in regarding the proposed location as offering advantages in accessibility over almost any of the new fields recently opened in equatorial Africa; but they delayed any distinct acceptance of the proffer until this fund should be swelled from other sources to not less than $50,000. In this state of abeyance the whole matter remained until a very recent date. Dr. O. H. White, the Secretary of the Freedmen's Missions Aid Society in Great Britain, has been sanguine as to the willingness of the English and Scotch brethren to further aid us in the establishment of the proposed mission. He has already received contributions to a considerable amount for this object, and at the last regular meeting of our Committee, after careful discussion, the following resolution was unanimously passed:

"Voted, that on condition of the receipt of £3,000 from Mr. Robert Arthington, of Leeds, as offered to us by him, for the establishment of a new mission in Eastern Africa, and of a like amount from the British public, raised through the efforts of Dr. O. H. White, the Association pledges itself to devote thereto the sum of $20,000, and, with the blessing of God, and the assistance of the friends of Africa in Great Britain and America, to undertake permanently to sustain that mission."

The Committee were encouraged to take this step by the fact that the debt of the Association was no more an obstacle, that several thousand dollars were already in hand from the Avery estate, bequeathed for this very purpose, and by other, as they thought, evident leadings of Providence in this direction. And now if these conditions be met, and this new work at no distant day be fairly entered on, the Mendi Mission on the West, and the Arthington Mission on the East, will support one another in their plea to Christian England and America for generous and prayerful sustentation. Our foreign work will thus be more complete than it can be with but a single mission, and we shall be able to present a wide field for the generous devotion and self-consecration of the sons of Africa now in this land.

This new field is among the real heathens, unclad, and with their native barbarism made worse by all the atrocities of a slave-hunting ground. That evil is, providentially, fast passing away. During the last year Col. C. G. Gordon has overcome the mightiest of the slave traders, and his large and desperate force. When the influence of the Arab invaders is withdrawn, with their unnatural stimulation of tribal wars and the ready market they afford for human beings, other of the native kings, under the influence of even a few Christian men, will follow the example of Mtesa, who has lately forbidden the sale of slaves in his dominions under pain of death. So the Lord has set before us an open door, and no man can shut it. Shall we not go in, and set up our banners in the name of Immanuel?

THE INDIANS.

The Indians still remain under the care of the Department of the Interior. We believe that the Administration earnestly desires the promotion of their true interests; but the grievous wrongs under which they have so long suffered still continue to be visited upon them, and will so long as an impossible policy is attempted to be carried out by an insufficient force. The question as to the legal status of the Indian is now before the Courts. Until his rights there, and to hold property by a secure tenure, are established, he will be exposed to provocations which we cannot expect him to bear in silence.

To us was assigned, several years ago, the nomination of six Indian Agents, who were to report to us as well as to the United States Government. We trust that this work has been to the advantage of these tribes, as our Agents have, with perhaps a single exception, maintained good character and reputation amid all the temptations of that trying life. And yet our relations to the Department are not what we could wish them to be. In four of the six Agencies where we make nominations, changes have been necessary during the past year. In two of them, Agents have been appointed by the Department without our nomination or approval, so that we have no longer any responsibility for the Agencies at Red Lake, Minn., or Green Bay, Wis., nor have we, under these circumstances, the same motive as at first to secure good men for these places, when they may be so easily removed or our nominations thrown aside for others backed by another kind of influence.

Our missionary at S'Kokomish, Rev. Myron Eells, is still patiently pursuing his good work. He is pastor of the church of 23 members, and has three other preaching stations. In these four the attendance upon public worship is nearly 200; 110 children are in the Sunday-schools; 128 families are under his pastoral care. Mr. Eells has travelled among the neighboring people, and diffused his influence over a wide area.

A new element in work for the Indians has been the educational work at Hampton. 57 Indian boys and 9 Indian girls have spent the year at the Institute, contented and studious, and responding to patient and skillful teaching with marked and steady progress. During the summer a number of them gained great credit to themselves by their good conduct on the farms and in the families of Massachusetts among which they were distributed. It is hoped that the number of girls allowed to enjoy these privileges may be considerably increased. Captain Pratt has obtained permission to do a similar work at Carlisle, Pa.

The great feature of the advantage in this training is the continuous influence under which these students are held. It is indispensable to the best work as Christian educators of those who are not helped by their home life. Our experience is the same among the Freedmen, the native Africans and the Indians.

It may be, in the providence of God, in this direction that the Indian work of the Association is to be pursued and enlarged in the future. The Committee recommend, for the present at least, co-operation with General Armstrong in the work he has so well begun in this direction. The result of his experience, thus far, is his decided conviction that "there is no better way to elevate the Indians than in negro industrial schools." An effort in this direction promises greater results, for the same expenditure of money, than the attempt to found new missions among the Indians.

THE CHINESE IN AMERICA.

The condition and numbers of the Chinese on the Pacific coast, after all the various agitations of mob, and State, and national Congress, have not been materially altered. The sand lots have still echoed with the blasphemies of Kearney and his followers, and even some of the churches, with scarcely less vigorous proclamations, that the Chinese must go. California has adopted a new Constitution, though the question whether its Chinese provisions are constitutional is yet unanswered. It discourages immigration, imposes conditions on resident Chinamen, forbids their employment by any corporation, and requires cities to remove them beyond their bounds or locate them within prescribed limits; and, finally, both houses of Congress, yielding to political pressure, in the presence of the resident Minister of the Chinese Government, ignored its solemn treaty, and declared that no ship should bring to this shore more than fifteen Chinese immigrants at any one time. We have to thank the President of the United States for the veto which alone prevented this action from becoming law.

And yet the Chinaman is, on the Pacific coast, in numbers not increasing, but not materially diminishing. He does not come, because he can do better elsewhere. He does not go, because he has not yet attained the object of his coming. Meanwhile several Chinamen have, during the year, been naturalized in other States, and the force has thus been broken of the decision that, being neither white nor black, he cannot be allowed to vote.

Our work has not diminished in our twelve schools, under the superintendency of the Rev. Wm. C. Pond. Only three less pupils (1,489) have been enrolled than the year before. 252 has been the average attendance all the year through; 21 teachers are now in the service, including five Chinese helpers; 84 gave evidence of conversion during the year, while 137 have renounced idolatry. Mr. Pond says: "The total number of whom we have cherished the hope that they were born of God, from the beginning of our work until now, cannot be less than 285. The Congregational Association of Christian Chinese has now 198 members, of whom 44 were received the past year."

We believe that this work, with that of our Presbyterian and Methodist brethren on the Pacific coast, is both acceptable to God and approved of men.

FINANCES.

We come now to the statement of our financial history and condition. With profound gratitude to Him to whom the silver and the gold belong, and with renewed confidence in those to whose stewardship he has entrusted it, we make this record: (1.) The expenses of the year have been fully met; (2.) The debt of the Association is entirely extinguished; (3.) On the 1st of October the balance in our treasury amounted to $1,475.90.

It is sixteen years since the Association has been reported free from debt. The expansion of its work, which the changes effected by the war imperatively demanded, involved us in these unpaid obligations, which increased upon us almost yearly until, in 1875, our debt was over $96,000. Then came the turning point. It was diminished by a little over $3,000 during 1876; in 1877 it was reduced by about $31,000—to $62,800. Last year $25,000 more of it was liquidated, leaving at the beginning of this year $37,389.79. And now we are able to say that that whole amount is paid. $28,808.67 have been sent us for that express purpose. The balance has come from our general receipts from the living and the dead. And this has been paid in cash. We began to fear that our constant plea in this behalf was injuring the support of our regular work, and last year we set apart, to cover it, a residue of western lands of sufficient value; but the debt is absolutely gone now and not balanced against anything, and that property is free to be converted to other uses.

The total income of the year has been $215,431.17, nearly $20,000 more than that of the preceding year. $15,000 of this increase is, however, from bequests, which have amounted to $50,034.16.

For the ability to make these cheering statements we thank God, and in the remembrance of His past goodness we take courage. It looked an almost impossible thing that that great debt of nearly $100,000 should have disappeared, and that in these "hard times." But the way to know the goodness of God is to try some hard thing in His name. To Him be the praise.

We would not leave the false impression, however, on the minds of any, that these years of retrenchment have been easy years for us, or that the past twelve months have been free from causes for anxiety. Twice during the year we have been $10,000 behind last year's receipts or this year's needs. We were greatly perplexed in our unwillingness to increase the old debt, or to incur a new one, when, in one case, a large gift, and in the other a large legacy, lifted us over the shallows, and enabled us to set sail again rejoicing.

CONCLUSION.

And now, what is the significance of our present condition? We are out of debt. We have the promise of a far better equipment for our work in the way of buildings. The Mendi Mission is fairly manned, and, we trust, on the way to a new and wider usefulness. The Freedmen call for all the aid we can supply. All motives of love for self, for country, and for God, conspire to urge us to increase our efforts for their Christian education. Africa is stretching out its right hand now, as well as the left, which we have been trying so long to fill, and Christian England comes to help us answer the plea. It has been demonstrated at length that our Southern schools may help to solve the Indian as well as the Negro problem, and the Chinaman is yet at our western gate.

Is not the voice of God to us like that He spoke through Moses to those who had just escaped the taskmasters of Egypt?—"Speak to the children of Israel, that they go forward."

MISCELLANEOUS.

Our monthly publication, The American Missionary, is received with undiminished favor by our constituency. It puts our self-denying pastors and teachers in communication with each other, and keeps them informed of the whole work in which each of them is bearing an important part. The mailing list is under constant revision, and carries tidings of our work and wants to those whose interest is expressed in their constant gifts and prayers. We consider it an indispensable auxiliary to our work.

The Freedmen's Missions Aid Society still co-operates with us in our work. Dr. O. H. White has undertaken to raise for us a fund with which to supplement the gift of Mr. Arthington, as already stated, and has met with encouraging success, despite the great financial embarrassments of the people of Great Britain. We experienced the value of a correspondent across the water in his representation of us at the London Union Missionary Conference, held during the past year.

We are under continued obligation to the American Bible Society for generous responses to all our calls for copies of the printed Word of God. We gratefully acknowledge, also, valuable donations of its publications from the American Tract Society.

DELAY IN OPENING SCHOOLS.

MEMPHIS, TENN.—Our year has been greatly broken by the time lost at the beginning of the year by the epidemic, yet the school never seemed to be in a more prosperous condition. Both the normal and intermediate departments are filled to overflowing. Our horizon seems brightening more and more, and we hope at the close of the year not only to have gained in popularity, but to have extended the influence of the school for good.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Looking back over the past nine months, it seems a long time since the dark days of last September, when the school opened under the shadow of the pestilence, and we saw one of our own students, just returned from his summer work, stricken down by the fever. As the autumn advanced, the school began to fill up, though some who came to us after Christmas from the lower part of Mississippi assured us that they came "as soon as it was safe." Naturally the decrease in attendance resulting from the epidemic was mostly seen in the number of new students. Those who have fairly started in the work of getting an education cannot be detained except by absolute necessity. others who were thinking for the first time of going away to school were easily led to wait another year.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—The school year has been too short to accomplish all that was desirable. Eight months, our usual time, seems a short school year, but to reduce this one-quarter is almost a disaster; and furnishing school-rooms and supplying furnaces, out-buildings, cisterns and much needed plank-walks after school opened, was for a time a great hindrance; but the end of the year shows, in many respects, favorable results, and leaves more hopeful impressions and anticipations for the future.

MOBILE, ALA.—For various reasons, among them the sickness of yellow fever, our work here commenced under very unfavorable circumstances. Our school opened the 20th of November, almost two months after the regular time, with only 17 scholars the first week; but our numbers rapidly increased, so that by Christmas we had about 75 scholars, and after the holidays more than 150. We still have accessions every week, and the prospect is that before the close of the year we shall have more scholars than we have room for. Already the primary room is filled beyond its seating capacity.

TOUGALOO, MISS.—The present year opened two months later than usual, and the senior class will study another year before graduating.

SAVANNAH, GA.—When we landed here late last September, the re-building of Beach Institute was approaching completion, and on the last day of the same month a new corps of teachers began the work of the year. On the first day over 60 applied for admission, and the number has gradually increased to 338, in all grades from the normal down.

QUALITY OF THE WORK.

CHARLESTON, S. C.—It was a delight to witness the orderliness and accuracy of the training. It is only common fame that the Avery Institute stands ahead of every other in the city. It has a corps of six teachers, and scholars enough to word them hard.

MONTGOMERY, ALA.—This school has a building which compares favorably with some of the Chicago school-houses, (two stories and a good basement,) the whole accommodating from 300 to 400 pupils, with three noble white teachers and three colored, who have graduated from this school. It is no disparagement to the excellent schools in Chicago to say that, in point of order and apparent earnestness and successful work on the part of both teachers and pupils, these dusky boys and girls would not suffer in comparison.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Notwithstanding the delay in getting the school started, one of the features of the year has been the steadiness in attendance, especially in the advanced classes. As the result of this regularity, the school work has gone on with rather unusual satisfaction.

TOUGALOO, MISS.—Students are manifesting more than usual interest in study and general improvement. Less frequent change of teachers, a more regular attendance of students, and their promotion according to merit, have advanced the scholarship in this institution. Last summer for the first time it graduated a class.

MEMPHIS, TENN.—The school never was in a more flourishing condition than now, and the future has never before seemed so full of promise.

GREENWOOD, S. C.—School fuller than ever before; boarding-school overcrowded. Mr. Backenstose is compelled to make arrangements in neighboring families for students.

ORANGEBURG, S. C.— Our school has 196 pupils enrolled. We have a large normal class. Six are teachers now.

ATLANTA UNIVERSITY, GA.—The present year shows a larger number of students in attendance and a better class. Besides those already established in different parts of the State, over a hundred of the students teach during the long summer vacation in the public schools, and also engage in Sunday-school work. It is estimated that during the year 1878 over ten thousand pupils in the State of Georgia were taught by those educated in this University.

NO. 1, MILLER'S STATION, GA.—The day school has been good all the time. We have on the list about 55; it numbered a month ago 41 daily. Some of the larger ones have gone out of school to work on the farm.

LIBERTY CO., GA.—The number enrolled has been large, and the average attendance good. A most decided improvement has been made in punctuality and the general observance of school regulations and requirements.

FORSYTH, GA.—Our pupils have been very regular in attendance compared with past years. There have been 113 students in school during the year, many of whom came from the adjoining counties, and will go out to take schools for the summer. There has been much earnest study done by these pupils, who seem determined to surmount the difficulties which present themselves.

BRUNSWICK, GA.—The school has been free the entire year, and has averaged over ninety for the ten months. Many have been made wiser and better. Some have connected themselves with the churches.

COMMENCEMENT OR CLOSING EXERCISES.

HAMPTON INSTITUTE, HAMPTON, VA.—The examinations, except of the graduating class, were not written, but were oral, and on the plan of the daily recitations. The Indians attracted, perhaps, the greatest attention from the many visitors, in the conversation classes, which were conducted with rare tact and skill. At the other end of the gradation of studies were the very creditable recitations of the graduating class of colored students, in algebra, history, physiology and other higher branches; nor would it do to omit the class in teaching, where the seniors showed their skill in interesting and instructing the little children of the Butler Normal School.

In the afternoon, the public exercises were held in Virginia Hall, which was crowded to overflowing. The addresses were manly and earnest; some of them quite forcible and free in thought and expression, and dealing with questions affecting their race. It was quite touching to see a black boy pleading for the extension of the privileges of education to the Indian, and one of the features of interest was a simple story of his home life in Indian Territory by an Indian youth. Music by the band, by a select few, and by the whole school, relieved the speaking. There were other visitors of note. Chief among these were Secretaries Schurz and McCreary, of the President's cabinet; Senator Saunders and Representative Pound, of Wisconsin; ex-President Mark Hopkins, of Williams College; the Rev. Dr. Plumer, of Charleston, S. C., and the Rev. Dr. Hoge, of Richmond; the Rev. Dr. Armstrong, of Norfolk, Va., and Judge Lafayette S. Foster, of Connecticut.

BEREA COLLEGE, BEREA, KY. Wednesday, June 25th, was a beautiful day. At half-past ten there were thought to be three thousand in and about the tabernacle, and nearly a thousand horses on the ground. As Berea embraces but eight hundred inhabitants, including students and infants, it appears that more than two thousand came from abroad.

There were ten graduates—six from the classical department, three from the scientific, and one from the normal. The effort of the college to get on alone, without aid from the American Missionary Association, taxes all its energy and faith; but, thanks to God and its faithful friends, the past year it has not been left to suffer. The erection of the new chapel will commence immediately, though the necessary means are not all secured.

FISK UNIVERSITY, NASHVILLE, TENN.—Beginning with Sunday, five days are occupied with the different exercises. Examinations continue through Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. Monday evening is given to the exhibition of the class finishing the common school normal course; Tuesday evening is devoted to the Union Literary Society; and on Wednesday evening the class finishing the preparatory course deliver their orations and are admitted to college. Thus there is a growing interest and importance through the entire week, ending with the college commencement on Thursday.

Dr. Roy reached us on Saturday and stayed during the closing week, delivering, on Sunday evening, an excellent address before the Missionary Society. The baccalaureate sermon was for the first time preached by President Cravath, who for several years has been necessarily absent at the close of school. Five of the students received certificates, and two of those admitted to college were absent teaching in Mississippi. The class entering college, ten in number, is the largest ever admitted to our college course, and we hope President Cravath's admonition to have their number complete when they are ready for their degrees will be carried out.

ATLANTA UNIVERSITY, ATLANTA, GA.—The tenth anniversary of the Atlanta University, which has just occurred, was an occasion of special interest to all its patrons and friends. The fact that the school was closing a year of prosperous work, during which a larger attendance than ever had been secured and maintained, and that evidences were multiplied of increasing confidence and respect on the part of all classes of people in the State, did much towards making the week one of great pleasure.

The exercises were introduced by a thoughtful and instructive sermon on the Sabbath, addressed to the graduating classes by the Rev. Mr. Bumstead. Three days of examination followed, which were attended by a board of examiners, appointed by the Governor of the State, and by a committee of citizens invited by the Board of Trustees, and a large number of patrons and friends.

The commencement exercises upon the last day were brief, sensible and entertaining. Five young men were graduated from college and two young women from the normal course, and degrees were conferred upon six young men who were graduates of three years' standing. A report, which was highly commendatory, was read by Rev. J. M. Martin, D. D., of Atlanta, who had been in attendance upon the examinations by request of the Board of Trustees.

TALLADEGA COLLEGE, TALLADEGA, ALA.—The public appointments of this week embraced literary exercises by the Soronian Society on Monday evening, public exercises of the Model School on Tuesday afternoon, and College address in the evening; Wednesday, graduating exercises of the theological department at 2.30 P. M., and at 8 o'clock, prize declamations and essays, closing with a spelling match; on Thursday, 10 A. M., the graduating exercises of the higher normal department; at 2 P. M., an exhibition of the agricultural department; and at 8 P. M. a concert by the Musical Union, closed the week. I was not able to remain through all the exercises of Thursday. Those that I attended were of a high order, and compared favorably with similar exercises of the same grade in other schools.

The collegiate exercises of the school were creditable to the students and their instructors. The examination exhibited the usual enthusiasm of these students in their studies. I must say, however, that I have not attended a closer and more satisfactory theological examination in many a day than that of the nine theological students who will be graduated from Talladega next year. I have attended examinations in seminaries and associations and councils, and been through several such trials myself, but I never was present at one that gave me better satisfaction than this.

STRAIGHT UNIVERSITY, NEW ORLEANS, LA.—A class of eight has just been graduated from the classical department of this University—the largest class yet sent out—of which seven were young men. Six members of the class pursued the entire course here; the other two had taken the greater part of their course at another school, and came here the last year to graduate. The commencement exercises were held Wednesday evening, June 4th, at the Central Church. The body of the church was crowded to its utmost capacity, and many were forced to find seats in the gallery.

The orations were of high order, and reflected great credit upon the young men. They all gave evidence of the thoroughness of training they had received in the University. They certainly gave promise of honorable success in the life-work to which they had devoted themselves. President Alexander conferred the diplomas in a brief address of commendation, encouragement and advice.

TOUGALOO UNIVERSITY, TOUGALOO, MISS.—After the examination closed on Thursday, students in the normal department gave literary exercises, interspersed with music, before an audience numbering many of the parents and former students, some of the trustees and other friends of the institution.

At 3 P. M. the President of the Board of Trustees of the State Normal School and others gave congratulations and sound advice to attentive and appreciative listeners. He assured the teachers and pupils and friends present that they might expect with much confidence an appropriation to the Institution of a few thousand dollars from the next Legislature, with a visiting committee to see if it is well expended, and make report directly to the Legislature.

Thursday evening an exhibition by the preparatory and primary departments closed the exercises of the week, and the delighted friends parted, feeling a greater interest than ever in their Institution.

HOWARD UNIVERSITY, WASHINGTON, D. C.—The anniversary exercises were held in the Fifteenth Street Presbyterian church (colored), a new and tasteful edifice, which was filled with an interested audience of both races, including several clergymen, and Judge Strong of the Supreme Court of the United States. Four young men who had completed their course of study delivered orations.

BEACH INSTITUTE, SAVANNAH, GA.—A week was devoted to examinations and the closing work of the year. The greater part of several days was given to written work; but it had been announced that during the last morning public oral examinations would be held. At an early hour a good number of parents and friends showed the interest they have in their children and the school by coming in to witness the day's work. The morning was spent in the various rooms, many of the old people as well as the children showing a lively interest in the examinations. At twelve o'clock the commodious chapel was well filled by an attentive and appreciative audience to witness the closing exercises of the school, which consisted of essays from the five members of the normal class, and recitations and music from the other departments. After a very enjoyable hour and a half in the chapel, the various grades passed to their rooms, the promotions were read, the school dismissed, the good-byes said, the doors closed; and thus, with its cares and its perplexities, its joys and its sorrows, its successes and its failures, endeth another chapter of the great volume of life.

GREENWOOD, S. C.—The Brewer Normal School, under the care of Mr. J. D. Backenstose, closed, June 26th, a successful year's work. Examinations and exhibition were very creditable and largely attended. The annual address was delivered by the Rev. F. E. McDonald on "Culture." Ministers of other denominations, graduates of the school, and many prominent citizens, showed by their attendance, and expressed in words, their deep interest in the work and gratification with its results.

MONTGOMERY, ALA.—Swayne School closed its school year June 5th. There were pleasant public exercises for the little ones Wednesday evening at 5 o'clock, and on Thursday night for the older pupils at the Congregational church. The Board of Education and the mayor of the city, also two or three judges, responded by their presence. Many kind words of approbation have come to us with regard to the high order and interest of the exercises. We trust that new friends were made and that a new interest was developed in our work that evening.

LE MOYNE SCHOOL, MEMPHIS, TENN.—At the closing exercises of the school the numbers were good, and the last recitation was as perfect as any lesson within the year. It was remarkable that interest in study did not flag in the least.

ORANGEBURG, S. C.—The scholastic year closed on the 5th inst. Appropriate exercises were held at the "Independent Hall." There was a very large and respectable audience of the children's parents and white citizens who felt interested in our work. The exercises began about 8 o'clock, consisting of declamations, orations and music. Rev. Professor Larrence, of Claflin University, made an eloquent address, in which he paid a splendid tribute to the value of learning and the excellence of the A. M. A. schools.

FLORENCE, ALA.—On Tuesday the examination of the school took place, and on Wednesday night the exhibition occurred. We had many visitors during the examination, and on the night of the exhibition our building, used for church and school, was filled to overflowing; all around the building, at the windows and doors, there were many who were eager to see and hear the exercises. It is the first year of school work in connection with the church. At the beginning of the year we had three scholars; at the end we closed with thirty-five.

INDUSTRIAL DEPARTMENTS.

TALLADEGA, ALA.—There is a farm here of about 180 acres of land, most of which is under cultivation, called the Winsted Farm. This is being rapidly reclaimed from the waste of former mismanagement. The effort is begun on this farm to restore fertility, and in a few years we may expect to see a fine specimen of Northern enterprise in the products of its hitherto barren acres. The students work the farm in part payment for their education. How far this industrial department is going to succeed financially is a question that must wait for an answer.

Over 3,000 people attended the Agricultural Fair for colored people held at Talladega, Ala., in November, under the auspices of the college. Stock, farm products, cookery, needle and fancy work, flowers and pictures, were brought in for exhibition. Contests were held in athletic sports, and in spelling, declaiming, etc., between students of the different schools. Several hundred white people attended, and showed their interest by acting as judges on the committees with the colored people. The fair was kept entirely free from all the objectionable features which so often mar our State fairs, and indeed was opened with prayer, and, after the addresses and award of premiums, closed with the Doxology.

TOUGALOO, MISS.—The young people enter on a busy life here, in many respects new to most of them. Their own hands do most of the farm and in-door work.

We have a field of one hundred acres planted in corn; next on one side is the sweet-potato patch of ten acres; and on a south east slope were set strawberry plants last year, that will another season furnish a supply for some Northern market. This spring, ten acres were sown with grass, ten with clover that now feels revived by the recent rains. The new wire fence is already showing its merits by keeping in our own stock and shutting out others that have heretofore grazed in our grove and fields. Our stock is now of the best breeds, and instead of buying we shall be able to supply meats for our tables, that already have a variety of early vegetables from the garden. Ornamental trees have been set out upon the grounds, and the whole plantation has been brought to better use and improved appearance.

MEMPHIS, TENN.—At Le Moyne School, where we have one almost continuous daily session from 9 A. M. to 3 P. M., at least an hour of this time each day must be given by the pupils to some branch of practical or industrial knowledge. In the direct line of trained nurses, each girl in the school, sixteen years old or over, will devote the industrial hour, for two days in each week, to studies under this head, including special lessons in anatomy, physiology and hygiene. For the present, at least, no text-book is to be placed in the hands of the students. They are to gain their knowledge from lectures, which are to be followed by general and familiar conversation between instructor and pupils on the same subject. Each girl is required to take notes of the lecture, and to write out what she can of the knowledge imparted. After a subject is completed, each member of the class is required to prepare an essay, putting in the best possible form her knowledge of the entire subject in all its bearings.

This is, in a general way, to effect the theoretical training. We hope to find opportunity to give members of the class at least a little practice: First, in their own homes or circle of friends; secondly, possibly in the woman's ward of the city hospital, located near us; third, in private families desirous of forwarding our work; or fourth, among the destitute poor really in need of such services. Our work is to commence with the simpler and more commonly occurring complaints of this section, as colds, accidents that happen often, chills and fever, etc.

ATLANTA UNIVERSITY, GA.—During the past year, at Atlanta, it was thought best to give more time and thought especially to sewing, cooking and care of the sick. How to secure a practical knowledge of these without much expense of material or instruction, and without taking much of the student's time from literary pursuits, was the problem. The sewing was arranged in this way: Sometime before graduation the girls are required to make, under the eye of the preceptress, a small garment of calico or other inexpensive material. This garment is to contain all the varieties of plain sewing, machine-stiching, hand-hemming, ruffling, etc. More than this, it must have the bugbears of all beginners in sewing—a button-hole, a patch and a darn. Each girl writes her name in indelible ink on the garment, and it is kept in the institution as a record of her standing in sewing.

The matron has the graduating class spend their required hour of work in learning to make good bread and to do other plain cooking. When any student is ill, opportunity is given for practical instruction from the preceptress in nursing the sick. In addition to this, the time of one recitation was taken during a part of the year for giving instruction in household science. A teacher prepared talks upon general rules for good housekeeping, general principles for good cooking, care of the sick, care of children, economy, etc.

GROWING FAVOR.

IN GENERAL.—Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, in his recent political address at Worcester, referring to the interest of the Northern people in everything that would promote the true interest of the South, speaks of Captain Eads' jetties "making one long harbor of the Southern Mississippi," as a great boon to its material prosperity, and points to "the magnificent work of the American Missionary Association" as in a higher sphere a source of sincere rejoicing to all good men of the North.

We notice, in the report of the Peabody Educational Fund, the following reference to our work: "Much good has been accomplished for the colored schools by the universities and other endowed institutions with normal departments maintained by different Christian denominations. One association has already sent out from its numerous institutions 5,267 teachers, by whom about 100,000 pupils have been instructed. A large proportion of the graduates of all these institutions become teachers."

HAMPTON, VA.—The following tribute to the Hampton Normal Institute is also paid by the Superintendent of Public Schools in South Carolina: "The agent of the Peabody Fund has placed at my disposal ten fifty-dollar scholarships in the Normal and Agricultural Institute at Hampton, Va. A visit to the Institute, and observation of the manner in which it is conducted, convince me that it is doing exactly what it professes to do."

FISK UNIVERSITY.—The school has been growing in favor with the Southern people. The presence of a large part of the State Legislature at our public rhetorical exercise, in March, and the evident pleasure with which they listened to the young people, indicated an increasing interest in our success. We find that the aims of the University commend themselves to the best men of the State.

ATLANTA, GA.—There is an increasing desire for education. The white people are taking a deeper and more kindly interest in the education of the colored children and in the University.

MONTGOMERY, ALA.—I am profoundly impressed with the importance of the schools, and especially of the higher institutions established by the American Missionary Association, and by the Mission Boards of other Christian denominations. These institutions must train multitudes of competent teachers who will educate the masses. In these institutions must also be educated a native ministry to meet the wants of their people at home, and to carry the Gospel to the dark continent from which their fathers came. It is difficult to conceive of a work more important, or promising more beneficent results, than that which is being done by the higher educational institutions for the Freedmen. The importance of enlarging their capacity for receiving pupils, and enabling them to aid indigent pupils in defraying the expenses of their education, cannot be over-estimated.

ATHENS, ALA.—We have had a school for fourteen years at Athens, Alabama. Miss M. F. Wells has been the principal from its beginning, and one of our most faithful and most successful teachers and missionaries. Miss Underwood has been her assistant for two years, and Rev. Horace Taylor has been pastor of the vigorous and enterprising church which has grown up by the side of, and indeed out of, the school. Some 150 scholars have been in attendance at the school, and its work has been more and more satisfactory year by year.

We had a building there which was, however, in bad repair, its walls had been propped up these last months, and it was becoming really unsafe, so that it must be abandoned or replaced. But to erect a suitable and permanent building would cost $5,000, and we had no such sum to expend; and the question came to be, shall we build, or close the school and transfer the teachers to some other field? Reluctantly this latter decision was made—indeed, we did not make it; it was made for us. We could not build, and the decision was sent on to Athens.

On the 4th of July, Mr. Taylor, pastor of the church, wrote as follows:

That night, at a lecture at the Court House, I read a note from Miss Wells announcing your decision. The people were much pained. They decided to hold a meeting Thursday night, and notice was given at the preparatory lecture; so last night the church was filled by an earnest, quiet audience. Colored men were elected chairman and secretary. In thirty minutes names were taken with pledges to the amount of $2,196. We then checked the movement, and explained that $5,000 was necessary, but that we had raised the $2,000 we wished to raise there. A unanimous vote authorized me to make the report of the meeting to the American Missionary Association, and that they wished the house and lot to be held forever for the education of the colored people of North Alabama; that if the American Missionary Association would permit them to buy the land at a reasonable price they would do it; or the American Missionary Association might hold the land and the people the house, neither to sell out without the consent of the other. An old blind man said, "An old blind horse ain't good for much, but when you get him into the tread-mill he is as good as any other; so when you get to making brick I will turn the crank to draw the water." We got another $100 subscription and immediately adjourned. This morning I have received another subscription of $12, making in all $2,308. I ought to have mentioned that a committee of seven was appointed to solicit subscriptions on the streets. If you say so, the school-house shall be completed January 1st, 1880. I earnestly request that the petition be granted.

At the last meeting of our Executive Committee, these letters were read. All were deeply moved, and the response was hearty and unanimous, Let them arise and build, and the funds needed for the continuance of the school shall be appropriated and paid. We cannot stop such a work. We cannot refuse such a plea. Why, the educating power of this movement upon the colored people of that place, and its effect, perhaps, upon the white population as well, is worth ten times the money involved in both the building and the school!

BUILDINGS.

STRAIGHT UNIVERSITY.—Our friends will be glad to know that the new University building suits our needs to perfection. We could hardly suggest a change in the arrangement of rooms. In many respects it is a model house. If our friends could understand how earnestly we desire to furnish our beautiful chapel and two additional recitation rooms, into which we are almost ready to "swarm," and how we long to see a neat fence surrounding the lot, isolating and protecting us, situated as we are on the grand boulevard of the city, I am sure that some good heart would suggest the means of accomplishing these things. But this is God's work, and He will send relief if we can only wait.

The need of buildings for a boarding department is as urgent as ever, but this need, we hope, may be met by the donations from the Stone estate. These accommodations will bring in a large addition from the country of just such material as we desire—young men and women from the better families, who are unwilling to come to the city and board away from the influences of the teachers.

New buildings will certainly bring many new pupils, more pupils will require more teachers, and more teachers will increase the expenses of the A. M. A.; but now is the time to do good among this people, and we trust the churches who sustain this work will not be weary in well-doing, but will furnish all the means that are needed to extend this work wisely.

ATLANTA UNIVERSITY.—With these subsidies (from the Stone estate) it is proposed to erect another college building between the two present structures, to cost $40,000, and a large addition to the girls' dormitory, which will include a dining-room capable of seating 300 pupils.

BEACH INSTITUTE, SAVANNAH, GA.—In February last, under unexplained circumstances, the Beach Institute was burned. Rev. R. F. Markham, the pastor, instead of going North for his needed recuperation, remained through the heat of summer to play the part of Ezra in rebuilding. This was accomplished so that the Institute was opened on time, October 1st. It is a comely structure, 60x80, two stories high, adjoining the "Home" that was saved.

MCINTOSH, GA.—I have had the work of building a new school-house, nicely furnished and very conveniently arranged, and have also been working up a church in a new field. The new building was built with means furnished by the A. M. A., and with such help as the people here could give, at a cost of $1,100. It is called the Dorchester Academy, from its Puritan history.

FLORENCE, ALA.—This week has been a blessed one for us. On Saturday last the corner-stone of the new chapel was laid, and on Sunday appropriate services were held. It was an occasion long to be remembered.

LAWSONVILLE, ALA.—While the people of this place are engaged in building a church, they are enjoying a season of revival under their Talladega minister, Rev. J. W. Strong.

SCHOOL PROPERTY RENTED FOR PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

MONTGOMERY, ALA.—SWAYNE SCHOOL.—At Montgomery, the Swayne school building, erected by the Freedmen's Bureau, had been put into the hands of a local Board of Trust, and by that Board it had been leased for ten years to the American Missionary Association, which, after running it for several years, sub-rented it to the City Board of Education—the A. M. A. giving the rent, keeping the house in repair and appointing the teachers, the city paying the salaries. This arrangement was renewed for another five years by the appropriate legal papers.

MARION, ALA.—The Lincoln Normal Institute for colored pupils of both sexes was founded in 1869 by the A. M. A. Six years ago it passed into the hands of the State, which makes an annual appropriation of $4,000 for the teachers' salaries.

TROY, FULTON, WESTPORT, WARRENSBURG AND LEBANON.—The Association has five school-houses at these points. These were procured in part by aid from the Freedmen's Bureau in 1867-9. They were at first run by teachers sent from the North, but were gradually taken up by the local school boards. I find them all in such use now. Three will probably be sold to those boards at their present low valuation. Two will be sold to local colored Methodist churches, as the schools require larger and better houses, which the authorities intend to build. These houses have also been used all the time as places of worship by the colored people.

BARNES INSTITUTE, GALVESTON.—The Barnes Institute, at Galveston, built by the Bureau, and run for a time by the American Missionary Association, is now used for a Freedmen's public school, with four teachers and over three hundred scholars. At HOUSTON the "Gregory Institute" duplicates the history of "The Barnes," and is doing remarkably well. Such is also the story of the Institute at WACO. The American Missionary Association may count in with its best work the founding of these Institutes, which being well set up have flowed into the public school system. The impetus given and the standard put up yet abide in large measure.

LIBRARIES.

ATLANTA UNIVERSITY.—The library of the Institute comprises 4,000 volumes, most of them excellent selections, with a balance on hand in cash of $700 for further augmentation, derived from the interest on the permanent library endowment, which is $5,000.

STORRS CHURCH.—The young men connected with this church and congregation have organized a Library Association. A library has been started; number of volumes at present very small. I have thought that, perhaps, you had in or about your office some spare books that you could send to us. We want to build up a Parish Library. I should like, especially, some works on Africa.

LE MOYNE SCHOOL.—There has been some work and much time spent upon the library in labeling and cataloguing the two hundred and thirty new volumes, and arranging the whole five hundred in classes.

We have nineteen popular books of science; twenty-five bright records of travel; forty-seven good histories, essays, stories, etc., of genuine worth. Many of them are already in circulation. I am confident this must gather to our support the best elements in the colored community.

STUDENT AID.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—To secure, at the earliest day, the thorough education of colored young men and women as teachers and ministers, who shall be competent to lead the masses of their race to a higher civilization, special aid must be given to those whose minds and hearts give promise of usefulness. Many of the brightest, the most intellectual of the children of the Freedmen, who are intensely anxious for an education, and have a praiseworthy ambition to be fitted for positions of responsibility and usefulness, are denied the privileges of the college by reason of extreme poverty. Many others are able to meet a part of the cost of an education, but without benevolent aid must stop short of a full course of study. I am just now in receipt of a letter from a worthy and talented young man near New Orleans, I quote a sentence to show its import: "I have the same mind to work in the cause of Christ and prepare to preach His word. I think I have been called to engage in this work and cannot be satisfied unless I do. Dear brother, I do now most solemnly appeal to you and the good brethren in the North to aid me to an education."

NASHVILLE, TENN.—On the Saturday evening preceding the Monday on which the new school year of Fisk University was to begin, a young man was brought to my room by one of our former students, who introduced him as being from Montgomery, Alabama. I found on inquiry, and from a letter which he brought from a prominent colored man of that city, that he had determined to get an education, and having but little money, had made up his mind to walk from Montgomery to Nashville, a distance of three hundred miles, with the hope of finding some way by which he might be admitted as a student in Fisk University. Fortunately, a prominent citizen of Montgomery was able to secure him a pass on the railroad, one hundred miles, to Birmingham, and a student of Fisk University, who happened to meet him at Columbia, Tenn., used the little spare money he had in his pocket to help him on his way twenty miles toward Nashville.

TOUGALOO, MISS.—There are nine or ten promising young men who want to go to Tougaloo to school, next year. Some of them are quite young, sixteen or seventeen years of age, and a great deal of good can be done with and through such boys. Very few of them will be able to pay any thing for their board. They often come to my room in great numbers to talk of Tougaloo. A young man and his sister (who live eight or ten miles in the country) board here and go to school to me. The young man went to school in Selma, when he was quite a small boy. He also went to school at Tougaloo a few months. He is very anxious to be in school there next year, and his parents are very anxious to have both him and his sister go, but he thinks it is very doubtful unless he can get some work to do, and he is willing to do any kind of work. From what I have seen of him, I think him the most promising of any I have met. He is not a Christian.

RELIGIOUS CHARACTER OF SCHOOLS.

ATLANTA UNIVERSITY.—You will be glad to know that at this school we are in the midst of a deep and effective work of grace, which has already brought into the kingdom a goodly number of precious souls. There has been a good degree of religious interest since the school came together in October, and during the week of prayer, which we faithfully observed, that interest was deepened, and since that time some have been committing themselves to Christ's service. The day of prayer for colleges, just observed, was an occasion of deep and solemn interest, and a considerable number took a step forward. A few extra meetings have been held, but, for the most part, affairs have gone on as usual, with no interruption of school work; and but for the greater quiet and improved order and discipline of the school, and increasing fidelity to duty, an observer would not know how thorough a work was going forward. All the members of the classes to graduate this year now profess to be Christians, and we hope will be well prepared to do effective work for the Master in the wide and needy field open before them. We do not like to give numbers, but we may reasonably hope that as many as twelve have already begun the new life, and more than as many more are deeply serious.

The alumni number 52, of whom, at graduation, 50 were professing Christians. With the exception of three who are now pursuing a higher course of study, and one who has died since graduation, these are all doing active work for the Master among their own people, and, with others who have left school before completing the regular course of study, are selecting and sending to the University the more promising of their pupils.

FISK UNIVERSITY.—The meeting for prayer for the Association and its work was held on Monday afternoon, January 6, at three o'clock, in the chapel. The number in attendance was very large, and there was an unusual freedom in prayer and a deep and tender interest in all the exercises.

The year has had a religious history peculiar to itself. Without any thing that could be called revival interest, there has been a constant turning of the unconverted, and a quiet earnestness on the part of Christians, that leave us with the feeling that the Spirit of God has indeed been with us. Beginning with January, there have been several additions to the college church at every communion season, and fully as many have connected themselves with other churches.

TALLADEGA, ALA.—Talladega College, a college only in name yet, is the rallying point for our missionary work in this State. It is just such a college as a missionary college should be, its whole work as a school being subordinate to the church. It is a training school, patterned after the missionary colleges of the American Board. Its grand aim is to raise up a native ministry so as to plant churches, and through them carry an intelligent Gospel to the masses.

Talladega College, the last year, by its students, reached 1,200 Sunday-school scholars. In the past years they have reached, in all, 20,000. Out of these schools six Congregational churches have grown up. Rev. G. W. Andrews, the instructor in theology, has been accustomed to take his class on Saturday morning over the lesson of the next day, thus training them in a normal way as well as in the way of the truth.

All but two of the girls at Foster Hall are hopeful Christians; and of the forty-five young men who board at the same place, but four remain without a hope in Christ. Two in the higher normal room still refuse to enter upon the better life, and fourteen in the common school normal, out of the ninety in that department.

HAMPTON, VA.—The religious teaching is evangelical. The school regards itself as representing the American Missionary Association, and is faithful to the trust. Nowhere can teachers be found more earnestly evangelical, laboring often beyond their strength to bring souls to Christ. To their honor, be it said, however, that both Unitarians and Friends have not only contributed of their means in large proportion, but have also served in the work of education and Christian culture with the most unselfish devotion. The interest this winter has not reached the revival point, but students have been led to Christ from time to time.

HOWARD UNIVERSITY, WASHINGTON, D. C.—There is much religious interest in our institution at the present time. It has been gradually coming on all the autumn, but was greatly aided by the week of prayer held by the Young Men's Christian Association of the University in concert with other associations. Some ten or twelve of the students think that they have begun the new life lately, and we look for further good results.

MEMPHIS, TENN.—The most cheering of closing incidents was found in the prayer meeting. We have regretted the lack of a decided religious influence; it has been the one failure of the year. In the last meeting, we were not left without evidence of the Spirit's work. Two young men confessed their trust in Christ and determination to be his avowed followers. Another young man, whose voice has been silent for years, and who has seldom attended meetings, either at school or church, asked prayers for himself in a manly way that spoke well for his expressed desire to resume his place in the ranks of Christian workers

BEREA, KY.—An encouraging religious interest is reported. Five young men of excellent promise have, within a week, confessed Christ. This has been under the regular ministration, without help from abroad. Most of the prayer meetings are well attended. The community is very harmonious. The graduates are all professing Christians.

From the President of the Board of Education of State Normal School: The moral influence of the teachers in his county who are students at Tougaloo is quite different from those coming from other schools; almost invariably they start Sunday-schools as soon as they open their day-schools.

MOBILE, ALA.—God is pouring out His Spirit on our school. Several have expressed a hope in Christ and many more are inquiring. The interest is among the older scholars. We have a daily fifteen-minute prayer meeting just before school, and a half-hour prayer meeting after school on Friday. Pray for us.

ATHENS, ALA.—There is great zeal in study, especially in Bible study. This has greatly strengthened our hearts, for we know "The entrance of Thy word giveth light," and we are encouraged to hope for the speedy conversion of several young men who have publicly asked the prayers of Christians.

SELMA, ALA.—A happy work of grace is reported from the Burrell School, resulting in a considerable number of conversions.

NO. 1 MILLER'S STATION, GA.—Best of all, of the ninety-five who have been connected with the school during the year, twenty-five have become the disciples of the Great Master since the school was opened.

WOODBRIDGE, N. C.—Last year, in this school, under the excellent Miss Waugh, a revival was enjoyed which enlisted more than a score of the scholars as disciples of the Master.

COLORED TEACHERS.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—FISK UNIVERSITY.—The last Annual Catalogue showed a total attendance of 338. Of these, 25 were studying theology, 26 were in the College, 54 in the College Preparatory, 11 in the Higher Normal, 153 in the Normal Department, and 95 in the Model School. Notwithstanding the "hard times," this was the most successful year in the history of the University. Correspondence was had with 108 teachers, who were then, or had been formerly, students in the Institution, and it was found that they had taught during 1877 nine thousand three hundred and thirty-two pupils. Many of the teachers taught in two separate districts during the year, as the public schools, in most places, are continued only from three to five months. Total salary received, $18,643.53.

ATLANTA, GA.—We have the testimony of our own School Superintendent, Mr. B. M. Zettler, that some of the most efficient and conservative teachers in the Bibb County schools were educated at the Atlanta University. Moreover, he favors the appointment, by the various Boards of Public Education, of teachers of their own race for the colored children of the State, in every instance where they show themselves competent.

We find from the official report of President Ware, that of the fifty-one alumni of the University, forty-two have engaged in teaching as a profession, while three are pastors of churches, two are theological students, and one, Nathaniel D. Harris, of Washington, D. C., is pursuing the study of law. Of the teachers, four only have located beyond the limits of the State.

In addition, over ninety of the more advanced pupils employ their time during vacation in teaching.

STRAIGHT UNIVERSITY.—We hear interesting and encouraging reports from our last year's graduates, who are all teaching. The inducements for young men and women to qualify themselves for teachers of the highest grade are all that could be desired. It is impossible now to answer the demands for competent teachers for the colored schools of Louisiana. I have received an application for a principal of a large parish school, with a salary of $1,200, and two are now in hand for lady teachers, with salaries of $30 per month, in a town where good board can be obtained for $7 per month. This demand will constantly increase both in Louisiana and Texas. Two of our last senior class are teaching in Texas and receiving $50 per month.

ORANGEBURG, S. C.—Six pupils taught this year, in the free schools of Orangeburg County, an aggregate of 575 children, and were very acceptable to trustees and patrons of the schools. The whole number of days taught by them is about 375.

THEOLOGICAL DEPARTMENTS.

HOWARD UNIVERSITY, WASHINGTON, D. C.—The Theological Department, which has been for the last two years largely supported by the American Missionary Association, closed its educational year on May 30th. The theological students have numbered forty-two, being eleven more than the previous year. The young men have come from seven denominations of Christians, into each of which the leaven of intelligence and purity is thus being introduced. They have applied themselves well, and show commendable improvement. The most of them, not having enjoyed a training in Greek and Latin, are fitted for usefulness among the Freedmen by a prolonged English course of study; others take the full course pursued in any theological seminary. This year a class of seven studied Hebrew, and acquitted themselves most creditably. Three of the graduates go immediately to the care of churches which await them. The indications are of a still fuller theological class next fall, the term beginning September 10th. Our theological students have been deeply interested in the meetings for prayer, and have rendered valuable aid.

TALLADEGA, ALA.—Nine young men, students at Talladega, after examination, were approved to preach by the Alabama Conference. Prof. Andrews has solved the question of the practicability of a theological department in this school. We have henceforth no excuse for putting men into the ministry who cannot answer the questions usually propounded to candidates for the sacred office. The theological students have rendered excellent service by visiting from door to door. Christians have been fully awake.

NEW CHURCHES.

SHELBY IRON WORKS, ALA.—A Congregational church of twenty-one members was organized October 10th, at Shelby Iron Works, Alabama. This is the fifteenth Congregational church planted by the A. M. A. in this State. Eight of them are in the vicinity of Talladega College, the most distant being forty miles away. They are the outgrowth of the mission work carried on by the teachers and pupils of the college. This new church at Shelby begins its existence under most favorable circumstances, most of its members being present or former pupils of the college. All are colored people; two are preparing for the ministry; one has been a student at Oberlin, Ohio; one was for some time a resident of Hartford, Ct., and more recently of Columbus, Ohio, a graduate of the high school there and a former pupil here; one is principal of an academy of ten years' standing at Shelby and a graduate from Talladega. With two or three exceptions, all of them have for some years been trained in our Sunday-schools. The Shelby Iron Company is in hearty sympathy with the movement.

CYPRESS SLASH, GA.—Tuesday morning, April 15th, it began to rain, but ceased about 7 o'clock. Very soon ten buggies and one-horse wagons, well loaded with ministers, delegates and spectators, were seen on their way to a council of churches which was called to meet fourteen miles N. W. of us to consider the expediency of organizing a church at Cypress Slash. The roads are quite level all the way, pretty much through a pine forest. All were highly pleased with the trip. Three churches were represented in the council—the Midway, Ogeechee and Savannah churches. Dr. Roy represented the A. M. A.; Rev. J. R. McLean was chosen scribe; and Rev. F. Snelson moderator. In reply to inquiries it was said that the community generally would look upon the movement with favor. They wished as soon as possible to have an intelligent minister sent to them, such as the A. M. A. would recommend, and they pledged to do all they could to support him. Fifteen persons were then baptized; 20 were received by confession, 28 from other churches—48 in all. A sermon was preached by Dr. Roy, from Rev. xxii. 17: "The Spirit and the Bride say, Come." Scripture was read by Mr. J. McIntosh. The ordinance of baptism was administered and the prayer offered by Rev. F. Snelson. Rev. J. R. McLean gave a short address and the right hand of fellowship. Rev. R. F. Markham gave the address to the church, and Dr. Roy extended a cordial welcome to the fellowship of all the Congregational churches in America. Five deacons were then ordained, Mr. Markham offering the prayer. Another important Congregational seed is planted; pray that its growth may be a success.

Later: Brother Snelson writes: Last Sunday I spent with Brother Headen at Cypress Slash. Gave the communion there, and received three new members. They have made a pretty good pole-house, about 28 x 20 feet, in which they hold school and meeting.

FLATONIA, FAYETTE CO., TEXAS.—This young church has twenty-five members, and several are waiting an opportunity to unite. It is negotiating for a church building.

Later: We are holding a protracted meeting, and last Sunday was our communion. There seems to be more interest in the church, and the prospect is fair for doing good. Last night seventeen persons rose for prayer. Brother Church has been here since last Thursday, and will remain a few days longer.

RELIGIOUS INTEREST IN THE CHURCHES.

TALLADEGA, ALA.—On March 2d thirty were received into our church, the fruits, in part, of a revival still in progress. It is the custom in the South to admit converts to the church on the first convenient opportunity, as in apostolic times, according to Acts ii. 47.

Of these thirty, seven were baptized in infancy, mostly by our own missionaries, ten years ago; three were immersed; the rest followed Ezek. xxxvi. 25. The youngest was not quite nine years old; the oldest was between sixty and seventy, and as happy a new-born soul as one often meets; several were from forty to fifty. The community outside of the college, our people say, was never before so awakened since the college was established here.

The meetings have been characterized by a wonderful freedom from excitement; indeed, I was never in a revival before where there was so little. It has pleased God in this instance to magnify preaching in a wonderful manner.

Later: Seven were received into the Talladega church, May 4th, which, with those received two months ago, make thirty-seven in all as the gathered fruits of the revival last winter. The meetings continue to be full of interest.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—For four weeks we gathered every night, with an attendance ranging from 80 to 150, seldom falling below 100. Members of other churches flocked in; unconverted men and women heard the good news and joined the waiting throng. The result has been joyful, blessed, glorious. In some respects, I have never witnessed a revival of greater spiritual power. The work has been quiet, as the under-current of a river, but deep, heart-searching and vital.

SELMA, ALA.—An interesting work of grace is now in progress in our church. We began by observing the week of prayer, remembering especially the request for a concert of prayer with the officers and workers of the A. M. A., and with great blessing, we felt, to those of us who met together to claim the promises.

After another week of preparatory meetings, we opened the audience-room and began preaching every night, except Saturday, which we have kept up for three weeks with considerable success, having over thirty hopeful conversions and an uncounted number of inquirers; in fact, almost all express a desire more or less earnest to become Christians.

We are now holding three services during the week, and dislike very much to give up while there are still some who have been seeking ever since the special meetings began, with seemingly great earnestness, and yet cannot see the way clearly. Many of those who have been converted, naturally belong to other churches, so that the addition to our membership will not be large; but we feel that the work is genuine, and those who go to other churches will carry a warmer feeling of interest in us which will help our work greatly in the future.

MONTGOMERY, ALA.—The church has been quickened in its spiritual life and activity, but no pervading revival influence has gone forth into the community. A good proportion of our members seem to be earnest, growing and happy Christians. Our social religious meetings are very enjoyable. Some who have been delinquent now promise better things. One or two have just begun a new life of faith in Christ, and some others have promised to take the subject of their salvation into serious consideration.

I have found the colored congregations very decorous and eagerly attentive to the preaching of the Gospel. I find them quite accessible for religious conversation, and apparently thankful for the interest manifested in their behalf. They furnish, therefore, a field for Christian effort that is full of promise. If there is another missionary field more inviting, or promising richer harvests to faithful culture, I know not where it is found.

MARION, ALA.—Our little church is keeping on the even tenor of its way. There have been several hopeful conversions, and four are about to unite by profession. No falling off in attendance on Sabbath or evening meetings. Four of our young people are this year at Talladega College, and two promising young men have the ministry in view. Nineteen were present at our teachers' meeting last week.

WILMINGTON, N. C.—Last Sabbath we had an unusually interesting communion season. Two young men united with the church; one has been a member of our day-school, both of the Sunday-school. Our daily prayer is, "Lord, bring our scholars into the fold of Christ." Our church is small, but it is a working one, and its influence is felt in the community.

RALEIGH, N. C.—After the closing of the Conference, Pastor Smith, with the assistance of Rev. Mr. Peebles, of Dudley, held special services for three weeks. The church was greatly revived. Two young men have been received into the church. Others have been, and are, interested. The congregation is increasing, especially in the attendance of young men.

MCINTOSH, LIBERTY CO., GA.—Notwithstanding the unpleasant situation of a church worshiping in a house unfinished and unprovided with heaters in the month of January, we determined to observe the week of prayer. Some religious interest was manifested among the young people, which was encouraged in every way possible, and one after another gave himself to the Lord, until on March 23d, at our communion season, nineteen, hopefully converted, united with the church. Their ages range from ten to sixty years.

BRUNSWICK, GA.—We are having a season of great Christian interest in the Congregational Church of this city, under Brother Clarke's care. Two of our Sunday-school scholars, and now supernumerary teachers, have given their hearts to the Saviour.

CHILDERSBURG, ALA.—Rev. Alfred Jones writes: "I have had my series of meetings; eight came to Christ, and five joined my church—four young men and one girl—and I think they bid fair for the future. They all belong to my Sunday-school. I am holding my fort, and expect to have a good church. I am doing all that I can, and feel that the Lord is with me."

HELENA, TEXAS.—On the last communion day two adults and nine children were baptized. The church and Sunday-school are prosperous, the latter numbering over sixty.

CORPUS CHRISTI, TEXAS.—The manifest result of our season of revival thus far is, that six have been added to the church. Four young ladies, all under twenty-three years of age, joined, by the profession of their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. One who had backslidden came and acknowledged her sins, professing her belief that God had forgiven the same, asked pardon of the church, and was received back again into the fold. Another came, by letter, from the Baptist church. He was formerly a member of this church, and, as he said, he "only came back again." And let me say, that these meetings were not characterized by excitement; not the least "shouting" was manifest during their continuance, but there was a deep seriousness shown upon each countenance.

MONTGOMERY, ALA.—A deep religious interest has been manifested during the last month. Some of our pupils are trusting in a newly-found Saviour. A Sabbath-afternoon Bible-reading at the school-house has been blessed.

ANNISTON, ALA.—Rev. P. J. McEntosh writes: "My field is increasing in interest greatly. I have just closed a series of meetings in our church. The Lord hath once more visited this part of His vineyard. There have been twenty-two conversions in our meetings. Seventeen of these have cast their lot among us.

SAVANNAH, GA.—The Congregational church of this city has been blessed with a visible outpouring of God's Spirit. Many of our old members have been quickened in their religious feelings, and have reconsecrated themselves to their Lord and Saviour. We had an extra series of meetings for over two weeks, which were well attended by Christians of all denominations. These meetings closed last week. On Sunday morning, September 7th, one was baptized by immersion, and at night five others were by sprinkling. Still another was received who was a fallen member of some other church. Most of those we received were young people; some of them teachers in our Sabbath-school, and nearly all of them at some time had been under the influence of some good Northern lady-teacher.

NO. 1 MILLER'S STATION, GA.—Since I wrote last, we have had a series of meetings during the evenings of one week. Every Friday evening there is a meeting for prayer and religious instruction, attended by all the scholars. This has been greatly blessed. Twenty of the scholars profess to have been converted.

Four joined us at our communion season in March. One, an old white-headed man; three, children.

Notwithstanding the house is so open that we have to hold our papers tightly, or put a weight on what we lay down (for the wind always blows there), yet my school at Cross Roads is increasing in numbers and interest.

SELF-HELP.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.—The church raised by its own contributions $50 per month, besides contributing nearly $50 to aid yellow fever sufferers in other cities in the early stage of the epidemic. The total amount of their contributions during my absence was $211.42. I do not think many of our Northern churches can show a better record, considering their income. It amounts to about $3.50 from each resident member. The income of our membership will not average $150 a year.

WOODVILLE, GA.—I have to whitewash and try to paint the parsonage, as the church is not able, on account of struggling hard to raise money to paint the inside of the meeting-house, and to pay Brother Markham for some new benches. They have finished paying for the organ and have had the church nicely done up (whitewashed) outside. Our Sunday-night meetings are crowded. Our Sabbath-school and day-school are flourishing.

ATHENS, ALA.—The Rev. Horace J. Taylor writes to us: Work has commenced for the new building. We have the yard prepared, and are now engaged in making brick. I am treasurer and chairman of the building committee, and the building will be finished without at any time being in debt one cent, if it takes three years to finish it.

CORPUS CHRISTI, TEXAS.—Our financial condition is not what we could wish, but in the circumstances I do not think it could be much better. The members failed this year to meet their pledges; they are fifty dollars short. But this was caused by having to meet unforeseen expenses. We enclosed our church lot just before Christmas. I advised them to do this, as the edifice was so much exposed. The carpenter's work I did myself, and charged nothing for it.

MARION, ALA.—The people are poor, but not penurious. A girls' sewing-class has sent $21, the avails of their handiwork, for the Mendi Mission, and the church appropriates the "weekly offering" once a month towards the pastor's salary.

SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.

The American Missionary Association reports for the last year 5,894 Sunday-school scholars connected with its sixty-four churches. Then there is a vast amount of such work done every year that does not come into these statistics. During the last summer vacation, Atlanta University sent out 150 day-school teachers, and Fisk as many more, and all our institutions furnish more or less of them. Nearly all of these also run for the time their own Sunday-schools, thus reaching many thousand children with the truth of God's word. It is estimated that up to this time our colored teachers have reached 150,000 of these day scholars, a multitude of whom have been taught in Sunday-schools.

FISK UNIVERSITY.—Ninety-four student-teachers superintended or taught in Sunday-schools, and reported a total attendance of 7,780. They also stated the number of conversions in day and Sunday-schools at 371. These statistics represent but a part of the actual teaching done by persons educated at Fisk University, for there was no means of learning the address of many of the early students.

TOUGALOO, MISS.—Our Sunday-school convention was held on June 1st. It was first assembled by our principal, one year ago, at that time an entirely new and unheard-of affair among our pupils. The heavy rains of Saturday last compelled our use of the chapel instead of the grove, and reduced the number in attendance, yet one of our students made a journey of fifty miles to be present, and we received word from others through the county who desired to come.

RALEIGH, N. C.—The Sunday-school held in the Washington school-house, under the superintendence of Miss Hayes, has been complimented by one of the white pastors as the best Sunday-school in the city. Its teachers are all from among the former pupils of the school, except the pastor and his wife, who have large classes of adults. It ordinarily numbers from two to three hundred.

SAVANNAH, GA.—More than five hundred children are gathered into the Sunday-schools of our churches in and around Savannah.

WOODVILLE, GA.—The Sunday-school is growing and God is with us. It is in a better condition now than ever before since its organization. Last Sunday we had both white and colored people, who came seven miles to our Sunday-school.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.—"The Sunday-school is well attended. We had a concert last Sabbath evening; the house was crowded and the exercises went off well, after which a collection for the A. M. A. was taken."

TEMPERANCE.

ATLANTA, GA.—The teachers and students of Atlanta University contributed about $75 at their monthly missionary meetings during the past year, and have employed that sum in aiding the work of the National Temperance Society, from which they have received a large supply of the best temperance literature. As nearly 150 of the students are at present engaged in teaching summer schools, and nearly all enter into the temperance work, they will find such a supply a valuable help, and can give it wide and effective distribution. About an equal sum was given at weekly school meetings, and will be sent to aid mission work among the Indians.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.—"The Band of Hope," a society pledged to abstinence from intoxicating drinks, tobacco and profanity, have between two hundred and three hundred members. This "Band" was organized by Rev. E. O. Tade some ten years since. Its object is to gather in and hold under strict New Testament temperance principles the youth of both sexes. Some twelve hundred names have been enrolled upon its records. Its power has been felt far and wide. A branch of the mother band has been organized in the city. It may be safely said that, through its agency, Chattanooga is more free from intemperance than any other Southern city hereabouts. Its elections are less noted for rioting and drunkenness than those of the cities of Georgia. Here is one result of A. M. A. work.

No. 1 MILLER'S STATION, GA.—Five of the members of our church, who spent at least a dollar and a half a week for strong drink when I first came here, have left it off altogether and say they do not want to smell it now. One of them yesterday, at our communion, would not partake with us. When asked why, he said: "I wanted to take it the worst kind, but I was afraid it would make me want to go to drinking again," and tears ran down his face as he spoke these words to Miss Douglass. You can see from this that some of the people are trying to leave off the habits of slavery, but it is done with no little effort, for the habits seem to have become a second nature.

BEREA, KY.—In this voting precinct of five hundred voters, where whiskey has reigned for many years, three-fourths of all the inhabitants have signed the Murphy pledge. Arrangements are made for a grand temperance rally, which, it is confidently believed, will fill the tabernacle to its utmost capacity.

FORSYTH, GA.—The students have been encouraged to organize a Temperance society, which they manage themselves with credit. This organization is doing much in the school and community to encourage those who are striving to be temperate.

CONFERENCES.

SOUTH-WEST CONFERENCE.—This Conference includes the Congregational churches of Louisiana, and was organized Jan. 26th, 1870. The next meeting will be held at Terrebonne the first Wednesday in April, 1880. The last meeting was at New Iberia, April 2–6, and on account of the deep interest and spiritual results directly attending it, marks an important era in the history of the Congregational churches of Louisiana. The very delightful meeting of the Conference in 1878, at the same place, prepared us for the recurrence of like scenes this year; but the Lord had greater and better things in store for us, and the Conference of 1879 stands alone in the marvelous tenderness and earnestness which characterized all its sessions, and in the precious baptism of the Holy Spirit, resulting in the conversion of fifty souls, and in the quickening and reviving of all the churches represented.

Of the sixteen churches connected with the Conference, fourteen were represented. Two large churches—one at Gretna, (Rev. W. P. Ward, pastor,) numbering 250 members, and the one at Algiers, (Rev. James Craig, pastor,) numbering 121 members—which left the Conference seven years ago, and have since been independent, were very cordially re-admitted.

South-west Texas Association.—The Texas Conference was organized December 4, 1871. The name has been changed to the South-west Texas Association, and includes the churches of Corpus Christi, Goliad, Helena, Paris, Schulenburg and Flatonia. The next meeting will be at Helena in July, 1880.

Central South Conference.—This body held its annual meeting at Chattanooga, Tenn., on the 15th, 16th and 17th of January, the prevalence of the yellow fever having prevented its session at the regular time in November. This Conference was organized in 1872, and includes the following churches: Chattanooga, Knoxville, Memphis, Nashville Union, Nashville, (Knowles Street,) Tenn.; Columbus, Pleasant Ridge, New Ruhamah, Tougaloo, Miss.; Athens, Florence and Sand Mountain, Ala. The next meeting will be at Memphis, the first Thursday of November, 1880.

Kentucky Conference.—This Association embraces the churches at Berea Big Hill, Cabin Creek, Hillsdale, Camp Nelson, McKee and Williamsburg, all in Kentucky. It was organized in September, 1871, and the next meeting will be at Camp Nelson, the last Saturday and Sunday in March, 1880.

Alabama Conference.—This Conference was organized April 6, 1876. It includes the following churches: Alabama Furnace, Anniston, Childersburg, Cove, Kymulga, Lawsonville, Marion, Mobile, Montgomery, Selma, Shelby Iron Works and Talladega, all in Alabama. The next meeting will be at Selma, on the last Saturday of March, 1880.

Georgia Conference.—In Georgia, the "Empire State of the South," a Congregational Conference now exists. It was formed at Macon, Dec. 12th, 1878. It includes the churches of Byron, Belmont, Atlanta 1st, Cypress Slash, East Savannah, Dorchester Midway, Louisville, Macon, Marietta, Miller's Station, Savannah, Woodville, Ga., and Charleston and Orangeburg, S. C. Part of the churches came from the Central South Conference, which formerly covered the States of Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama and Northern Georgia. The others were members of the now defunct South-east Georgia Conference. Three of these have white pastors from the North; the others have efficient colored ministers who have been trained in the schools of the A. M. A. The next meeting will be at Atlanta, Nov. 11th, 1880.

North Carolina Conference.—In the North Carolina Conference, which was organized at Raleigh, on May 2d, 1879, holding over a Sabbath, the five churches at Wilmington, Dudley, Beaufort, Raleigh and McLeansville, with their ministers, were thus united. It was a rich and glowing meeting. The several parts and methods of a regular Conference came together as naturally as though this were an experienced ecclesiastical body. The next meeting is to be at Dudley, beginning on the first Friday of May, 1880.

ORDINATIONS.

Beaufort, N. C.—By letters missive from the church at Beaufort, an Ecclesiastical Council, was convened at Raleigh, during the session of the Conference, to examine and ordain Mr. Michael Jerkins. The Council, being well satisfied with the examination, proceeded on Sabbath evening to the appropriate public services. Sermon and prayer of ordination by Supt. Roy; right hand of fellowship by Rev. David Peebles; charge by Rev. Geo. S. Smith. Rev. Dr. H. M. Tupper, President of Shaw University (Baptist), participated in the services.

Terrebonne, La.—The church at Terrebonne asked that Samuel Smith, who had for several years exercised his gifts as a preacher, and who was known to the brethren as a thoroughly good man, be ordained to the Gospel ministry.

The church at Lafourche Crossing presented the name of William Reed, who had supplied their pulpit for one year; and Thomas E. Hillson, of New Orleans, who was licensed two years ago, applied in his own name for ordination. The examination of the candidates was faithful and searching, and was well sustained. It was unanimously approved, and the public services of ordination took place on Saturday night, in the presence of a very large and deeply interested audience.

Shelby, Ala.—Examination and ordination services of Mr. J. D. Smith, Shelby, took place on Wednesday; examination conducted by Rev. O. W. Fay, the new pastor at Montgomery. Searching questions were put and grew more and more so as the candidate showed abundant ability to answer. An examination of two hours was well sustained. The leading examiner said he had never listened to a better examination, and had attended all the important ones about Chicago.

WOMAN'S WORK.

Nearly two years ago, Mrs. Zachary Eddy, of Detroit, interested a number of ladies in Eastern Michigan in woman's work, and the result was that these ladies became responsible for the support of a lady missionary, to be appointed by the American Missionary Association, to work exclusively among the Freedwomen, and the work then begun has been steadily sustained ever since by Miss Hattie Milton, at Memphis, Tenn. It is no longer an experiment; it is now a success.

Within a few months the ladies connected with the First and Second churches of Oberlin have united to support a lady missionary among the Freed-women. The money is already provided for, and the missionary on the field. And now the young ladies connected with the Congregational church in Waukegan, Ill., have organized a society for the same purpose, the aim being to work chiefly through the Sunday-school.

Atlanta, Ga.—The domestic condition of the colored families generally of the South is deplorable. They need influences and instruction that can best, and as I believe only, be carried to them by a woman missionary. The women, the mothers, the home-makers of this people, must be instructed and led to better things in their homes. They must be seen in their houses. With such homes as are common among them, it is well-nigh impossible for them to be Christians. Large families living in one room—you know how it is—comfort, cleanliness, modesty and religious devotion are almost impossible. Illiterate, the Bible must be read to them; ignorant of their moral duties as parents, they must be taught; strangers to domestic comforts and necessities, they must be made acquainted with them; superstitious and fanatical, they must be introduced to places and modes of a scriptural, instructive and reasonable worship. A thousand matters of great importance must be brought to their attention and kept before their minds until the proper impression is produced. This can only be done by a missionary moving about among them at their homes. This person should be a woman, because women are principally to be reached.

Miss M. E. Stevenson has been transferred from the position of a teacher to that of lady missionary for the city, representing the ladies of the two churches of Oberlin.

CHARLESTON, S. C.—Miss Wells, our missionary, is getting into the homes of the people, and we already see the good results of her work. She has organized a Sunday-school in the outskirts of the city, at which she has secured many more promises than attendants. Still she is working on, and will eventually succeed in her enterprise.

The outlook seems much more encouraging this year than last, for several reasons, one of the most important of which is, that the relief fund gives us access to many more families. Last Sabbath five new scholars came to Sunday-school, all from families which had been benefited by the relief.

MEMPHIS, TENN.—My field of work is already twice as large as last year. Members of the different churches welcome me into their houses and invite their neighbors to our cottage meetings, of which we have five every week in different neighborhoods. The pastor of the leading Methodist church here gave me the names of several members of his church who would be glad to have me hold mothers' meetings in their houses, which was a great help in my work, as it did much to remove the suspicion with which they have regarded me. Some who are not professed Christians have invited me to their houses, saying they hoped by so doing they might see the way more clearly. Many colored people look upon the epidemic of the past season as a judgment from God on account of their sins, and try to be more religious lest a worse evil befall them.
